Than those small forces ye were wont belay. Spens. sonn. xiv.

TO BELAY a rope. [Sea term.] To splice; to mend a rope, by laying one end over another.

TO BELCH. v. n. [bealcan, Saxon.]

1. To eject the wind from the stomach; to eruct.

The waters boil, and, belching from below,

Black sands as from a forceful engine throw. Dryden's Virg.

The symptoms are, a four smell in their faces, belchings, and distensions of the bowels. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To issue out by eructation.

A triple pile of plumes his crest adorn'd,

On which with belching flames Chimæra burn'd. Dryden.

TO BELCH. v. a. To throw out from the stomach; to eject from any hollow place. It is a word implying coarseness; hatefulness; or horror.

They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;

BEL

They eat us hungerly, and, when they're full,

They'll belch us. Shakespeare.

The bitterness of it I now belch from my heart. Sh. Cymbel.

Immediate in a flame,

But soon obscur'd with smoke, all heav'n appear'd;

From those deep-throated engines belch'd. Parad. Lost, b. vi.

The gates that now

Stood open wide, belching outrageous flame

Far into chaos, since the fiend pass'd through. Parad. Lost.

Rough as their savage lords who rang'd the wood,

And, fat with acorns, belch'd their windy food. Dryden.

There belcht the mingl'd streams of wine and blood,

And human flesh, his indigest food. Pope's Odyssey, b. ix.

When I an am'rous kiss design'd,

I belch'd an hurricane of wind.

Swift.

BELCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of eructation.

2. A cant term for malt liquor.

A sudden reformation would follow, among all sorts of people; porters would no longer be drunk with belch. Dennis.

BELDA'M. n. f. [belle dame, which, in old French, signified probably an old woman, as belle age, old age.]

1. An old woman; generally a term of contempt, marking the last degree of old age, with all its faults and miseries.

Then sing of secret things that came to pass,

When beldam nature in her cradle was.

2. A hag.

Why, how now, Hecat, you look angrily?—

—Have I not reason, beldams, as you are?

Saucy and overbold?

Shakesp. Macbeth.

The resty sieve wagg'd ne'er the more;

I wept for woe, the testy beldam swore.

Dryden.

TO BELE'AGUER. v. a. [beleggeren, Dutch.] To besiege; to block up a place; to lie before a town.

Their business, which they carry on, is the general concernment of the Trojan camp, then beleaguér'd by Turnus and the Latins. Dryden's Dufresnoy, Preface.

Against beleaguér'd heav'n the giants move:

Hills pil'd on hills, on mountains mountains lie,

To make their mad approaches to the sky. Dryden. Ovid.

BEL'AGURER. n. f. [from beleaguer.] One that besieges a place.

BEL'EMNITES. n. f. [from βέλος, a dart or arrow, because of its resemblance to the point of an arrow.] Arrowhead, or finger-stone, of a whitish and sometimes a gold colour.

BELFLOWER. n. f. [from bell and flower, because of the shape of its flower; in Latin campanula.] A plant.

The flower consists of one leaf, shaped like a bell, and, before it is blown, is of a pentagonal figure; and, when fully opened, cut into five segments at the top. The seed vessel is divided into three cells, each having a hole at the bottom, by which the seed is emitted. There is a vast number of the species of this plant. 1. The tallest pyramidal belflower. 2. The blue peach-leaved belflower. 3. The white peach-leaved belflower. 4. Garden belflower, with oblong leaves and flowers; commonly called Canterbury bells. 5. Canary belflower, with orrach leaves and a tuberose root. 6. Blue belflower, with edible roots, commonly called rampions. 7. Venus looking-glass belflower, &c. The first sort is commonly cultivated to adorn chimnies, halls, &c. in summer. It produces sometimes twelve branches, four or five feet high, with large beautiful flowers, almost the whole length of the stalks. The peach-leaved belflowers are very hardy, and may be planted in open beds or borders, where they will flower very strong. The Canterbury bells are biennial. The Canary belflower is one of the most beautiful plants of the greenhouse, yielding its flowers in December, January, and February. The rampion is propagated for its root, which was formerly in greater esteem in England than at present. The sorts of Venus looking-glass are annual plants. Millar.

BELFOUNDER. n. f. [from bell and found.] He whose trade it is to found or cast bells.

Those that make recorders know this, and likewise belfounders, in fitting the tune of their bells. Bacon's Natural Hist.

BEL'FRY. n. f. [Belfroy, in French, is a tower; which was perhaps the true word, till those, who knew not its original, corrupted it to belfry, because bells were in it.] The place where the bells are rung.

Fetch the leathern bucket that hangs in the belfry; that is curiously painted before, and will make a figure

Gay's What d' ye call it.

BELGA'RD. n. f. [belle egard, Fr.] A soft glance; a kind regard: an old word, now wholly disused.

Upon her eyelids many graces sat,

Under the shadow of her even brows,

Working belgards, and amorous retreats. Fairy Q. b. ii. c. iii.

TO BELI'E. v. a. [from be and lie.]

1. To counterfeit; to feign; to mimic.

Which durst, with horses hoofs that beat the ground,

And martial brags, belie the thunder's sound.

Dryden.

The shape of man, and imitated beast

The walk, the words, the gesture could supply,

The habit mimic, and the mien belie.

Dryden's Fables.

BEL

2. To give the lie to; to charge with falsehood.
Sure there is none but fears a future state;
And when the most obdurate swear they do not,
Their trembling hearts belie their boastful tongues. Dryden.
Paint, patches, jewels laid aside,
At night astronomers agree,
The evening has the day belied,
And Phyllis is some forty-three. Prior.
  3. To calumniate; to raise false reports of any man.
'Tis slander, whose breath
Rides on the posting winds, and doth belie
All corners of the world. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
Thou dost belie him, Piercy, thou beliefst him;
He never did encounter with Glendower. Shakesp. Hen. IV.
  4. To give a false representation of any thing.
Uncle, for heav'n's sake, comfortable words.—
—Should I do so, I should belie my thoughts. Shakesp. R. II.
Tuscan Valerius by force o'ercame,
And not belied his mighty father's name. Dryden's Æneid.
In the dispute whate'er I said,
My heart was by my tongue belied;
And in my looks you might have read,
How much I argu'd on your side. Prior.
- BELI'EF. n. f. [from believe.]
1. Credit given to something which we know not of ourselves, on account of the authority by which it is delivered.
Those comforts that shall never cease,
Future in hope, but present in belief. Wotton.
Faith is a firm belief of the whole word of God, of his gospel, commands, threats, and promises. Wake's Prep. for Death.
2. The theological virtue of faith, or firm confidence of the truths of religion.
No man can attain belief by the bare contemplation of heaven and earth; for that they neither are sufficient to give us as much as the least spark of light concerning the very principal mysteries of our faith. Hooker, b. v. §. 22.
3. Religion; the body of tenets held by the professors of faith.
In the heat of general persecution, whereunto christian belief was subject upon the first promulgation, it much confirmed the weaker minds, when relation was made how God had been glorified through the sufferings of martyrs. Hooker, b. v.
4. Persuasion; opinion.
He can, I know, but doubt to think he will;
Yet hope would fain subscribe, and tempts belief. Milton.
All treaties are grounded upon the belief, that states will be found in their honour and observance of treaties. Temple.
5. The thing believed; the object of belief.
Superstitious prophecies are not only the belief of fools, but the talk sometimes of wise men. Bacon.
6. Creed; a form containing the articles of faith.
- BELI'EVABLE. adj. [from believe.] Credible; that which may be credited or believed.
- To BELI'EVE. v. a. [gelyran, Saxon.]
1. To credit upon the authority of another, or from some other reason than our personal knowledge.
A proposition, which they are persuaded, but do not know to be true, it is not seeing, but believing. Locke.
Ten thousand things there are, which we believe merely upon the authority or credit of those who have spoken or written of them. Watts's Logick.
2. To put confidence in the veracity of any one.
The people may hear when I speak with thee, and believe thee for ever. Exodus, xix. 9.
- To BELIEVE. v. n.
1. To have a firm persuasion of any thing.
They may believe that the Lord God of their fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath appeared unto thee. Genesis, xlv.
2. To exercise the theological virtue of faith.
Now God be prais'd, that, to believing souls, Gives light in darkness, comfort in despair. Shakesp. H. VI.
For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. Romans, x. 10.
3. With the particle in; to hold as an object of faith.
Believe in the Lord your God, so shall you be established. 2 Chron. xx. 20.
4. With the particle upon; to trust; to place full confidence in; to rest upon with faith.
To them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name. John, i. 12.
5. I believe, is sometimes used as a way of slightly noting some want of certainty or exactness.
Though they are, I believe, as high as most steeples in England, yet a person, in his drink, fell down, without any other hurt than the breaking of an arm. Addison on Italy.
- BELI'EVER. n. f. [from believe.]
1. He that believes, or gives credit.
Discipline began to enter into conflict with churches, which, in extremity, had been believers of it. Hooker, Pref.
2. A professor of christianity.
Infidels themselves did discern in matters of life, when believers did well, when otherwise. Hooker, b. 2. §. 2.

BEL

- If he which writeth, do that which is forcible, how should he which readeth, be thought to do that, which, in itself, is of no force to work belief, and to save believers? Hooker, b. v.
Mysteries held by us have no power, pomp, or wealth, but have been maintained by the universal body of true believers, from the days of the apostles, and will be to the resurrection; neither will the gates of hell prevail against them. Swift.
- BELI'EVINGLY. adv. [from to believe.] After a believing manner.
- BELI'KE. adv. [from like, as by likelihood.]
1. Probably; likely; perhaps.
There came out of the same woods a horrible foul bear, which fearing, belike, while the lion was present, came furiously towards the place where I was. Sidney.
Belike fortune was afraid to lay her treasures, where they should be stained with so many perfections. Sidney.
Lord Angelo, belike, thinking me remiss in my office, awakens me with this unwonted putting on. Shakesp. M. for Meas.
Josephus affirmeth, that one of them remained even in his time; meaning, belike, some ruin or foundation thereof. Raleigh's History of the World.
2. It is sometimes used in a sense of irony; as, we are to suppose.
We think, belike, that he will accept what the meanest of them would disdain. Hooker, b. viii. §. 15.
God appointed the sea to one of them, and the land to the other, because they were so great, that the sea could not hold them both; for else, belike, if the sea had been large enough, we might have gone a fishing for elephants. Brerew. on Languages.
- BELI'VE. adv. [bilve, Sax. probably from bi and live, in the sense of vivacity; speed; quickness.] Speedily; quickly; a word out of use.
By that same way the direful dames do drive
Their mournful chariot, fill'd with rusty blood,
And down to Pluto's house are come belive. Fairy Q. b. i.
- BELL. n. f. [bel, Saxon; supposed, by Skinner, to come from pelvis, Lat. a basin. See BALL.]
1. A vessel, or hollow body of cast metal, formed to make a noise by the act of a clapper, hammer, or some other instrument striking against it. Bells are always in the towers of churches, to call the congregation together.
Your flock, assembled by the bell,
Encircled you, to hear, with rev'rence. Shakesp. Henry IV.
Get thee gone, and dig my grave thyself,
And bid the merry bells ring to thy ear,
That thou art crowned, not that I am dead. Shakesp. H. IV.
Four bells admit twenty four changes in ringing, and five bells one hundred and twenty. Holder's Elements of Speech.
He has no one necessary attention to any thing, but the bell, which calls to prayers twice a day. Addison. Spect. N° 264.
2. It is used for any thing in the form of a bell, as the cups of flowers.
Where the bee sucks, there suck I,
In a cowslip's bell I lie. Shakesp. Tempest.
The humming bees that hunt the golden dew,
In summer's heat on tops of lilies feed,
And creep within their bells to suck the balmy seed. Dryden.
3. A small hollow globe of metal perforated, and containing in it a solid ball; which, when it is shaken by bounding against the sides, gives a sound.
As the ox hath his yoke, the horse his curb, and the falcon his bells, so hath man his desire. Shakesp. As you like it.
4. To bear the bell. To be the first, from the wether, that carries a bell among the sheep, or the first horse of a drove that has bells on his collar.
5. The Italians have carried away the bell from all other nations, as may appear both by their books and works. Hakewell on Providence.
- To shake the bells.* A phrase, in Shakespeare, taken from the bells of a hawk.
Neither the king, nor he that loves him best,
The proudest he that holds up Lancaster, Dares stir a wing, if Warwick shakes his bells. Shakesp. H. VI.
- To BELL. v. n. [from the noun.] To grow in buds or flowers, in the form of a bell.
Hops, in the beginning of August, bell, and are sometimes ripe. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- BELL-FASHIONED. adj. [from bell and fashion.] Having the form of a bell.
The thorn apple rises with a strong round stalk, having large bell-fashioned flowers at the joints. Mortimer's Art of Husbandry.
- BELLE. n. f. [beau, belle, Fr.] A young lady.
What motive could compel
A well-bred lord t' assault a gentle belle;
O say, what stranger cause yet unexplor'd,
Could make a gentle belle reject a lord? Pope's R. of the Lock.
- BELLES LETTRES. n. f. [Fr.] Polite literature. It has no singular.
The exactness of the other, is to admit of something like discourse, especially in what regards the belles lettres. Tatler.
- BELLIBONE. n. f. [from bellus, beautiful, and bonus, good, Lat. belle & bonne, Fr.] A woman excelling both in beauty and goodness. A word now out of use.

TO BELLOW. v. n. [bellan, Saxon.]

1. To make a noise as a bull.

Jupiter became a bull, and bellow'd; the green Neptune
A ram, and bleated. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.

What bull dares bellow, or what sheep dares bleat

Within the lion's den?

Dryden's Spanish Friar.

But now, the husband of a herd must be

Thy mate, and bellowing sons thy progeny.

Dryden.

2. To make any violent outcry.

He fasten'd on my neck, and bellow'd out,

As he'd burst heav'n.

3. To vociferate; to clamour. In this sense, it is a word of contempt.

The dull fat captain, with a hound's deep throat,
Would bellow out a laugh in a base note. Dryd. Pers. sat. v.

This gentleman is accustomed to roar and bellow so terribly loud, that he frightens us. Tatler, N° 54.

4. To roar as the sea in a storm; or as the wind; to make any continued noise, that may cause terrour.

Till, at the last, he heard a dreadful sound,

Which through the wood loud bellowing did rebound.

Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 7. stanza. 7.

The rising rivers float the nether ground;

And rocks the bellowing voice of boiling seas rebound. Dryd.

BELLOWS. n. f. [bilg, Sax. perhaps it is corrupted from bellies, the wind being contained in the hollow, or belly. It has no singular; for we usually say a pair of bellows; but Dryden has used bellows as a singular.]

1. The instrument used to blow the fire.

Since sighs into my inward furnace turned,

For bellows serve to kindle more the fire.

Sidney.

One, with great bellows, gather'd filling air,

And, with forc'd wind, the fuel did inflame. Fairy Q. b. ii.

The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke,

While the lung'd bellows hissing fire provoke. Dryden's Juv.

The lungs, as bellows, supply a force of breath; and the aspera arteria is as the nose of bellows, to collect and convey the breath. Holder's Elements of Speech.

2. In the following passage, it is singular.

Thou neither, like a bellows, swell'st thy face,

As if thou wert to blow the burning mass

Of melting ore.

Dryden's Persius, sat. v.

BELLUINE. adj. [belluinus, Lat.] Beastly; belonging to a beast; savage; brutal.

If human actions were not to be judged, men would have no advantage over beasts. At this rate, the animal and belluine life would be the best. Atterbury's Preface to his Sermons.

BELLY. n. f. [balg, Dutch; bol, bola, Welch.]

1. That part of the human body which reaches from the breast to the thighs, containing the bowels.

The body's members

Rebell'd against the belly; thus accus'd it;—

That only like a gulf it did remain,

Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing

Like labour with the rest.

Shakefp. Coriolanus.

2. In beasts, it is used, in general, for that part of the body next the ground.

And the Lord said unto the serpent, upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life. Gen. iii. 14.

3. The womb; in this sense, it is commonly used ludicrously or familiarly.

I shall answer that better, than you can the getting up of the negro's belly: the Moor is with child by you.

Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.

The secret is grown too big for the pretence, like Mrs. Primly's big belly. Congreve's Way of the World.

4. That part of man which requires food, in opposition to the back, or that which demands cloaths.

They were content with a licentious and idle life, wherein they might fill their bellies by spoil, rather than by labour.

Sir J. Hayward.

Whose god is their belly.

Phil. iii. 19.

He that sows his grain upon marble, will have many a hungry belly before harvest. Arbutnot's History of J. Bull.

5. The part of any thing that swells out into a larger capacity.

Fortune sometimes turneth the handle of the bottle, which is easy to be taken hold of; and, after, the belly, which is hard to grasp. Bacon's Ornament. Ration.

An Irish harp hath the concave, or belly, not along the strings, but at the end of the strings. Bacon's Nat. History, N° 146.

6. Any place in which something is inclosed.

Out of the belly of hell cried I, and thou heardst my voice.

Jonah, ii. 2.

VOL. I.

But when I do, you shall petition it. Dryden's Indian Emp.

BELO'W. adv.

1. In the lower place; in the place nearest the center.

To men standing below on the ground, those that be on the top of Paul's, seem much less than they are, and cannot be known; but, to men above, those below seem nothing so much lessened, and may be known. Bacon's Nat. History, N° 205.

The upper regions of the air perceive the collection of the matter of the tempests and winds before the air here below; and therefore the obscuring of the smaller stars, is a sign of tempest following. Bacon's Natural History, N° 818.

His sultry heat infects the sky;

The ground below is parch'd, the heav'ns above us fry. Dryd.

This said, he led them up the mountain's brow,

And shews them all the shining fields below.

Dryden.

2. On earth; in opposition to heaven.

And let no tears from erring pity flow,

Smith, To the Memory of J. Philips.

The fairest child of Jove,

Below for ever fought, and blest'd above.

Prior.

3. In hell; in the regions of the dead; opposed to heaven and earth.

The gladsome ghosts in circling troops attend,

Delight to hover near; and long to know

What bus'ness brought him to the realms below. Dryd. Æn.

When suff'ring saints aloft in beams shall glow,

And prosp'rous traitors gnash their teeth below.

Tickell.

TO BELO'WT. v. a. [from be and lowt, a word of contempt.]

To treat with opprobrious language; to call names.

Sieur Gaulard, when he heard a gentleman report, that, at a supper, they had not only good cheer, but also savoury epigrams, and fine anagrams, returning home, rated and below'd his cook, as an ignorant scullion, that never dress'd him either epigrams or anagrams.

Camden's Remains.

BELSWA'GGER. n. f. A cant word for a whoremaster.

You are a charitable belswagger; my wife cried out fire, and you called out for engines.

Dryden's Spanish Friar.

BELT. n. f. [belt, Sax. balthaus, Lat.] A girdle; a cincture in which a sword, or some weapon, is commonly hung.

He cannot buckle his distemper'd cause

Within the belt of rule.

Shakefp. Macbeth.

Ajax flew himself with the sword given him by Hector, and Hector was dragged about the walls of Troy by the belt given him by Ajax.

South.

Then snatch'd the shining belt, with gold inlaid;

The belt Eurytion's artful hands had made. Dryden's Æneid.

BELWE'THER. n. f. [from bell and wether.] A sheep which leads the flock with a bell on his neck.

The fox will serve my sheep to gather,

And drive to follow after their belwether. Spens. Hub. Tale.

To offer to get your living by the copulation of cattle; to be a bawd to a belwether.

Shakefp. As you like it.

The flock of sheep, and belwether, thinking to break into another's pasture, and being to pass over another bridge, just-led till both fell into the ditch.

Howel's England's Tears.

TO BELY'. See BELIE.

TO BEMA'D. v. a. [from be and mad.] To make mad; to turn the brain.

Making just report

Of how unnatural and bemadding sorrow,

The king hath cause to plain.

Shakefp. King Lear.

TO BEMI'RE. v. a. [from be and mire.] To drag, or encumber in the mire; to soil by passing through dirty places.

Away they rode in homely fort,

Their journey long, their money short,

The loving couple well bemir'd;

The horse and both the riders tir'd.

Swift.

TO BEMO'AN. v. a. [from to moan.] To lament; to bewail;
to express sorrow for.

B E N

He falls, he fills the house with heavy groans, Implores their pity, and his pain bemoans. Dryden's Æneid.
The gods themselves the ruin'd seats bemoan,
And blame the mischiefs that themselves have done.

Addison's Remarks on Italy.

BEMO'ANER. n. f. [from the verb.] A lamenter; the person that laments.

TO BEMO'IL. v. a. [be and moil, from mouiller, Fr.] To bedraggled; to bemire; to encumber with dirt and mire.

Thou shouldst have heard in how miry a place, how she was

TO BEMO'NSTER. v. a. [from be and monster.] To make monstrous.

Thou chang'd, and self-converted thing! for shame,

Bemonster not thy feature.

Shakefp. King Lear.

BEMU'SED. adj. [from to muse.] Overcome with musing;
dreaming: a word of contempt.

Is there a parson much bemus'd in beer,

A maudlin poetess, a rhiming peer?

Pope's Epistles.

BEN. See BEHEN.

BENCH. n. f. [benc, Sax. banc, Fr.]

1. A seat, distinguished from a stool by its greater length.

The seats and benches shone of ivory,

An hundred nymphs sat side by side about. Spens. Vis. of Bellay.

All Rome is pleas'd, when Statius will rehearse,

And longing crouds expect the promis'd verse;

His lofty numbers, with so great a gust,

They hear, and swallow with such eager lust:

But while the common suffrage crown'd his cause,

And broke the benches with their loud applause,

His muse had starv'd, had not a piece unread,

And by a player bought, supply'd her bread. Dryd. Juvenal.

2. A seat of justice; the seat where judges sit.

A son set your decrees at naught:

To pluck down justice from your awful bench;

To trip the course of law, and blunt the sword

That guards the peace and safety of your person.

Shakefp. Henry IV. p. ii.

Cyriac, whose grandfire on the royal bench

Of British Themis, with no mean applause,

Pronounc'd, and in his volumes taught our laws,

Which others at their bar so often wrench.

Milton.

3. The persons sitting on a bench; as, the whole bench voted the same.

Fools to popular praise aspire,

Of publick speeches, which worse fools admire;

While, from both benches, with redoubl'd sounds,

Th' applause of lords and commoners abounds. Dryd. Virg.

TO BENCH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with benches.

'Twas bench'd with turf, and, goodly to be seen,

The thick young grass arose in fresher green. Dryden's Fab.

2. To seat upon a bench.

His cupbearer, whom I from meaner form

Have bench'd, and rear'd to worship. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.

BENCHER. n. f. [from bench.] Those gentlemen of the inns of court are called benchers, who have been readers; they being admitted to plead within the bar, are also called inner barristers.

The benchers, being the seniors of the house, are intrusted with its government and direction, and out of them is a treasurer yearly chosen.

Blount. Chambers.

I was taking a walk in the gardens of Lincoln's-Inn, a favour that is indulged me by several benchers, who are grown old with me.

Tatler, N° 100.

TO BEND. v. a. pret. bended, or bent; part. pass. bended, or bent.
[bendan, Saxon; bander, Fr. as Skinner thinks, from pandare, Lat.]

1. To make crooked; to crook; to inflect.

The rainbow compasseth the heaven with a glorious circle, and the hands of the Most High hath bended it. Ecclus. xliii. 12.

They bend their bows, they whirl their slings around:

Heaps of spent arrows fall, and strew the ground;

And helms, and shields, and rattling arms resound.

Dryden's Æneid.

2. To direct to a certain point.

Octavius, and Mark Anthony,

Came down upon us with a mighty power,

Bending their expedition tow'rd Philippi. Shakefp. J. Csar.

Why dost thou bend thy eyes upon the earth,

And start so often, when thou sitt'st alone.

Shakefp.

Your gracious eyes upon this labour bend.

Fairfax, b. i.

To that sweet region was our voyage bent,

When winds, and ev'ry warring element,

Disturb'd our course.

Dryden's Virgil.

Then, with a rushing sound, th' assembly bend

Diverse their steps: the rival rout ascend

The royal dome.

Pope's Odyssey, b. ii. l. 295.

3. To apply.

Men will not bend their wits to examine, whether things, wherewith they have been accustomed, be good or evil. Hoo. er.

He is within, with two right reverend fathers,

Divinely bent to meditation.

Shakefp. Richard III.

When

B E N

When he fell into the gout, he was no longer able to bend his mind or thoughts to any publick business. Temple.

4. To put any thing in order for use; a metaphor taken from bending the bow.

I'm settled, and bend up

Each corporal agent to this terrible feat. Shakesp. King Lear.

As a fowler was bending his net, a blackbird asked him what he was doing. L'Estrange, fab. xcvi.

5. To incline.

But when to mischief mortals bend their will,

How soon they find fit instruments of ill? Pope's R. of the L.

6. To subdue; to make submissive; as, war and famine will bend our enemies.

7. To bend the brow. To knit the brow; to frown.

Some have been seen to bite their pen, scratch their head, bend their brows, bite their lips, beat the board, and tear their paper. Camden's Remains.

TO BEND. v. n.

1. To be incurvated.

2. To lean or jut over.

There is a cliff, whose high and bending head
Looks fearfully on the confined deep. Shakesp.

Earth seems

Far stretch'd around, to meet the bending sphere. Thomson.

3. To resolve; to determine.

Not so, for once, indulg'd they sweep the main,

Deaf to the call, or, hearing, hear in vain;

But, bent on mischief, bear the waves before. Dryd. Fables.

While good, and anxious for his friend,

He's still severely bent against himself;

Renouncing sleep, and rest, and food, and ease. Addis. Cato.

A state of slavery, which they are bent upon with so much eagerness and obstinacy. Addison. Freeholder.

He is every where bent on instruction, and avoids all manner of digressions. Addison's Essay on the Georgicks.

4. To be submissive; to bow.

The sons of them that afflicted thee, shall come bending unto thee. Isaiah, lx. 14.

BEND. n. f. [from to bend.]

1. Flexure; incurvation.

'Tis true, this god did shake;

His coward lips did from their colour fly;

And that same eye, whose bend doth awe the world,

Did lose its lustre. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

2. The crooked timbers which make the ribs or sides of a ship.

Skinner.

3. With heralds. One of the eight honourable ordinaries, containing a fifth when uncharged; but when charged, a third part of the escutcheon. It is made by two lines, drawn thwartways from the dexter chief to the sinister base point. Harris.

BE'NDER. n. f. [from to bend.]

1. The person who bends.

2. The instrument with which any thing is bent.

These bows, being somewhat like the long bows in use amongst us, were bent only by a man's immediate strength, without the help of any bender, or rack, that are used to others. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

BE'NDWITH. n. f. An herb. Diët.

BENE'APED. adj. [from neap.] A ship is said to be beneaped, when the water does not flow high enough to bring her off the ground, over a bar, or out of a dock. Diët.

BENE'ATH. prep. [beneop, Sax. beneden, Dutch.]

1. Under; lower in place.

Their woolly fleeces, as the rites requir'd,

He laid beneath him, and to rest retir'd. Dryden, Æn. vii.

Ages to come might Ormond's picture know;

And palms for thee beneath his laurels grow. Prior.

2. Under, as overborn or overwhelmed by some pressure.

Our country sinks beneath the yoke;

It weeps, it bleeds, and each new day a gash

Is added to her wounds. Shakesp. Macbeth.

And oft on rocks their tender wings they tear,

And sink beneath the burdens which they bear. Dryden's Virg.

3. Lower in rank, excellence, or dignity.

We have reason then to be persuaded, that there are far more species of creatures above us, than there are beneath. Locke.

4. Unworthy of; unbecoming; not equal to.

He will do nothing that is beneath his high station, nor omit doing any thing which becomes it. Atterbury.

BENE'ATH. adv.

1. In a lower place; under.

I destroyed the Amorite before them; I destroyed his fruits from above, and his roots from beneath. Amos, ii. 9.

The earth which you take from beneath, will be barren and unfruitful. Mortimer's Art of Husbandry.

2. Below, as opposed to heaven.

Any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath. Exodus, xx. 4.

BE'NEDICT. adj. [benedictus, Lat.] Having mild and salubrious qualities: an old physical term.

B E N

It is not a small thing won in physick, if you can make rhubarb, and other medicines that are benedict, as strong purgers as those that are not without some malignity. Bacon's N. Hist.

BENEDICTION. n. f. [benedictio, Lat.]

1. Blessing; a decretory pronounciation of happiness.

A sov'reign shame so bows him; his unkindness,

That stript her from his benediction, turn'd her

To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights

To his doghearted daughters. Shakesp. King Lear.

From him will raise

A mighty nation; and upon him show'r

His benediction so, that, in his seed,

All nations shall be blest. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii. l. 125.

2. The advantage conferred by blessing.

Prosperity is the blessing of the Old Testament; adversity is the blessing of the New; which carrieth the greater benediction, and the clearer revelation of God's favour. Bacon's Essays.

3. Acknowledgments for blessings received; thanks.

Could he less expect

Than glory and benediction, that is, thanks? Parad. Reg.

Such ingenious and industrious persons are delighted in searching out natural rarities; reflecting upon the Creator of them his due praises and benedictions. Ray on the Creation.

4. The form of instituting an abbot.

What consecration is to a bishop, that benediction is to an abbot; but in a different way: for a bishop is not properly such, till consecration; but an abbot, being elected and confirmed, is properly such before benediction. Ayliffe's Parergon.

BENEFAC'TION. n. f. [from benefacio, Lat.]

1. The act of conferring a benefit.

2. The benefit conferred; which is the more usual sense.

One part of the benefactions, was the expression of a generous and grateful mind. Atterbury.

BENEFAC'TOR. n. f. [from benefacio, Lat.] He that confers a benefit; frequently he that contributes to some publick charity.

Then swell with pride, and must be titled gods,

Great benefactors of mankind, deliverers,

Worshipp'd with temple, priest, and sacrifice.

Milton's Paradise Regained, b. iii. l. 82.

From that preface he took his hint, though he had the baseness not to acknowledge his benefactor. Dryden's Fables, Pref.

I cannot but look upon the writer as my benefactor, if he conveys to me an improvement of my understanding. Addison. Freeholder, N° 40.

Whoever makes ill returns to his benefactor, must needs be a common enemy to mankind. Swift's Gulliver's Travels.

BENEFAC'TRESS. n. f. [from benefactor.] A woman who confers a benefit.

BE'NEFICE. n. f. [from beneficium, Lat.] Advantage conferred on another. This word is generally taken for all ecclesiastical livings, be they dignities or others. Cowel.

And of the priest estoons 'gan to enquire,

How to a benefice he might aspire. Spenser's Hubb. Tale.

Much to himself he thought, but little spoke,

And, undpriv'd, his benefice forfook. Dryden's Fables.

BE'NEFICED. adj. [from benefice.] Possessed of a benefice, or church preferment.

The usual rate between the beneficed man and the religious person, was one moiety of the benefice. Ayliffe's Parergon.

BENEFICENCE. n. f. [from beneficent.] The practice of doing good; active goodness.

You could not extend your beneficence to so many persons; yet you have lost as few days as that excellent emperour.

Dryden's Juvenal, Dedicat.

Love and charity extends our beneficence to the miseries of our brethren. Rogers.

BENEFICENT. adj. [from beneficus, beneficentior, Lat.] Kind; doing good. It differs from benign, as the act from the disposition; beneficence being kindness, or benignity, exerted in action.

Such a creature could not have his origination from any less than the most wise and beneficent being, the great God.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

But Phœbus, thou, to man beneficent,

Delight'ft in building cities. Prior.

BENEFICIAL. adj. [from beneficium, Lat.]

1. Advantageous; conferring benefits; profitable; useful; with to before the person benefited.

Not that any thing is made to be beneficial to him, but all things for him, to shew beneficence and grace in them. Hooker, b. i. § 8.

This supposition grants the opinion to conduce to order in the world, and consequently to be very beneficial to mankind. Tillotson, sermon i.

The war, which would have been most beneficial to us, and destructive to the enemy, was neglected. Swift.

Are the present revolutions in circular orbs, more beneficial than the other would be? Bentley's Sermons.

2. Helpful; medicinal.

In the first access of such a disease, any deobstruent, without much acrimony, is beneficial. Arbuthnot on Diet.

BENEFICIAL. n. f. An old word for a benefice.

B E N

For that the groundwork is, and end of all,
How to obtain a beneficial. Spenser's Hubberd's Tale.
BENEFICIALLY. adv. [from beneficial.] Advantageously; profitably; helpfully.
BENEFICIALNESS. n. f. [from beneficial.] Usefulness; profit; helpfulness.

Though the knowledge of these objects be commendable for their contentation and curiosity, yet they do not commend their knowledge to us, upon the account of their usefulness and beneficialness. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

BENEFICIARY. adj. [from benefice.] Holding something in subordination to another; having a dependent and secondary possession, without sovereign power.

The duke of Parma was tempted by no less promise, than to be made a feudatory, or beneficiary king of England, under the feignory in chief of the pope. Bacon's War with Spain.

BENEFICIARY. n. f. He that is in possession of a benefice.

A benefice is either said to be a benefice with the cure of souls, or otherwise. In the first case, if it be annexed to another benefice, the beneficiary is obliged to serve the parish church in his own proper person. Ayliffe's Parergon.

BENEFIT. n. f. [beneficium, Lat.]

1. A kindness; a favour conferred; an act of love.

When noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits.

As many as offer'd life,
Neglect not, and the benefit embrace
By faith, not void of works. Paradise Lost, b. xii. l. 426.
2. Advantage; profit; use.

The creature abateth his strength for the benefit of such as put their trust in thee. Wisdom, xvi. 24.
3. In law.

Benefit of clergy is an ancient liberty of the church, when a priest, or one within orders, is arraigned of felony before a secular judge, he may pray his clergy; that is, pray to be delivered to his ordinary, to purge himself of the offence objected to him: and this might be done in case of murder. The ancient law, in this point of clergy, is much altered; for clerks are no more delivered to their ordinaries to be purged, but now every man, though not within orders, is put to read at the bar, being found guilty, and convicted of such felony as this benefit is granted for; and so burnt in the hand, and set free for the first time, if the ordinary's commissioner, or deputy, standing by, do say, Legit ut clericus; or, otherwise, suffereth death for his transgression. Cowel.

TO BENEFIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To do good to; to advantage.

What course I mean to hold,
Shall nothing benefit your knowledge. Shakesp. Wint. Tale.
He was so far from benefiting trade, that he did it a great injury, and brought Rome in danger of a famine. Arbuthnot.

TO BENEFIT. v. n. To gain advantage.

To tell you therefore what I have benefited herein, among old renowned authors, I shall spare. Milton on Education.

BENE'MPT. adj. [See NEMPT.] Appointed; marked out; an obsolete word.

Much greater gifts for Guerdon thou shalt gain,
Than kid or collet, which I thee benempt;
Then up, I say. Spenser's Pastorals.

TO BENET. v. a. [from net.] To ensnare; to surround as with toils.

Being thus benetted round with villains,
Ere I could mark the prologue, to my bane,
They had begun the play. Shakesp. Hamlet.

BENEVOLENCE. n. f. [benevolentia, Lat.]

1. Disposition to do good; kindness; charity; good will.
Grasp the whole worlds of reason, life, and sense,
In one close system of benevolence. Pope's Essay on Man.
2. The good done; the charity given.
3. A kind of tax.

This tax, called a benevolence, was devised by Edward IV. for which he sustained much envy. It was abolished by Richard III. Bacon's Henry VII.

BENEVOLENT. adj. [benevolens, benevolentia, Lat.] Kind; having good will, or kind inclinations.

Thou good old man, benevolent as wise. Pope's Odyssey.

BENJAMIN. n. f. A gum. See BENZOIN.

TO BENIGHT. v. a. [from night.]

1. To involve in darkness; to embarrass by want of light; to bring on night.

He that has light within his own breast,
May sit i' th' centre, and enjoy bright day;
But he that hides a dark soul, and foul thoughts,
Benighted walks under the mid-day sun;
Himself is his own dungeon. Milton.

Those bright stars that did adorn our hemisphere, as those dark shades that did benight it, vanish. Boyle.

But what so long in vain, and yet unknown
By poor mankind's benighted wit, is fought,
Shall in this age to Britain first be shown. Dryd. Ann. Mir.

A storm begins, the raging waves run high,
The clouds look heavy, and benight the sky. Garth's Ovid.

The miserable race of men, that live
Benighted half the year, benumm'd with frosts
Under the polar Bear. Philips.

2. To surprise with the coming on of night.

Being benighted, the sight of a candle I saw a good way off, directed me to a young shepherd's house. Sidney, b. i.

Or some benighted angel, in his way,
Might ease his wings; and, seeing heav'n appear
In its best work of mercy, think it there. Dryden.

BENIGN. adj. [benignus, Lat. It is pronounced without the g, as if written benine; but the g is preserved in benignity.]

1. Kind; generous; liberal; actually good. See BENEFICENT.
This turn hath made amends! Thou hast fulfill'd

Thy words, Creator bounteous and benign!
Giver of all things fair. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. viii. l. 492.
So shall the world go on,

To good malignant, to bad men benign. Par. Lost, b. xii.
We owe more to heav'n than to the sword,
The wish'd return of so benign a lord. Waller.

What heaven bestows upon the earth, in kind influences and benign aspects, is paid it back again in sacrifice and adoration. South.

They who delight in the suffering of inferiour creatures, will not be very compassionate or benign. Locke.

Diff'rent are thy names,
As thy kind hand has founded many cities,
Or dealt benign thy various gifts to men. Prior.

2. Wholesome; not malignant.

These salts are of a benign mild nature, in healthy persons; but, in others, retain their original qualities, which they discover in cachexies. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

BENIGN Disease, is when all the usual symptoms appear in the small pox, or any acute disease, favourably, and without any irregularities, or unexpected changes. Quincy.

BENIGNESS. n. f. [from benign.] The same with benignity.

BENIGNITY. n. f. [from benign.]

1. Graciousness; goodness; actual kindness.

He which useth the benefit of any special benignity, may enjoy it with good conscience. Hooker, b. v. § 9.

The king was desirous to establish peace rather by benignity than blood. Hayward.

It is true, that his mercy will forgive offenders, or his benignity co-operate to their conversions. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Although he enjoys the good that is done him, he is unconcerned to value the benignity of him that does it. South.

2. Salubrity; wholesome quality; friendliness to vital nature.

Bones receive a quicker agglutination in sanguine than in cholerick bodies, by reason of the benignity of the serum, which sendeth out better matter for a callus. Wiseman's Surgery.

BENIGNLY. adv. [from benign.] Favourably; kindly; graciously.

'Tis amazement more than love,
Which her radiant eyes do move;
If less splendour wait on thine,
Yet they so benignly shine,
I would turn my dazzled sight
To behold their milder light. Waller.

Oh truly good, and truly great!
For glorious as he rose, benignly so he set. Prior.

BENISON. n. f. [benir, to bless; benissons, Fr.] Blessing; benediction.

We have no such daughter; nor shall ever see
That face of hers again; therefore, begone
Without our grace, our love, our benison. Shakesp. K. Lear.

Unmuffle, ye fair stars, and thou, fair moon,
That won't to love the traveller's benison. Milton.

BENNET. n. f. An herb; the same with avens, which see.

BENT. n. f. [from the verb to bend.]

4. Utmost power, as of a bent bow.

Then let thy love be younger than thyself,
Or thy affection cannot hold the bent. Shakesp. Tw. Night.
We both obey,

And here give up ourselves, in the full bent,
To lay our service freely at your feet. Shakesp. Hamlet.

5. Application of the mind ; strain of the mental powers.

The understanding should be brought to the knotty parts of knowledge, that try the strength of thought, and a full bent of the mind, by insensible degrees. Locke.

6. Inclination ; disposition towards something.

O who does know the bent of womens fantasy !
Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. iv. stanza. 24.

To your own bents dispose you ; you'll be found,
Be you beneath the sky. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

He knew the strong bent of the country towards the house of York. Bacon's Henry VII.

Soon inclin'd t' admit delight,

The bent of nature ! Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi. l. 597.

The golden age was first ; when man, yet new,
No rule but uncorrupted reason knew ;

And, with a native bent, did good pursue. Dryden. Ovid.

Let there be the same propensity and bent of will to religion, and there will be the same sedulity and indefatigable industry. South.

'Tis odds but the scale turns at last on nature's side, and the evidence of one or two senses gives way to the united bent and tendency of all the five. Atterbury.

7. Determination ; fixed purpose.

Their unbelief we may not impute unto insufficiency in the mean which is used, but to the wilful bent of their obstinate hearts against it. Hooker, b. v. § 22.

Yet we saw them forced to give way to the bent, and current humour of the people, in favour of their ancient and lawful government. Temple.

8. Turn of the temper, or disposition ; shape, or fashion, super- induced by art.

Not a courtier,
Although they wear their faces to the bent
Of the king's look, but hath a heart that is Glad at the thing they scowl at. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

Two of them hath the very bent of honour.
Shakesp. Much ado about Nothing.

Then thy streight rule set virtue in my sight,
The crooked line reforming by the right ;
My reason took the bent of thy command,
Was form'd and polish'd by thy skilful hand. Dryden's Pers.

9. Tendency ; flexion ; particular direction.

The exercising the understanding, in the several ways of reasoning, teacheth the mind suppleness, to apply itself more dexterously to bents and turns of the matter, in all its researches. Locke.

10. A stalk of grass, called bent-grass.

His spear, a bent both stiff and strong,
And well near of two inches long ;
The pile was of a horse-fly's tongue,
Whose sharpness naught reversed. Drayt. Nymphid.

Then the flowers of the vines ; it is a little dust, like the dust of a bent, which grows upon the cluster, in the first coming forth. Bacon's Essays.

June is drawn in a mantle of dark grass-green, upon his head a garland of bents, kingcups, and maidenhair. Peacham on Drawing.

BE'NTING Time. [from bent.] The time when pigeons feed on bents before peas are ripe.

Bare benting times, and moulting months, may come,
When, lagging late, they cannot reach their home. Dryden's Hind and Panther.

TO BENU'M. v. a. [benumen, Saxon.]

1. To make torpid ; to take away the sensation and use of any part by cold, or by some obstruction.

So stings a snake that to the fire is brought,
Which harmless lay with cold benumm'd before. Fairfax, b. ii. stanza. 85.

The winds blow moist and keen, which bids us seek
Some better shroud, some better warmth, to cherish
Our limbs benumm'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 1069.

My sinews slacken, and an icy stiffness
Benums my blood. Denham's Sophy.

It seizes upon the vitals, and benums the senses ; and where there is no sense, there can be no pain. South.

Will they be the less dangerous, when warmth shall bring them to themselves, because they were once frozen and benum- med with cold ? L'Estrange, fab. ix.

2. To stupify.

These accents were her last : the creeping death
Benumm'd her senses first, then stopp'd her breath. Dryden.

BENZO'IN. n. f. A medicinal kind of resin imported from the East Indies, and vulgarly called benjamin. It is procured by making an incision in a tree, whose leaves resemble those of the lemon tree. It is of a yellowish colour, an agreeable scent, it melts easily, and is of three sorts. The first, which is esteemed the best, comes from Siam, and is called amygdaloides, being interspersed with white spots, resembling broken almonds.
The second is black, and very odoriferous ; it drops from young trees, and comes from Sumatra. The third is also black, but less odoriferous, and is found in Java and Sumatra.
Trevoux. Chambers.

The liquor we have distilled from benzoin, is subject to frequent vicissitudes of fluidity and firmness. Boyle.

BENZOIN Tree. See BENJAMIN Tree.

TO BEPA'INT: v. a. [from paint.] To cover with paint.

Thou know'st, the mask of night is on my face ;
Else would a maiden blush bepaint my cheek. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

TO BEPI'NCH. v. a. [from pinch.] To mark with pinches.

In their sides, arms, shoulders, all bepincht,
Ran thick the weals, red with blood, ready to start out. Chapman's Iliad.

TO BEPI'SS. v. a. [from piss.] To wet with urine.

One caused, at a feast, a bagpipe to be played, which made the knight bepiss himself, to the great diversion of all then present, as well as confusion of himself. Derham's Physico-Theol.

TO BEQUE'ATH. v. a. [cpip, Sax. a will.] To leave by will to another.

She had never been disinherited of that goodly portion, which nature had so liberally bequeathed to her. Sidney.

Let's choose executors, and talk of wills ;
And yet not so—for what can we bequeath,
Save our deposed bodies to the ground ? Shakesp. Richard II.
My father bequeath'd me by will but a poor thousand crowns. Shakesp. As you like it.

Methinks this age seems resolved to bequeath posterity somewhat to remember it. Glanville's Scepiss, c. 21.

For you, whom best I love and value most,
But to your service I bequeath my ghost. Dryden's Fables.

BEQUE'ATHMENT. n. f. [from bequeath.] A legacy. Dict.

BEQU'EST. n. f. [from bequeath.] Something left by will ; a legacy.

He claimed the crown to himself ; pretending an adoption, or bequest, of the kingdom unto him by the Confessor. Hale's Common Law of England.

TO BERA'TTLE. v. a. [from rattle.] To rattle off ; to make a noise at in contempt.

These are now the fashion, and so berattle the common stage, so they call them, that many, wearing rapiers, are afraid of goosequills, and dare scarce come thither. Shakesp. Hamlet.

BE'RBERRY. n. f. [berberis, sometimes written barberry, which see.] A berry of a sharp taste, used for pickles.

Some never ripen to be sweet, as tamarinds, berberries, crabs, fioes, &c. Bacon's Natural History, No 644.

TO BERE'AVE. v. n. preter. I bereaved, or bereft. [beneopian, Saxon.]

1. To strip of ; to deprive of. It has generally the particle of before the thing taken away.

Madam, you have bereft me of all words,
Only my blood speaks to you in my veins. Shakesp. M. of V.
That when thou com'st to kneel at Henry's feet,
Thou may'st bereave him of his wits with wonder. Shakesp. Henry VI. p. i.

There was never a prince bereaved of his dependences by his council, except there hath been either an overgreatness in one counsellor. Bacon's Essays.

The sacred priests with ready knives bereave
The beasts of life. Dryden's Æneid.

To deprive us of metals, is to make us mere savages ; it is to bereave us of all arts and sciences, of history and letters, nay of revealed religion too, that inestimable favour of heaven. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Sometimes it is used without of.

Bereave me not,
Whereon I live ! thy gentle looks, thy aid,
Thy counsel, in this uttermost distress. Parad. Lost, b. x.

3. To take away from.

All your interest in those territories
Is utterly bereft you, all is lost. Shakesp. Henry VI. p. ii.

BERE'AVEMENT. n. f. [from bereave.] Deprivation. Dict.

BERE'FT. part. pass. of bereave.

The chief of either side, bereft of life ;

Or yielded to the foe, concludes the strife. Dryden's Fab.

BERG. See BURROW.

BERGAMOT. n. f. [bergamotte, Fr.]

1. A sort of pear, commonly called burgamot. See PEAR.

2. A sort of essence, or perfume, drawn from a fruit produced by ingrafting a lemon tree on a bergamot pear stock.

3. A sort of snuff, which is only clean tobacco, with a little of the essence rubbed into it.

BERGMASTER. n. f. [from berg, Sax. and master.] The bailiff, or chief officer, among the Derbyshire miners.

B E S

BE'RGMO'. n. f. [of berg, a mountain, and mote, a meeting, Saxon.] A court held upon a hill for deciding controversies among the Derbyshire miners. Blount.

TO BERHY'ME. v. a. [from rhyme.] To celebrate in rhyme, or verses: a word of contempt.

Now is he for the numbers that Petrarch flow'd in: Laura to his lady was but a kitchen wench; marry, she had a better love to berhyme her. Shakefp. Romeo and Juliet.

I sought no homage from the race that write;

I kept, like Asian monarchs, from their fight:

Poems I heeded, now berhymed so long,

No more than thou, great George! a birthday song. Pope.

BERLI'N. n. f. [from Berlin, the city where they were first made.] A coach of a particular form.

Beware of Latin authors all!

Nor think your verses sterling,

Though with a golden pen you scrawl,

And scribble in a berlin. Swift.

BERME. n. f. [Fr. In fortification.] A space of ground three, four, or five feet wide, left without between the foot of the rampart and the side of the mote, to prevent the earth from falling down into the mote; and sometimes it is palisadoed. Harris.

TO BERO'E. v. a. [from rob.] To rob; to plunder; to wrong any, by taking away something from him by stealth or violence.

She said, ah dearest lord! what evil star

On you hath frown'd, and pour'd his influence bad,

That of yourself you thus berobbed are. Fairy Queen, b. viii.

BERRY. n. f. [from ber, Sax. from beran, to bear.] Any small fruit, with many seeds or small stones.

She smote the ground, the which straight forth did yield

A fruitful olive tree, with berries spread,

That all the gods admir'd. Spens. Muirpotmos.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,

And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,

Neighbour'd by fruit of basest quality. Shakefp. Henry V.

TO BE'RRY. v. n. [from the noun.] To bear berries.

BE'RRY-BEARING Cedar. [cedrus baccifera.]

The leaves are squamose, somewhat like those of the cypress. The katkins, or male flowers, are produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The fruit is a berry, inclosing three hard seeds in each. The species are, 1. The yellow berry-bearing cedar. 2. The Phœnician cedar. These trees are propagated by sowing their berries, which are brought from the Straights, in boxes of light sandy earth; but they are at present very rare, and only to be found in some curious old collections. The wood is of great use in the Levant, is large timber, and may be thought the shittim-wood mentioned in the Scripture, of which many of the ornaments to the famous temple of Solomon were made. It is accounted excellent for carving, and esteemed equal almost to any sort of timber for its durability. Millar.

BE'RRY-BEARING Orach. See MULBERRY BLIGHT.

BERT, is the same with our bright; in the Latin, illustris and clarus. So Ecbert, eternally famous, or bright; Sigbert, famous conquerour. And she who was termed by the Germans Bertha, was by the Greeks called Eudoxia, as is observed by Lintprandus. Of the same sort were these, Phædrus, Epibanius, Photius, Lampridius, Fulgentius, Illustris. Gibson's Camden.

BERTH. n. f. [with sailors.] See BIRTH.

BE'RRAM. n. f. [pyrethrum, Lat.] A sort of herb, called also bastard pellitory.

BE'RYL. n. f. [beryllus, Lat.] A kind of precious stone.

May thy billows roul ashore

The beryl and the golden ore. Milton.

The beryl of our lapidaries is only a fine sort of cornelian, of a more deep bright red, sometimes with a cast of yellow, and more transparent than the common cornelian.

Woodward's Method of Fossils.

TO BESCRE'EN. v. a. [from screen.] To cover with a screen; to shelter; to conceal.

What man art thou, that thus bescree'd in night,

So stumblest on my counsel? Shakefp. Romeo and Juliet.

TO BESE'CH. v. a. pret. I befought, I have befought. [from re-can, Sax. versaken, Dutch.]

1. To entreat; to supplicate; to implore; sometimes before a person.

I befeech you, Sir, pardon me; it is only a letter from my brother, that I have not all over-read. Shakefp. King Lear.

I befeech thee for my son Onesimus, whom I have begotten in my bonds. Philemon, 10.

I, in the anguish of my heart, befeech you

To quit the dreadful purpose of your soul. Addison's Cato.

2. To beg; to ask; before a thing.

But Eve fell humble, and befought

His peace, and thus proceeded in her plaint. Par. Lost, b. x.

Before I come to them, I befeech your patience, whilst I speak something to ourselves here present. Sprat.

TO BESE'EM. v. n. [beziemen, Dutch.] To become; to be fit; to be decent for.

What form of speech, or behaviour, beseemeth us in our prayers to Almighty God?

B E S

Hooker, b. v. § 34.

This oversight

Beseems thee not, in whom such virtues spring.

Fairfax, b. i. stanza. 78.

Verona's ancient citizens

Cast by their brave beseeming ornaments.

Shakefp. Romeo and Juliet.

What thoughts he had, beseems not me to say;

Though some surmise he went to fast and pray. Dryden.

BESE'EN. particip. [from bese. Skinner. This word I have only found in Spenser.] Adapted; adjusted; becoming.

Forth came that ancient lord and aged queen,

Armed in antique robes down to the ground,

TO BESE'T. v. a. pret. I befet; I have befet. [bezetan, Sax.]

1. To besiege; to hem in; to inclose, as with a siege.

Follow him that's fled;

The thicket is befet, he cannot 'scape. Shakefp. T. G. of Ver.

Now, Cæsar, let thy troops befet our gates,

And barr each avenue——

Addison's Cato.

I know thou look'st on me, as on a wretch

Befet with ills, and cover'd with misfortunes. Addis. Cato.

2. To embarrass; to perplex; to entangle without any means of escape.

Now, daughter Sylvia, you are hard befet.

Shakefp. Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Thus Adam, fore befet, reply'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

Sure, or I read her visage much amiss,

Or grief befets her hard.

Rowe's Jane Shore.

We be in this world befet with fundry uneasinesses, distracted with different desires. Locke.

3. To waylay; to surround.

Draw forth thy weapon; we're befet with thieves;

Rescue thy mistress.

Shakefp. Taming of the Shrew.

The only righteous in a world perverse,

And therefore hated, therefore so befet

With foes, for daring single to be just. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

True fortitude I take to be the quiet possession of a man's self, and an undisturbed doing his duty, whatever evil befets, or danger lies in his way. Locke.

4. To fall upon; to harass.

But they him spying, both with greedy force

At once upon him ran, and him befet

With strokes of mortal steel. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. ii.

TO BESHRE'W. v. a. [The original of this word is somewhat obscure; as it evidently implies to wish ill, some derive it from beshryen, Germ. to enchant. Topsel, in his Book of Animals, deduces it from the shrew mouse, an animal, says he, so poisonous, that its bite is a severe curse. A shrew likewise signifies a scolding woman; but its origin is not known.]

1. To wish a curse to.

Nay, quoth the cock; but I beshrew us both,

If I believe a faint upon his oath.

Dryden's Fables.

2. To happen ill to.

Beshrew thee, cousin, which did'st lead me forth

Of that sweet way I was in to despair. Shakefp. Richard II.

Now much beshrew my manners, and my pride,

If Hermia meant to say Lysander lied. Shakefp.

BESI'DE. } prep. [from be and side.]

BESI'DES. }

1. At the side of another; near.

Beside the hearse a fruitful palmtree grows,

Ennobled since by this great funeral. Fairfax, b. iii. st. 72.

He caus'd me to sit down beside him.

Bacon's N. Atlantis.

At his right hand, Victory

Sat eagle-wing'd: beside him hung his bow. Par. Lost, b. vi.

Fair Lavinia fled the fire

Before the gods, and stood beside her fire. Dryden's Æneid.

Fair is the kingcup that in meadow blows;

Fair is the daisy that beside her grows.

Gay's Pastorals.

Now under hanging mountains,

Beside the falls of fountains,

Unheard, unknown,

He makes his moan.

Pope's St. Cæcilia.

2. Over and above.

Doubtless, in man there is a nature found,

Beside the senses, and above them far.

Sir J. Davies.

In brutes, besides the exercise of sensitive perception and imagination, there are lodged instincts antecedent to their imaginative faculty.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

We may be sure there were great numbers of wise and learned men, beside those whose names are in the christian records, who took care to examine our Saviour's history.

Addison on the Christian Religion.

Precepts of morality, besides the natural corruption of our tempers, are abstracted from ideas of sense.

Addison's Essay on the Georgicks.

3. Not according to, though not contrary; as we say, some things are beside nature, some are contrary to nature.

The Stoicks did hold a necessary connexion of causes; but they believed, that God doth act præter & contra naturam, besides

To say a thing is a chance, as it relates to second causes, signifies no more, than that there are some events beside the knowledge, purpose, expectation, and power of second causes. South.
Providence often disposes of things by a method beside, and above the discoveries of man's reason. South.

It is beside my present business to enlarge upon this speculation. Locke.

4. Out of; in a state of deviating from.

You are too wilful blame,

And, since your coming here, have done

Enough to put him quite besides his patience. Shakefp. H. IV.

Of vagabonds we say,

That they are ne'er beside their way. Hudibras, cant. i.

These may serve as landmarks, to shew what lies in the direct way of truth, or is quite besides it. Locke.

5. Before a reciprocal pronoun; out of; as, beside himself; out of the order of rational beings; out of his wits.

They be carried besides themselves, to whom the dignity of publick prayer doth not discover somewhat more fitness in men of gravity, than in children. Hooker, b. ii. § 31.

Only be patient, till we have appeas'd

The multitude, beside themselves with fear. Shakefp. J. Cæs.

Festus said with a loud voice, Paul, thou art beside thyself: much learning doth make thee mad. Acts, xxvi. 24.

BESIDE. } adv.

BESIDES. }

1. More than that; over and above.

If Cassio do remain,

He hath a daily beauty in his life,

That makes me ugly; and, besides, the Moor

May unfold me to him; there stand I in peril. Othello.

Besides, you know not, while you here attend,

Th' unworthy fate of your unhappy friend. Dryden's Æn.

That man that doth not know those things, which are of necessity for him to know, is but an ignorant man, whatever he may know besides. Tillotson, serm. i.

Some wondered, that the Turk never attacks this treasury.

But, besides, that he has attempted it formerly with no success, it is certain the Venetians keep too watchful an eye. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

2. Not in this number; beyond this class; not included here.

And the men said unto Lot, hast thou here any besides?

Genesis, xix. 12.

Outlaws and robbers, who break with all the world besides, must keep faith among themselves. Locke.

All that we feel of it, begins and ends

In the small circle of our foes or friends;

To all beside as much an empty shade,

An Eugene living, as a Cæsar dead. Pope's Essay on Man.

And dead, as living, 'tis our author's pride

Still to charm those who charm the world beside. Pope.

BESIDERY. n. f. A species of pear, which see.

TO BESIEGE. v. a. [from siege.] To beleague; to lay siege to; to beset with armed forces; to endeavour to win a town or fortress, by surrounding it with an army, and forcing the defendants, either by violence or famine, to give admission.

And he shall besiege thee in all thy gates, until thy high and fenced walls come down. Deut. xxviii. 52.

The queen, with all the northern earls and lords,

Intend here to besiege you in your castle. Shakefp. Henry VI.

BESIEGER. n. f. [from besiege.] One employed in a siege.

With such accomodation and besort,

As levels with her breeding. Shakefp. Othello.

TO BESO'T. v. a. [from so't.]

1. To infatuate; to stupify; to dull; to take away the senses.

Swinish gluttony

Ne'er looks to heav'n amidst his gorgeous feast,

But, with besotted base ingratitude,

Crams and blasphemes his feeder. Milton.

Or fools besotted with their crimes,

That know not how to shift betimes. Hudibras, p. iii. c. ii.

He is besotted, and has lost his reason; and what then can there be for religion to take hold of him by. South.

2. To make to doat.

Paris, you speak

Like one besotted on your sweet delights.

Shakefp. Troilus and Cressida.

Trust not thy beauty; but restore the prize,

Which he, besotted on that face and eyes,

Would rend from us. Dryden's Fables.

BESO'UGHT. [part. passive of besecch; which see.]

Hasten to appease

Th' incensed Father, and th' incensed Son,

While pardon may be found, in time besought.

TO BESPUTTER. v. a. [from sputter.] To sputter over something; to dawb any thing by sputtering, or throwing out spittle upon it.

BEST. adj. the superlative from good. [bet, betera, betet, good, better, best, Saxon.]

1. Most good; that which has good qualities in the highest degree. And he will take your fields, even the best of them, and give them to his servants. 1 Samuel, viii. 14. When the best things are not possible, the best may be made of those that are. Hooker, b. v. § 9. When he is best, he is a little more than a man; and when he is worst, he is a little better than a beast. Shakesp. M. of Ven. I think it a good argument to say, the infinitely wise God hath made it so: and therefore it is best. But it is too much confidence of our own wisdom, to say, I think it best, and therefore God hath made it so. Locke. An evil intention perverts the best actions, and makes them fins. Addison. Spectator, No 213.
2. The best. The utmost power; the strongest endeavour; the most; the highest perfection. I profess not talking: only this, Let each man do his best. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. i. The duke did his best to come down. Bacon's War with Sp. He does this to the best of his power. Locke. My friend, said he, our sport is at the best. Addis. Ovid.
3. To make the best. To carry to its greatest perfection; to improve to the utmost. Let there be freedom to carry their commodities where they may make the best of them, except there be some special cause of caution. Bacon. His father left him an hundred drachmas; Alnaschar, in order to make the best of it, laid it out in glasses. Addison. Spect. We set sail, and made the best of our way, till we were forced, by contrary winds, into St. Remo. Addison on Italy.

BEST. adv. [from well.] In the highest degree of goodness. He shall dwell in that place where he shall choose in one of thy gates, where it liketh him best. Deut. xxiii. 16.

BEST is sometimes used in composition. These latter best-be-trust-spies had some of them further instructions, to draw off the best friends and servants of Perkin, by making remonstrances to them, how weakly his enterprize and hopes were built. Bacon's Henry VII. By this law of loving even our enemies, the christian religion discovers itself to be the most generous and bestnatured institution that ever was in the world. Tillotson, sermon v.

TO BESTA'IN. v. a. [from stain.] To mark with stains; to spot. We will not line his thin bestained cloke With our pure honours. Shakesp. King John.

TO BESTE'AD. v. a. I bested; I have bested. [from stead.]

1. To profit. Hence vain deluding joys, The brood of folly, without father bred, How little you bestead, Or fill the fixed mind with-all your toys. Milton.
2. To treat; to accommodate. And they shall pass through it hardly bestead, and hungry. Isaiah, viii. 21.

BESTIAL. adj. [from beast.]

1. Belonging to a beast, or to the class of beasts. His wild disorder'd walk, his haggard eyes, Did all the bestial citizens surprize. Dryden's Hind and P.
2. Having the qualities of beasts; brutal; below the dignity of reason or humanity; carnal. I have lost the immortal part of myself, and what remains is bestial. Shakesp. Othello. Moreover, urge his hateful luxury, And bestial appetite, in change of lust. Shakesp. Rich. III. For those, the race of Israel oft forsook Their living strength, and, unfrequented, left

His righteous altar, bowing lowly down To bestial gods. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i. l. 435.

The things promised are not gross and carnal, such as may court and gratify the most bestial part of us. Decay of Piety.

BESTIALITY. n. f. [from bestial.] The quality of beasts; degeneracy from human nature. What can be a greater absurdity, than to affirm bestiality to be the essence of humanity, and darkness the center of light? Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.

BESTIALLY. adv. [from bestial.] Brutally; in a manner below humanity.

TO BESTICK. v. a. preter. I bestuck, I have bestuck. [from stick.] To stick over with any thing; to mark any thing by infixing points or spots here and there. Truth shall retire, Bestuck with stand'rous darts; and works of faith Rarely be found. Milt. Par. Lost, b. xii. l. 536.

TO BESTIR. v. a. [from stir.]

1. To put into vigorous action. It is seldom used otherwise than with the reciprocal pronoun. As when men wont to watch On duty, sleeping found by whom they dread, Rouze and bestir themselves ere well awake. Milton. Bestirs her then, and from each tender stalk Whatever earth, all-bearing mother, yields, She gathers. Par. Lost, b. v. But, as a dog that turns the spit, Bestirs himself, and plies his feet To climb the wheel, but all in vain, His own weight brings him down again. Hudibras, p. ii. c. iii. What aileth them, that they must needs bestir themselves to get in air, to maintain the creature's life? Ray on Creation.
2. It is used by Shakespeare with a common word. I am scarce in breath, my lord.—No marvel you have so bestirred your valour, you cowardly rascal! Shakesp. King Lear.

TO BESTOW. v. a. [from besteden, Dutch.]

1. To give; to confer upon. All men would willingly have yielded him praise; but his nature was such as to bestow it upon himself, before any could give it. Sidney. All the dedicate things of the house of the Lord did they bestow upon Baalim. 2 Chron. xxiv. 7. Sir Julius Cæsar had, in his office, the disposition of the six clarks places; which he had bestowed to such persons as he thought fit. Clarendon.
2. To give as charity. Our Saviour doth plainly witness, that there should not be as much as a cup of cold water bestowed for his sake, without reward. Hooker, b. ii. § 8. And though he was unsatisfied in getting, Which was a sin; yet in bestowing, madam, He was most princely. Shakesp. Henry VIII. Spain to your gift alone her Indies owes; For what the pow'ful takes not, he bestows. Dryden. You always exceed expectations: as if yours was not your own, but to bestow on wanting merit. Dryden's Fables, Ded.
3. To give in marriage. Good rev'rend father, make my person yours; And tell me how you would bestow yourself. Shakesp. I could have bestowed her upon a fine gentleman, who extremely admired her. Tatler, No 75.
4. To give as a present. Pure oil and incense on the fire they throw, And fat of victims which his friends bestow. Dryden.
5. To apply. The sea was not the duke of Marlborough's element; otherwise the whole force of the war would infallibly have been bestowed there. Swift.
6. To lay out upon. And thou shalt bestow that money for whatsoever thy soul lusteth after, for oxen, for sheep, or for wine. Deut. xiv. 26.
7. To lay up; to stow; to place. And when he came to the tower, he took them from their hand, and bestowed them in the house. 2 Kings, v. 24.

BESTOWER. n. f. [from bestow.] Giver; he that confers any thing; disposer. They all agree in making one supreme God; and that there are several beings that are to be worshipped under him; some as the bestowers of thrones, but subordinate to the Supreme. Stillingfl.

BESTRAUGHT. particip. [Of this participle I have not found the verb; by analogy we may derive it from bestraet; perhaps it is corrupted from distraught.] Distracted; mad; out of one's senses; out of one's wits. Ask Marian, the fat alewife, if she knew me not. What! I am not bestraught. Shakesp. Tam. the Shrew.

TO BESTREW. v. a. particip. pass. bestrewn, or bestrown. [from strew.] To sprinkle over. So thick bestrown, Abject and lost lay these, covering the flood. Par. Lost, b. i.

TO BESTRIDE. v. a. I bestrid; I have bestrid, or bestridden. [from stride.]

1. To stride over any thing; to have any thing between one's legs. Why

B E T

Why, man, he doth bestride the narrow world
Like a colossus. Shakefp. Julius Cæsar.

Make him bestride the ocean, and mankind
Ask his consent, to use the sea and wind. Waller.

2. To step over.

That I see thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart,
Than when I first my wedded mistress saw
Bestride my threshold. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

3. It is often used of riding.

He bestrides the lazy pacing clouds,
And sails upon the bosom of the air. Shakefp. Rom. and Jul.
That horse, that thou so often hast bestrid:
That horse, that I so carefully have dress'd. Shakefp. R. II.
Venetians do not more uncouthly ride,
Than did their lubber state mankind bestride. Dryden.
The bounding steed you pompously bestride,
Shares with his lord the pleasure and the pride. Pope.

4. It is used sometimes of a man standing over something which he defends.

He bestrid
An o'erpress'd Roman, and i' th' consul's view
Slew three opposers: Tarquin's self he met,
And struck him on his knee. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

Let us rather
Hold fast the mortal sword; and, like good men,
Bestride our downfaln birthdom. Shakefp. Macbeth.
If thou see me down in the battle, and bestride me, so; 'tis a point of friendship. Shakefp. Henry IV. p. i.

He doth bestride a bleeding land,
Gasping for life, under great Bolingbroke. Shak. Henry IV.
To BESTU'D. v. a. [from stud.] To adorn with studs, or shining prominences.

Th' unfought diamonds
Would so emblaze the forehead of the deep,
And so bestud with stars, that they below
Would grow inur'd to light. Milton.

BET. n. f. [pebbian, to wager; peb, a wager, Sax. from which the etymologists derive bet. I should rather imagine it to come from bezan, to mend, encrease, or better, as a bet encreases the original wager.] A wager; something laid to be won upon certain conditions.

The hoary fool, who many days
Has struggl'd with continu'd sorrow,
Renews his hope, and blindly lays
The desp'rate bet upon tomorrow. Prior.

His pride was in piquette,
Newmarket fame, and judgment at a bet: Pope.

To BET. v. a. [from the noun.] To wager; to stake at a wager.

He drew a good bow: and dead? John of Gaunt loved him well, and betted much upon his head. Shakefp. Henry IV. p. ii.
He flies the court for want of clothes,

Cries out 'gainst cocking, since he cannot bet. B. Johnson.
The god, unhappily engag'd,
Complain'd, and sigh'd, and cry'd, and fretted,
Lost ev'ry earthly thing he betted. Prior.

BET. The old preterite of beat.
He staid for a better hour, till the hammer had wrought and bet the party more pliant. Bacon's Henry VII.

Which he disclosing read. Fairy Queen, b. i. c. xii. st. 25.

2. To have recourse to; with the reciprocal pronoun.
The adverse party betaking itself to such practices as men embrace, when they behold things brought to desperate extremities. Hooker, b. iv. § 14.

Thou tyrant!
Do not repent these things; for they are heavier
Than all thy woes can stir: therefore betake thee
To nothing but despair. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
The rest, in imitation, to like arms
Betook them, and the neighb'ring hills up tore.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi. l. 663.

3. To apply; with the reciprocal pronoun.
With ease such fond chimeras we pursue,
As fancy frames for fancy to subdue:
But when ourselves to action we betake,
It shuns the mint, like gold that chymists make. Dryden.
As my observations have been the light whereby I have hitherto steer'd my course, so I here betake myself to them again.
Woodward's Natural History.

4. To move; to remove.
Soft she withdrew; and, like a wood nymph light,
Oread or Dryad, or of Delia's train,
Betook her to the groves. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix. l. 389.

The very cause of his taking upon him our nature, was to better the quality, and to advance the condition thereof. Hooker, b. viii. § 54.

He is furnished with my opinion, which is bettered with his own learning. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

Heir to all his lands and goods,

Which I have better'd, rather than decreas'd.

Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

But Jonathan, to whom both hearts were known,

With well-tim'd zeal, and with an artful care,

Restor'd, and better'd soon, the nice affair. Cowley's David.

The church of England, the purest and best reformed church in the world; so well reformed, that it will be found easier to alter than to better its constitution. South.

The Romans took pains to hew out a passage for these lakes, to discharge themselves, for the bettering of the air. Addison.

2. To surpass; to exceed.

The works of nature do always aim at that which cannot be bettered. Hooker, b. i. § 5.

He hath born himself beyond the promise of his age; he hath, indeed, bettered expectation, than you must expect of me to tell you. Shakesp. Much ado about Nothing.

What you do

Still *bett*ers what is done; when you speak sweet,

I'd have you do it ever. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

3. To advance.

The king thought his honour would suffer, during a treaty, to better a party. Bacon's Henry VII.

BE'TTER. n. f. [from the adjective.] Superiour in good-nefs.

Their *bett*ers would be hardly found, if they did not live among men, but in a wilderness by themselves. Hooker, b. i.

The courtesy of nations allows you my better, in that you are the first-born. Shakesp. As you like it.

That ye thus hospitably live,

Is mighty grateful to your *bett*ers,

And makes e'en gods themselves your debtors. Prior:

I have some gold and silver by me, and shall be able to make a shift, when many of my *bett*ers are starving. Swift.

BE'TTOR. n. f. [from to bet.] One that lays betts or wagers.

I observed a stranger among them, of a genteeler behaviour than ordinary; but notwithstanding he was a very fair bettor, nobody would take him up. Addison. Spectator, N° 126.

BE'TTY. n. f. [probably a cant word, without etymology.] An instrument to break open doors.

Record the stratagems, the arduous exploits, and the nocturnal scalades of needy heroes, describing the powerful betty, or the artful picklock. Arbuthnot's History of J. Bull.

BETWE'EN. prep. [betweonan, betwinnan, Saxon; from the original word twā, two.]

1. In the intermediate space.

What modes

Of smell the headlong lions *betw*een,
And hound sagacious on the tainted green?

Pope.

B E W

2. From one to another; noting intercourse.
He should think himself unhappy, if things should go so between them, as he should not be able to acquit himself of ingratitude towards them both. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. Belonging to two in partnership.
I ask, whether Castor and Pollux, with only one soul between them, which thinks and perceives in one what the other is never conscious of, are not two distinct persons? Locke.

4. Bearing relation to two.
If there be any discord or suits between them and any of the family, they are compounded and appeased. Bacon's Atlantis.
Friendship requires, that it be between two at least; and there can be no friendship where there are not two friends. South.

5. In separation, or distinction of one from the other.
Their natural constitutions put so wide a difference between some men, that art would never master. Locke.
Children quickly distinguish between what is required of them, and what not. Locke.

6. Between is properly used of two, and among of more; but perhaps this accuracy is not always preserved.
BETWIXT. prep. [betwýx, Saxon. It has the same signification with between, and is indifferently used for it.]

1. In the midst of two:
Hard by, a cottage chimney smokes,
From betwixt two aged oaks. Milton.
Methinks, like two black storms on either hand,
Our Spanish army and your Indians stand;
This only place betwixt the clouds is clear. Dryd. Ind. Emp.
If contradicting interests could be mixt,
Nature herself has cast a bar betwixt. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

2. From one to another.
Five years since there was some speech of marriage
Betwixt myself and her. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.
BE'VEL. } n. s. In masonry and joinery, a kind of square, one
BE'VIL. } leg of which is frequently crooked, according to the sweep of an arch or vault. It is moveable on a point or centre, and so may be set to any angle. An angle that is not square, is called a bevil angle, whether it be more obtuse, or more acute, than a right angle. Builder's Dict.
Their houses are very ill built, their walls bevil, without one right angle in any apartment. Swift's Gulliver's Travels.
To BE'VEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut to a bevel angle.
These rabbits are ground square; but the rabbits on the groundfel are bevelled downwards, that rain may the freelier fall off. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

BE'VEER. See BEAVER.
BE'VERAGE. n. s. [from bevere, to drink, Ital.]

1. Drink; liquor to be drank in general.
I am his cupbearer;
If from me he have wholesome beverage,
Account me not your servant. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
Grains, pulses, and all sorts of fruits, either bread or beverage, may be made almost of all. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
A pleasant beverage he prepar'd before,
Of wine and honey mix'd. Dryden's Fables.
The coarse lean gravel on the mountain sides,
Scarce dewy bev'rage for the bees provides. Dryden's Virgil.

2. Beverage, or water cyder, is made by putting the mure into a fat, adding water, as you desire it stronger or smaller. The water should stand forty eight hours on it, before you press it; when it is pressed, turn it up immediately. Mortimer's Husband.

3. A treat upon wearing a new suit of cloaths.
4. A treat at first coming into a prison, called also garnish.

BE'VY. n. s. [beva, Ital.]

1. A flock of birds.
2. A company; an assembly.
And in the midst thereof, upon the floor,
A lovely bevy of fair ladies sat,
Courtied of many a jolly paramour. Fairy Queen, b. ii. c. ix.
They on the plain
Long had not walk'd, when, from the tents, behold
A bevy of fair women. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 582.
Nor rode the nymph alone,
Around a bevy of bright damsels shone. Pope's Odyssey.

To BEWA'IL. v. a. [from wail.] To bemoan; to lament; to express sorrow for.

In this city he
Hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,
Which to this hour bewail the injury. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
Thy ambition,
Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham, my father in law. Shakesp. H. VIII.
Yet wiser Ennius gave command to all
His friends, not to bewail his funeral. Sir J. Denham.

I cannot but bewail, as in their first principles, the miseries and calamities of our children. Addison's Spectator, N° 127.

To BEWA'RE. v. n. [from be and ware, or wary; that is, cautious: thus, in an old treatise, I have found, be ye ware. See WARY. Leoparian, Saxon; warer, Danish.]

1. To regard with caution; to be suspicious of danger from: generally the particle of goes before the thing which excites caution.

B E Y

You must beware of drawing or painting clouds, winds, and thunder, towards the bottom of your piece. Dryden's Dufres.
Every one ought to be very careful to beware what he admits for a principle. Locke.

Warn'd by the sylph, oh, pious maid, beware!
This to disclose is all thy guardian can;
Beware of all, but most beware of man. Pope's Rape of the L.
2. It is observable, that it is only used in such forms of speech as admit the word be: thus we say, he may beware, let him beware, he will beware; but not, he did beware, or he has been ware.

To BEWE'EP. v. a. [from weep.] To weep over or upon; to bedew with tears.

Old fond eyes,
Beweep this cause again; I'll pluck ye out,
And cast you, with the waters that you lose,
To temper clay. Shakesp. King Lear.
Larded all with sweet flowers,
Which bewept to the grave did go,
With true love showers. Shakesp. Hamlet.

To BEWE'T. v. a. [from wet.] To wet; to moisten; to bedew; to water.

His napkin, with his true tears all bewet,
Can do no service on her sorrowful cheeks. Shakesp. Titus Andronicus.

To BEWILDER. v. a. [from wild.] To lose in pathless places; to confound for want of a plain road; to perplex; to entangle; to puzzle.

We parted thus; I homeward sped my way,
Bewilder'd in the wood till dawn of day. Dryden's Fables.

We no solution of our question find;
Your words bewilder, not direct the mind. Blackmore.

Our understanding traces 'em in vain,
Lost and bewilder'd in the fruitless search. Addison's Cato.
It is good sometimes to lose and bewilder ourselves in such studies. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

To BEWITCH. v. a. [from witch.]

1. To injure by witchcraft, or fascination, or charms.
Look how I am bewitch'd; behold, mine arm
Is like a blasted sapling wither'd up. Shakesp. Richard III.
I have forsworn his company hourly this twenty year; and yet I am bewitched with the rogue's company. If the rascal has not given me medicines to make me love him, I'll be hang'd. Shakesp. Henry IV.

My flocks are free from love, yet look so thin;
What magick has bewitch'd the woolly dams,
And what ill eyes beheld the tender lambs? Dryden's Virgil.

2. To charm; to please to such a degree, as to take away the power of resistance.

Doth even beauty beautify,
And most bewitch the wretched eye. Sidney, b. ii.

The charms of poetry our souls bewitch;
The curse of writing is an endless itch. Dryden's Juvenal.

I do not know, by the character that is given of her works, whether it is not for the benefit of mankind that they were lost; they were filled with such bewitching tenderness and rapture, that it might have been dangerous to have given them a reading. Addison's Spectator, N° 223.

BEWITCHERY. n. s. [from bewitch.] Fascination; charm; resistless prevalence.

There is a certain bewitchery, or fascination in words, which makes them operate with a force beyond what we can give an account of. South.

BEWITCHMENT. n. s. [from bewitch.] Fascination; power of charming.

I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the desirers. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

To BEWRA'Y. v. a. [pregan, bepnegan, Saxon.]

1. To betray; to discover perfidiously.
Fair feeling words he wisely 'gan display,
And, for her humour fitting purpose, fain
To tempt the cause itself for to bewray. Fairy Queen, b. i.

2. To shew; to make visible: this word is now little in use.
She saw a pretty blush in Philodea's cheeks bewray a modest discontentment. Sidney.

Men do sometimes bewray that by deeds, which to confess they are hardly drawn: Hooker, b. i. § 7.

Next look on him that seems for counsel fit,
Whose silver locks bewray his store of days. Fairfax, b. iii.

BEWRA'YER. n. s. [from bewray.] Betrayer; discoverer; divulger.

When a friend is turned into an enemy, and a bewrayer of secrets, the world is just enough to accuse the perfidiousness of the friend. Addison's Spectator, N° 225.

BEYO'ND. prep. [begeond, begeondan, Saxon.]

1. Before; at a distance not yet reached.
What's fame? a fancy'd life in others breath,
A thing beyond us, ev'n before our death
Just what you hear, you have. Pope's Essay on Man.

2. On the farther side of.
Neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldst say, who shall go over the sea for us, and bring it unto us. Deut. xxx. 13.

Now we are on land, we are but between death and life;
for we are beyond the old world and the new.

Bacon's New Atlantis.

We cannot think men beyond sea will part with their money for nothing. Locke.

3. Farther onward than.

He that sees a dark and shady grove,
Stays not, but looks beyond it on the sky. Herbert.

4. Past; out of the reach of.

Beyond the infinite and boundless reach
Of mercy, if thou did'st this deed of death,
Art thou damn'd, Hubert. Shakesp. King John.

Yet these declare
Thy goodness beyond thought, and pow'r divine.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v. l. 158.

The just, wise, and good God, neither does, nor can require of man any thing that is impossible, or naturally beyond his power to do. South.

Consider the situation of our earth; it is placed so conveniently, that plants flourish, and animals live; this is matter of fact, and beyond all dispute. Bentley's Sermons.

5. Above; exceeding to a greater degree than.

Timotheus was a man both in power, riches, parentage, goodness, and love of his people, beyond any of the great men of my country. Sidney.

One thing, in this enormous accident, is, I must confess, to me beyond all wonder. Wotton.

To his expences, beyond his income, add debauchery, idleness, and quarrels amongst his servants, whereby his manufactures are disturbed, and his business neglected. Locke.

As far as they carry conviction to any man's understanding, my labour may be of use: beyond the evidence it carries with it,
I advise him not to follow any man's interpretation. Locke.

6. Above in excellence.

His satires are incomparably beyond Juvenal's; if to laugh and rally, is to be preferred to railing and declaiming. Dryden.

7. Remote from; not within the sphere of.

With equal mind, what happens, let us bear;
Nor joy, nor grieve too much for things beyond our care.
Dryden's Fables.

8. To go beyond, is to deceive; to circumvent.

She made earnest benefit of his jest, forcing him to do her such services, as were both cumbersome and costly; while he still thought he went beyond her, because his heart did not commit the idolatry. Sidney.

That no man go beyond, and defraud his brother in any matter. 1 Theff. iv. 6.

BE'ZEL. } n. f. That part of a ring in which the stone is BE'ZIL. } fixed.

BE'ZOAR. n. f. [from pa, against, and zabar, poison, Perfick.]
A medicinal stone, formerly in high esteem as an antidote, and brought from the East Indies, where it is said to be found in the dung of an animal of the goat kind, called pazan; the stone being formed in its belly, and growing to the size of an acorn, and sometimes to that of a pigeon's egg. Were the real virtues of this stone answerable to its reputed ones, it were doubtless a panacea. Indeed its rarity, and the peculiar manner of its formation, which is now supposed to be fabulous, have perhaps contributed as much to its reputation as its intrinsic worth. At present, it begins to be discarded in the practice of medicine, as of no efficacy at all. There are also some occidental bezoars brought from Peru, which are reckoned inferior to the oriental. The name of this stone is also applied to several chymical compositions, designed for antidotes, or counter-poisons; as mineral, solar, and jovial bezoars.

Savary. Chambers.

BEZOAR'DICK. adj. [from bezoar.] Medicines compounded with bezoar.

The bezoardicks are necessary to promote sweat, and drive forth the putrefied particles. Floyer on the Humours.

BIA'NGULATED. } adj. [from binus and angulus, Lat.] Having BIA'NGULOUS. } corners or angles. Dict.

BI'AS. n. f. [biais, Fr. said to come from bihay, an old Gaulish word, signifying cross, or thwart.]

1. The weight lodged on one side of a bowl, which turns it from the strait line.

Madam, we'll play at bowls—

—'Twill make me think the world is full of rubs,
And that my fortune runs against the bias. Shakesp. R. II.

2. Any thing which turns a man to a particular course; or gives the direction to his measures.

You have been mistook:

But nature to her bias drew in that. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

This is that boasted bias of thy mind,

By which one way to dulness 'tis inclin'd. Dryden's Mackfl.

Morality influences mens lives, and gives a bias to all their actions. Locke.

Wit and humour, that expose vice and folly, furnish useful diversions. Raillery, under such regulations, unbends the mind from severer contemplations, without throwing it off from its proper bias.

Addison's Freeholder, N° 45.

Thus nature gives us, let it check our pride,

The virtue nearest to our vice ally'd;

Reason the bias turns to good or ill. Pope's Essay on Man.

3. Propension; inclination.

As for the religion of our poet, he seems to have some little bias towards the opinions of Wickliff. Dryd. Fab. Preface.

To BI'AS. v. a. [from the noun.] To incline to some side; to balance one way; to prejudice.

Were I in no more danger to be misled by ignorance, than I am to be biased by interest, I might give a very perfect account. Locke.

A desire leaning to either side, biasses the judgment strangely; by indifference for every thing but truth, you will be excited to examine. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

BI'AS. adv. It seems to be used adverbially in the following passage, conformably to the French, mettre une chose de biais, to give any thing a wrong interpretation.

Every action that hath gone before,

Whereof we have record, trial did draw

Bias and thwart, not answering the aim.

Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

BIB. n. f. A small piece of linen put upon the breasts of children, over their cloaths.

I would fain know, why it should not be as noble a task, to write upon a bib and hanging-sleeves, as on the bullæ and prætextæ. Addison on ancient Medals.

To BIB. v. n. [bibo, Lat.] To tipple; to sip; to drink frequently.

He playeth with bibbing mother Meroë, as though she were so named, because she would drink mere wine without water.
Camden.

To appease a froward child, they gave him drink as often as he cried; so that he was constantly bibbing, and drank more in twenty four hours than I did. Locke.

BIBA'CIOUS. adj. [bibax, Lat.] Much addicted to drinking. D.

BIBA'CITY. n. f. [bibacitas, Lat.] The quality of drinking much.

often.

BI'BLE. n. f. [from βιβλίον, a book; called, by way of excellence,
The Book.] The sacred volume in which are contained the revelations of God.

If we pass from the apostolic to the next ages of the church, the primitive christians looked on their bibles as their most important treasure. Government of the Tongue, § 3.

We must take heed how we accustom ourselves to a slight and irreverent use of the name of God, and of the phrases and expressions of the holy bible, which ought not to be applied upon every slight occasion. Tillotson, sermon i.

In questions of natural religion, we should confirm and improve, or connect our reasonings, by the divine assistance of the bible. Watts's Logick.

BIBLIO'GRAPHER. n. f. [from βιβλος, and γραφω, to write.] A writer of books; a transcriber. Dict.

BIBLIOTHE'CAL. adj. [from bibliotheca, Lat.] Belonging to a library. Dict.

BI'BULOUS. adj. [bibulus, Lat.] That which has the quality of drinking moisture; spongy.

Strow'd bibulous above, I see the sands,

The pebbly gravel next, and guttur'd rocks. Thomson.

BICA'PSULAR. adj. [bicapsularis, Lat.] A plant whose seed ves-is divided into two parts.

BICE. n. f. The name of a colour used in painting. It is either green or blue.

may diaper upon it with the water of deep green. Peacham.

BICI'PITAL. } adj. [biceps, bicipitis, Lat.]

1. Having two heads.

While men believe bicipitous conformation in any species, they admit a gemination of principal parts. Brown's Vulg. Err.

2. It is applied to one of the muscles of the arm.

A piece of flesh is exchanged from the bicipital muscle of either party's arm. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 3.

To BICKER. v. n. [bicre, Welsh, a contest.]

1. To skirmish; to fight without a set battle; to fight off and on.

They fell to such a bickering, that he got a halting, and lost his picture. Sidney.

In thy face

I see thy fury; if I longer stay,

We shall begin our ancient bickerings. Shakesp. Henry VI.

2. To quiver; to play backward and forward.

And from about him fierce effusion rowl'd

Of smoke, and bickering flame, and sparkles dire.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi. l. 674.

An icy gale, oft shifting o'er the pool,

Breathes a blue film, and, in its mid career,

Arrests the bickering stream. Thomson's Winter, l. 730.

BI'CKERER. n. f. [from the verb.] A skirmisher.

BI'CKERN. n. f. [apparently corrupted from beakiron.] An iron ending in a point.

There are my keys. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

Go ye into the highways, and, as many as you shall find, bid to the marriage. Matt. xxii. 9.

We ought, when we are bidden to great feasts and meetings, to be prepared beforehand. Hakewell on Providence.

2. To command; to order; before things or persons.

Saint Withold footed thrice the wold,
He met the nightmare, and her name told,
Bid her alight, and her troth plight. Shakesp. King Lear.

He chid the sisters,
When first they put the name of king upon me,
And bade them speak to him. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Haste to the house of sleep, and bid the god,
Who rules the nightly visions with a nod,
Prepare a dream. Dryden's Fables.

Curse on the tongue that bids this general joy.
—Can they be friends of Antony, who revel
When Antony's in danger? Dryd. All for Love.

Thames heard the numbers, as he flow'd along,
And bade his willows learn the moving song. Pope.

Acquire a government over your ideas, that they may come when they are called, and depart when they are bidden. Watts's Logick.

3. To offer; to propose; as, to bid a price.

Come, and be true.—
—Thou bidst me to my loss: for true to thee,
Were to prove false. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

When a man is resolute to keep his sins while he lives, and yet unwilling to relinquish all hope, he will embrace that profession, which bids fairest to the reconciling those so distant interests. Decay of Piety.

As when the goddesses came down of old,
With gifts, their young Dardanian judge they try'd,
And each bade high to win him to their side. Granville.

To give interest a share in friendship, is to sell it by inch of candle; he that bids most shall have it: and when it is mercenary, there is no depending on it. Collier on Friendship.

4. To proclaim; to offer; or to make known by some publick voice.

Our bans thrice bid! and for our wedding day
My kerchief bought! then press'd, then forc'd away.
Gay's What d'ye call it.

5. To pronounce; to declare.

You are retir'd,
As if you were a feasted one, and not
The hostess of the meeting; pray you, bid
These unknown friends to's welcome. Shakesp. Wint. Tale.

Divers of them, as we pass'd by them, put their arms a little abroad; which is their gesture, when they bid any welcome.
Bacon's New Atlantis.

How, Didius, shall a Roman, fore repuls'd,
Greet your arrival to this distant isle?
How bid you welcome to these shatter'd legions? A. Philips.

6. To denounce.

Thyself and Oxford, with five thousand men,
Shall cross the seas, and bid false Edward battle.
Shakesp. Henry VI. p. iii.

She bid war to all that durst supply
The place of those her cruelty made die. Waller.

The captive cannibal, oppress'd with chains,
Yet braves his foes, reviles, provokes, disdains;
Of nature fierce, untameable, and proud,
He bids defiance to the gaping croud,
And spent at last, and speechless as he lies,
With fiery glances mocks their rage, and dies. Granville.

7. To pray. See BEAD.

If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed.

mily. Bacon.

VOL. I.

B I G

Madam, the bidden guests are come: A. Philips.

2. Commanded.

'Tis these that early taint the female soul;
Instruct the eyes of young coquettes to roll;
Teach infants cheeks a bidden blush to know,
And little hearts to flutter at a beau. Pope's R. of the Lock.

BI'DDER. n. f. [from to bid.] One who offers or proposes a price.

He looked upon several dresses which hung there, and exposed to the purchase of the best bidder. Addison. Spectator.

BI'DDING. n. f. [from bid.] Command; order.

How, say'st thou, that Macduff denies his person
At our great bidding? Shakesp. Macbeth.

At his second bidding, darkness fled,
Light shone, and order from disorder sprung.
Milton's Parad. Lost, b. iii. l. 712.

To BIDE. v. a. [bīdan, Sax.] To endure; to suffer.

Poor naked wretches, whereof'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm. Shakesp. K. Lear.

The wary Dutch this gathering storm forefaw,
And durst not bide it on the English coast. Dryd. Ann. Mir.

To BIDE. v. n.

1. To dwell; to live; to inhabit.

All knees to thee shall bow, of them that bide
In heav'n, or earth, or under earth in hell. Par. Lost, b. iii.

2. To remain in a place.

With twenty trenched gashes on his head;
The least a death to nature. Shakesp. Macbeth.

3. To continue in a state.

And they also, if they bide not still in unbelief, shall be graffed in. Romans, xi. 23.

4. It has probably all the significations of the word abide; which see: but it being grown somewhat obsolete, the examples of its various meanings are not easily found.

BIDE'NTAL. adj. [bīdens, Lat.] Having two teeth.

Ill management of forks is not to be helped, when they are only bidental. Swift.

BI'DING. n. f. [from bide.] Residence; habitation.

At Antwerp has my constant biding been. Rowe's J. Sh.

BI'E'NNIAL. adj. [biennis, Lat.] Of the continuance of two years.

Then why should some be very long lived, others only annual or biennial? Ray on the Creation.

BIER. n. f. [from to bear, as feretrum, in Latin, from fero.] A carriage, or frame of wood, on which the dead are carried to the grave.

And now the prey of fowls he lies,
Nor wail'd of friends, nor laid on groaning bier. Fairy 2.

They bore him barefaced on the bier,
And on his grave remains many a tear. Shakesp. Hamlet.

He must not float upon his wat'ry bier,
Unwept. Milton.

Griefs always green, a household still in tears:
Sad pomps, a threshold throng'd with daily biers,
And liveries of black. Dryden's Juvenal, sat. x.

Make as if you hanged yourself, they will convey your body out of prison in a bier. Arbuthnot's J. Bull.

BI'ESTINGS. n. f. [býrting, Saxon.] The first milk given by a cow after calving, which is very thick.

And twice besides, her bieftings never fail
To store the dairy with a brimming pail. Dryden's Virgil.

BIFA'RIOUS. adj. [bifarius, Lat.] Twofold; what may be understood two ways. Dict.

BI'FEROUS. adj. [biferens, Lat.] Bearing fruit twice a year.

BI'FID. } adj. [bifidus, Lat. a botanical term.] Divided

BI'FIDATED. } in two; split in two; opening with a cleft.

BIFO'LD. adj. [from binus, Lat. and fold.] Twofold; double.

If beauty have a soul, this is not she;
If souls guide vows, if vows are sanctimony,
If sanctimony be the gods delight,
If there be rule in unity itself,
This is not she; O madness of discourse!
That cause sets up with and against thyself!

Bifold authority. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

BIFO'RMED. adj. [biformis, Lat.] Compounded of two forms, or bodies.

BIFU'RCATED. adj. [from binus, two, and furca, a fork, Lat.]
Shooting out, by a division, into two heads.

A small white piece, bifurcated, or branching into two, and finely reticulated all over. Woodward on Fossils.

BIFURCA'TION. n. f. [from binus and furca, Lat.] Division into two; opening into two parts.

The first catachrestical and far derived similitude, it holds with man; that is, in a bifurcation, or division of the root into two parts. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 6.

BIG. adj. [This word is of uncertain, or unknown etymology;
Junius derives it from Bayard; Skinner, from bug, which, in Danish, signifies the belly.]

1. Great in bulk; large.

Both in addition and division, either of space or duration, when the idea under consideration becomes very big, or very small;

small, its precise bulk becomes very obscure and confused.

Locke.

A troubled ocean, to a man who sails in it, is, I think, the biggest object that he can see in motion. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup> 489.

Then commerce brought into the publick walk

The busy merchant, the big warehouse built. Thomson.

2. Teeming; pregnant; great with young; with the particle with.

A bear big with young hath seldom been seen. Bacon.

Lately on yonder swelling bush,

Big with many a common rose,

This early bud began to blush.

Waller.

3. Sometimes with of; but rarely.

His gentle lady,

Big of this gentleman, our theam, deceas'd

As he was born.

Shakesp. Cymbeline.

4. Full of something; and desirous, or about, to give it vent.

The great, th' important day,

Big with the fate of Cato and of Rome.

Addison's Cato.

Now big with knowledge of approaching woes,

The prince of augurs, Halithreses, rose.

Pope's Odyssey.

5. Distended; swollen; ready to burst; used often of the effects of passion, as grief, rage.

Thy heart is big; get thee apart, and weep.

Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

6. Great in air and mien; proud; swelling; tumid; haughty; furly.

How else, said he, but with a good bold face,

And with big words, and with a stately pace.

Hub. Tale.

To the meaner man, or unknown in the court, seem somewhat solemn, coy, big, and dangerous of look, talk, and answer.

Afham's Schoolmaster.

If you had but looked big, and spit at him, he'd have run.

Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Or does the man i' th' moon look big,

Or wear a huger perriwig,

Than our own native lunatics.

Hudibras, p. ii. cant. iii.

Of governments that once made such a noise, and looked so big in the eyes of mankind, as being founded upon the deepest counsels, and the strongest force; nothing remains of them but a name.

South.

In his most prosperous season, he fell under the reproach of being a man of big looks, and of a mean and abject spirit.

Clarendon.

Thou thyself, thus insolent in state,

Art but perhaps some country magistrate,

Whose power extends no farther than to speak

Big on the bench, and scanty weights to break.

Dryden.

To grant big Thrafo valour, Phormio sense,

Should indignation give, at least offence.

Garth.

7. Great in spirit; lofty; brave.

What art thou? have not I

An arm as big as thine? a heart as big?

Thy words, I grant, are bigger: for I wear not

My dagger in my mouth.

Shakesp. Cymbeline.

BI'GAMIST. n. f. [bigamius, low Lat.] One that has committed bigamy. See BIGAMY.

By the papal canons, a clergyman, that has a wife, cannot have an ecclesiastical benefice; much less can a bigamist have such a benefice, according to that law.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

BI'GAMY. n. f. [bigamia, low Latin.]

1. The crime of having two wives at once.

A beauty-wining and distressed widow

Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts,

To base declension, and loath'd bigamy.

Shakesp. Richard III.

Randal determined to commence a suit against Martin, for bigamy and incest.

Arbuthnot and Pope's Martinus Scriblerus.

2. In the canon law. The marriage of a second wife, or of a widow, or a woman already debauched; which, in the church of Rome, were considered as bringing a man under some incapacities for ecclesiastical offices.

BIGBE'LLIED. adj. [from big and belly.] Pregnant; with child; great with young.

When we have laught to see the sails conceive,

And grow bigbellied with the wanton wind.

Shakesp. Midsummer Night's Dream.

Children, and bigbellied women require antidotes somewhat more grateful to the palate.

Harvey on the Plague.

So many well shaped innocent virgins are blocked up, and waddling up and down like bigbellied women.

Addison. Spect.

We pursued our march, to the terrour of the market people, and the miscarriage of half a dozen bigbellied women.

Addison's Freeholder.

BI'GGIN. n. f. [beguin, Fr.] A child's cap.

Sleep now!

Yet not so found, and half so deeply sweet,

As he, whose brow with homely biggin bound,

Snores out the watch of night.

Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.

BIGHT. n. f. It is explained by Skinner, the circumference of a coil of rope.

BI'GLY. adv. [from big.] Tumidly; haughtily; with a blustering manner.

Would'st thou not rather choose a small renown,

To be the may'r of some poor paltry town;

Bigly to look, and barb'rously to speak;

To pound false weights, and scanty measures break?

Dryden's Juvenal, sat. x.

BI'GNESS. n. f. [from big.]

1. Bulk; greatness of quantity.

If panicum be laid below, and about the bottom of a root, it will cause the root to grow to an excessive bigness.

Bacon.

People were surpris'd at the bigness, and uncouth deformity of the camel.

L'Estrange's Fables.

The brain of man, in respect of his body, is much larger than in any other animal's; exceeding in bigness three oxens brains.

Ray on the Creation.

2. Size; whether greater or smaller.

Several sorts of rays make vibrations of several bignesses, which, according to their bignesses, excite sensations of several colours; and the air, according to their bignesses, excites sensations of several sounds.

Newton's Opticks.

BI'GOT. n. f. [The etymology of this word is unknown; but it is supposed, by Camden and others, to take its rise from some occasional phrase.] A man devoted to a certain party; prejudiced in favour of certain opinions; a blind zealot. It is used often with to before the object of zeal; as, a bigot to the Cartesian tenets.

Religious spite, and pious spleen bred first

This quarrel, which so long the bigots nurs'd.

Tate. Juvenal.

In philosophy and religion, the bigots of all parties are generally the most positive.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

BI'GOTED. adj. [from bigot.] Blindly prepossessed in favour of something; irrationally zealous; with to.

Bigotted to this idol, we disclaim

Rest, health, and ease, for nothing but a name.

Garth.

Presbyterian merit, during the reign of that weak, bigotted, and ill advised prince, will easily be computed.

Swift.

BI'GOTRY. n. f. [from bigot.]

1. Blind zeal; prejudice; unreasonable warmth in favour of party or opinions; with the particle to.

Were it not for a bigotry to our own tenets, we could hardly imagine, that so many absurd, wicked, and bloody principles, should pretend to support themselves by the gospel.

Watts.

2. The practice or tenet of a bigot.

Our silence makes our adversaries think we persist in those bigotries, which all good and sensible men despise.

Pope.

BI'GSWOLN. adj. [from big and swoln.] Turgid; ready to burst. Might my bigswoln heart

Vent all its griefs, and give a loose to sorrow.

Addis. Cato.

BI'G-UDDERED. adj. [from big and udder.] Having large udders; having dugs swelled with milk.

Now driv'n before him, through the arching rock,

Came, tumbling heaps on heaps, th' unnumber'd flock,

Big-udder'd ewes, and goats of female kind.

Pope's Odyssey.

BI'LANDER. n. f. [belandre, Fr.] A small vessel of about eighty tons burden, used for the carriage of goods. It is a kind of hoy, manageable by four or five men, and has masts and sails after the manner of a hoy. They are used chiefly in Holland, as being particularly fit for the canals.

Savary. Trevaux.

Like bilanders to creep

Along the coast, and land in view to keep.

Dryden.

BI'LBERRY. n. f. [from bilg, Sax. a bladder, and berry; according to Skinner.] The same with whortleberry; which see.

Cricket, to Windfor chimneys shalt thou leap;

There pinch the maids as blue as bilberries.

Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

BI'LBO. n. f. [corrupted from Bilboa, where the best weapons are made.] A rapier; a sword.

To be compass'd like a good bilbo, in the circumference of a peck, hilt to point, heel to head.

Shakesp. M. W. of Windsor.

BI'LBOES. n. f. A sort of stocks, or wooden shekles for the feet, used for punishing offenders at sea.

Methought I lay,

Worse than the mutines, in the bilboes.

Shakesp. Hamlet.

BILE. n. f. [bilis, Lat.] A thick, yellow, bitter liquor, separated in the liver, collected in the gall-bladder, and discharged into the lower end of the duodenum, or beginning of the jejunum, by the common duct. Its use is to theathe or blunt the acids of the chyle; because they, being entangled with its sulphurs, thicken it so, that it cannot be sufficiently diluted by the fuccus pancreaticus, to enter the lacteal vessels.

Quincy.

In its progression, soon the labour'd chyle

Receives the confluent rills of bitter bile;

Which, by the liver sever'd from the blood,

And striving through the gall-pipe, here unload

Their yellow streams.

Blackmore.

BILE. n. f. [bile, Sax. perhaps from bilis, Lat. This is generally spelt boil; but, I think, less properly.] A sore angry swelling.

But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter;

Or, rather, a disease that's in my flesh;

Thou art a bile in my corrupted blood.

Shakesp. King Lear.

Those biles did run—say so—did not the general run? were not that a botchy sore?

Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

B I L

A furunculus is a painful tubercle, with a broad basis, arising in a cone. It is generally called a bile, and, in its state, is accompanied with inflammation, pulsation, and tension.

To BILK. v. a. [derived by Mr. Lye from the Gothick, bilai-can.] To cheat; to defraud, by running in debt, and avoiding payment.

Bilk'd stationers for yeomen stood prepar'd.

Dryden.

What comedy, what farce can more delight,

Than grinning hunger, and the pleasing sight

Of your bilk'd hopes?

Dryden's Juvenal, sat. v.

BILL. n. f. [bile, Sax. See BALL.] The beak of a fowl.

Their bills were thwarted crossways at the end, and, with these, they would cut an apple in two at one snap.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

It may be tried, whether birds may not be made to have greater or longer bills, or greater and longer talons.

Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup> 757.

In his bill

An olive leaf he brings, pacifick sign! Paradise Lost, b. xi.

No crowing cock does there his wings display,

Nor with his horny bill provoke the day. Dryden's Fables.

BILL. n. f. [bille, Sax. epibille, a two edged axe.]

1. A kind of hatchet with a hooked point, used in country work, as a hedging bill; so called from its resemblance in form to the beak of a bird of prey.

Standing troops are servants armed, who use the lance and sword, as other servants do the fickle, or the bill, at the command of those who entertain them.

Temple.

2. A kind of weapon anciently carried by the foot; a battle axe.

Yea distaff women manage rusty bills;

Against thy feat both young and old rebel, Shakesp. R. II.

BILL. n. f. [billet, French.]

1. A written paper of any kind.

He does receive

Particular addition from the bill

That writes them all alike.

Shakesp. Macbeth.

2. An account of money.

Ordinary expence ought to be limited by a man's estate, and ordered to the best, that the bills may be less than the estimation abroad.

Bacon's Essays.

3. A law presented to the parliament, not yet made an act.

No new laws can be made, nor old laws abrogated or altered, but by parliament; where bills are prepared, and presented to the two houses.

Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

How now, for mitigation of this bill,

Urg'd by the commons? Doth his majesty

Incline to it, or no?

Shakesp. Henry V.

4. An act of parliament.

There will be no way left for me to tell you, that I remember you, and that I love you; but that one, which needs no open warrant, or secret conveyance; which no bills can preclude, or no kings prevent.

Atterbury to Pope.

5. A physician's prescription.

Like him that took the doctor's bill,

And swallow'd it instead o' th' pill. Hudibras, p. i. cant. ii.

The medicine was prepar'd according to the bill.

L'Estrange, fab. 183:

Let them, but under your superiours, kill,

When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill.

Dryden.

6. An advertisement.

And in despair, their empty pit to fill,

Set up some foreign monster in a bill.

Dryden.

7. In law.

1. An obligation, but without condition or forfeiture for nonpayment. 2. A declaration in writing, that expresseth either the grief and the wrong, that the complainant hath suffered by the party complained of; or else some fault, that the party complained of, hath committed against some law. This bill is sometimes offered to justices errants in the general assizes; but most to the lord chancellor. It containeth the fact complained of, the damages thereby suffered, and petition of process against the defendant for redress.

B I L

Cowel.

The fourth thing very maturely to be consulted by the jury, is, what influence their finding the bill may have upon the kingdom.

Swift.

8. A bill of mortality. An account of the numbers that have died in any district.

Most who took in the weekly bills of mortality, made little other use of them, than to look at the foot, how the burials encreased or decreased.

Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

So liv'd our fires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,

And multiply'd with theirs the weekly bill.

Dryden.

9. A bill of fare. An account of the season of provisions, or of the dishes at a feast.

It may seem somewhat difficult to make out the bills of fare for some of the forementioned suppers.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

10. A bill of exchange. A note ordering the payment of a sum of money in one place, to some person assigned by the drawer or remitter, in consideration of the value paid to him in another place.

The comfortable sentences are our bills of exchange, upon the credit of which we lay our cares down, and receive provisions.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

All that a bill of exchange can do, is to direct to whom money is due, or taken up upon credit, in a foreign country, shall be paid.

Locke.

To BILL. v. n. [from bill, a beak.] To caress, as doves by joining bills; to be fond.

Doves, they say, will bill, after their pecking, and their murmuring.

Ben Johnson's Catiline.

Still amorous, and fond, and billing,

Like Philip and Mary on a shilling. Hudibras, p. iii. c. i.

They bill, they tread; Alcyone compress'd,

Seven days sits brooding on her floating nest.

Dryden.

He that bears th' artillery of Jove,

The strong pounc'd eagle, and the billing dove.

Dryden.

To BILL. v. a. [from bill, a writing.] To publish by an advertisement: a cant word.

Clarendon.

2. A ticket directing soldiers at what house to lodge.

3. Billet doux, or a soft billet; a love letter.

'Twas then, Belinda! if report say true,

Thy eyes first open'd on a billet doux. Pope's Rape of the L.

Bawds and pimps will be carrying about billet doux.

Arbuthnot and Pope's Martinus Scriblerus.

4. A small log of wood for the chimney.

Let us then calculate, when the bulk of a faggot or billet, is dilated and rarified to the degree of fire, how vast a place it must take up.

Digby on Bodies.

Their billet at the fire was found.

Prior.

To BILLET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To direct a soldier by a ticket, or note, where he is to lodge.

Retire thee; go where thou art billeted:

Away, I say.

Shakesp. Othello.

2. To quarter soldiers.

They remembered him of charging the kingdom, by billeting soldiers.

Raleigh's History of the World.

The counties throughout the kingdom were so incensed, and their affections poisoned, that they refused to suffer the soldiers to be billeted upon them.

Clarendon.

BILLIARDS. n. f. without a singular. [billard, Fr. of which that language has no etymology; and therefore they probably derived from England both the play and the name; which is corrupted from balyards; yards or sticks with which a ball is driven along a table. Thus Spenser:

Balyards much unfit,

And shuttlecocks misseeming manly wit.

Hubb. Tale.

A game at which a ball is forced against another on a table.

Let it alone; let's to billiards. Shakesp. Antony and Cleop.

Even nose and cheek, withal,

Smooth as is the billiard ball.

Ben. Johnson's Underwoods.

Some are forced to bound or fly upwards, almost like ivory balls meeting on a billiard table.

Boyle.

When the ball obeys the stroke of a billiard stick, it is not any action of the ball, but bare passion.

Locke.

BILLOW. n. f. [bilge, Germ. bolg, Dan. probably of the same original with bilg, Sax. a bladder.] A wave swollen, and hollow.

From whence the river Dee, as silver cleen,

His tumbling billows roll with gentle rore. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Billows sink by degrees, even when the wind is down that first stirred them.

Wotton.

Chasing Nereus with his trident throws

The billows from the bottom.

Sir J. Denham.

But when loud billows lash the sounding shore,

The hoarse rough verse should like the torrent roar. Pope.

To

To BILLOW. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell, or roll, as a wave.

The billowing snow, and violence of the show'r,
That from the hills disperse their dreadful store,
And o'er the vales collected ruin pour. Prior.

BILLOWY. adj. [from billow.] Swelling; turgid; wavy.
And whitening down the mossy-tinctur'd stream,
Descends the billowy foam. Thomson's Spring, l. 380.

BIN. n. f. [binne, Sax.] A place where bread, or corn, or wine, is reposit.

The most convenient way of picking hops, is into a long square frame of wood, called a bin. Mortimer's Husbandry.

As when from rooting in a bin,
All powder'd o'er from tail to chin,
A lively maggot fallies out,
You know him by his hazel finout. Swift.

BI'NARY. adj. [from binus, Lat.] Two; dual; double.

BI'NARY Arithmetick. A method of computation proposed by Mr. Leibnitz, in which, in lieu of the ten figures in the common arithmetick, and the progression from ten to ten, he has only two figures, and uses the simple progression from two to two. This method appears to be the same with that used Chinese four thousand years ago. Chambers.

To BIND. v. a. pret. I bound; particip. pass. bound, or bounden. [binban, Saxon.]

1. To confine with bonds; to enchain.

Wilt thou play with him as with a bird? or wilt thou bind him for thy maidens? Job, xli. 5.

2. To gird; to enwrap; to involve.

Who hath bound the waters in a garment. Prov. xxx. 4.

3. To fasten to any thing.

Thou shalt bind this line of scarlet thread in the window, which thou didst let us down by. Joshua, ii. 18.

Keep my commandments, and live: and my law, as the apple of thine eye. Bind them upon thy fingers, write them upon the table of thine heart. Prov. vii. 3, 4.

4. To fasten together.

Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles, to burn them. Matt. xiii. 20.

5. To cover a wound with dressings and bandages.

When he saw him, he had compassion on him, and went to him, and bound up his wounds. Luke, x. 34.

Having filled up the bared cranium with our dressings, we bound up the wound. Wise man's Surgery.

6. To compel; to constrain.

Those canons, or imperial constitutions, which have not been received here, do not bind. Hale's Common Law of Engl.

7. To oblige by stipulation, or oath.

If a man vow a vow, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond, he shall not break his word. Numbers, xxx. 2.

Swear by the solemn oath, that binds the gods. Pope.

8. To oblige by duty or law.

Though I am bound to every act of duty,

I am not bound to that, all slaves are free to. Shakesp. Othello.

Duties expressly required in the plain language of Scripture, ought to bind our consciences more than those which are but dubiously inferred. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

9. To oblige by kindness.

10. To confine; to hinder.

Now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in

To faucy doubts and fears. Shakesp. Macbeth.

You will sooner, by imagination, bind a bird from singing, than from eating or flying. Bacon's Natural Hist. N° 989.

Though passion be the most obvious and general, yet it is not the only cause that binds up the understanding, and confines it, for the time, to one object, from which it will not be taken off. Locke.

In such a dismal place,

Where joy ne'er enters, which the sun ne'er cheers,
Bound in with darkness, overspread with damps. Dryden.

11. To hinder the flux of the bowels; to make costive.

Rhubarb hath manifestly in it parts of contrary operations; parts that purge, and parts that bind the body. Bacon.

The whey of milk doth loose, the milk doth bind. Herbert.

12. To restrain.

The more we are bound up to an exact narration, we want more life, and fire, to animate and inform the story. Felton.

13. To bind a book. To put it in a cover.

Was ever book, containing such vile matter,
So fairly bound? Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

Those who could never read the grammar,
When my dear volumes touch the hammer,
May think books best, as richest bound. Prior.

14. To bind to. To oblige to serve some one.

If still thou do'st retain

The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryden's Pers.

15. To bind to. To contract with any body.

Art thou bound to a wife? seek not to be loosed. I Cor. vii.

16. To bind over. To oblige to make appearance.

Sir Roger was staggered with the reports concerning this woman, and would have bound her over to the country sessions. Aldison. Spectator, N° 117.

To BIND. v. n.

1. To contract the parts together; to grow stiff and hard.

If the land rise full of clots, and if it is a binding land, you must make it fine by harrowing of it. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. To make costive.

3. To be obligatory.

The promises and bargains for truck, between a Swiss and an Indian, in the woods of America, are binding to them, though they are perfectly in a state of nature, in reference to one another. Locke.

BIND. n. f. A species of hops.

The two best sorts are the white and the grey bind; the latter is a large square hop, and more hardy. Mortimer.

BI'NDER. n. f. [from to bind.]

1. A man whose trade it is to bind books.

2. A man that binds sheaves.

Three binders stood, and took the handfuls reapt

From boys that gather'd quickly up. Chapman's Iliads.

A man, with a binder, may reap an acre of wheat in a day, if it stand well. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. A fillet; a shred cut to bind with.

Upon that I laid a double cloth, of such length and breadth as might serve to encompass the fractured member; which I cut from each end to the middle, into three binders. Wise man.

BI'NDING. n. f. [from bind.] A bandage.

This beloved young woman began to take off the binding of his eyes. Tattler, N° 55.

BI'NDWEED. n. f. [convolvulus, Lat.] The name of a plant.

It hath, for the most part, trailing stalks; the leaves grow alternately on the branches; the flower consists of one leaf, shaped like a bell, whose mouth is widely expanded; the ovary becomes a roundish membranous fruit, wrapped up within the flower cup; and is generally divided into three cells, each containing one angular seed. The species are thirty six. 1. The common white great bindweed, vulgarly called bearbind. 2. Lesser field bindweed, with a rose coloured flower, vulgarly called gravelbind. 3. Common sea bindweed, with round leaves. 4. Great American bindweed, with spacious yellow sweet scented flowers, commonly called Spanish arbour vine, or Spanish woodbine. 5. White and yellow Spanish potatoes. 6. Red Spanish potatoes. 7. The jalap, &c. The first of these species is a very troublesome weed in gardens; and the second sort is still a worse weed than the former. The third sort is found upon gravelly or sandy shores, where the salt water overflows: this is a strong purge, and, as such, is often used in medicine. The fourth sort is common in the hot parts of America, and is planted to cover arbours and seats: one of these plants will grow to the length of sixty or an hundred feet, and produce great quantities of side branches, and large fragrant yellow flowers, succeeded by three large angular seeds. The two kinds of potatoes are much cultivated in the West Indies, for food; and, from the roots, a drink is made, called mobby, stronger or weaker: it is a sprightly liquor, but not subject to fly into the head; nor will it keep beyond four or five days. These roots have been brought from America, and are cultivated in Spain and Portugal; but, in general, they are not so well liked as the common potato, being too sweet and luscious. The jalap, whose root has been long used in medicine, is a native of the province of Italapa, about two days journey from La Vera Cruz. Millar.

Bindweed is of two sorts, the larger and the smaller; the first sort flowers in September, and the last in June and July.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

BI'NOCLE. n. f. [from binus and oculus.] A kind of dioptrick telescope, fitted so with two tubes joining together in one, as that a distant object may be seen with both eyes together. Harris.

BINO'CLAR. adj. [from binus and oculus, Lat.] Having two eyes.

Most animals are binocular, spiders, for the most part, octonocular, and some senocular. Derham's Physico-Theology.

BINO'MIAL Root. [in algebra.] A root composed of only two parts or members, connected with the signs plus or minus. Harris.

BINO'MINOUS. adj. [from binus and nomen, Lat.] Having two names.

BIO'GRAPHER. n. f. [βίος and γραφω.] A writer of lives; a relator not of the history of nations, but of the actions of particular persons.

Our Grubstreet biographers watch for the death of a great man, like so many undertakers, on purpose to make a penny of him. Addison. Freeholder, N° 35.

BIO'GRAPHY. n. f. [βίος and γραφω.]

In writing the lives of men, which is called biography, some authors place every thing in the precise order of time when it occurred. Watts's Logick.

BI'OVAC. } n. f. [Fr. from wey wach, a double guard, Germ.

BI'HOVAC. } in war.] A guard at night performed by the whole

BI'VOUAC. } army; which, either at a siege, or lying before an enemy, every evening draws out from its tents or huts, and continues all night in arms before its lines or camp, to prevent any surprise. To raise the biovac, is to return the army to their tents at break of day. Trevoux. Harris.

BI'PAROUS.

B I R

BI'PAROUS. adj. [from binus and pario, Lat.] Bringing forth two at a birth.

BI'PARTITE. adj. [from binus and partior, Lat.] Having two correspondent parts; divided into two.

BIPARTITION. n. f. [from bipartite.] The act of dividing into two; or of making two correspondent parts.

BI'PED. n. f. [bipes, Lat.] An animal with two feet.
No serpent, or fishes oviparous, have any stones at all; neither biped nor quadruped oviparous, have any exteriorly.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 4.

BI'PEDAL. adj. [bipedalis, Lat.] Two feet in length; or having two feet.

BIPE'NNATED. adj. [from binus and penna, Lat.] Having two wings.
All bipennated insects have poises joined to the body.
Derham's Physico-Theology.

BIPE'TALOUS. adj. [of bis, Lat. and πτελον.] A flower consisting of two leaves. Dict.

BI'QUADRATE. } n. f. [in algebra.] The fourth power, arising BIQUADRA'TICK. } from the multiplication of a square number, or quantity by itself. Harris.

BIRCH Tree. [byn, Sax. betula, Lat.]
The leaves are like those of the poplar; the shoots are very slender and weak; the katkins are produced at remote distances from the fruits, on the same tree; the fruit becomes a little squamose cone; the seeds are winged, and the tree casts its outer rind every year. This tree is propagated by suckers, which may be transplanted either in October or February; it delights in a poor soil. The timber of this tree is used to make chairs, &c. It is also planted for hop poles, hoops, &c. and it is often used to make brooms. Millar.

BI'RCHEN. adj. [from birch.] Made of birch.
His beaver'd brow a birchen garland bears. Dunciad, b. iv.

BIRD. n. f. [byrd, or byrd, a chicken, Saxon.] A general term for the feathered kind; a fowl. In common talk, fowl is used for the larger, and bird for the smaller kind of feathered animals.
The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl. Macbeth.
Sh' had all the regal makings of a queen;
As holy oil, Edward confessor's crown,
The rod and bird of peace, and all such emblems,
Laid nobly on her. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
The bird of Jove, stoop'd from his airy tour,
Two birds of gayest plume before him drove.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 186.
Hence men and beasts the breath of life obtain,
And birds of air, and monsters of the main. Dryden's Æn.
There are some birds that are inhabitants of the water, whose blood is cold as fishes, and their flesh is so like in taste, that the scrupulous are allowed them on fish days. Locke.
Some squire perhaps you take delight to rack,
Who visits with a gun, presents with birds. Pope.

TO BIRD. v. n. [from the noun.] To catch birds.
I do invite you tomorrow morning to my house, to breakfast; after, we'll a birding together. Shakefp. M. W. of Windsf.

BI'RDBOLT. n. f. [from bird and bolt, or arrow.] A small shot, or arrow, to be shot at birds.
To be generous, guileless, and of free disposition, is to take those things for birdbolts, that you deem cannon bullets.
Shakefp. Twelfth Night.

BI'RDCAGE. n. f. [from bird and cage. See CAGE.]
Birdcages taught him the pulley, and tops the centrifugal force. Arbutnot and Pope's Martinus Scriblerus.

BI'RDCATCHER. n. f. [from bird and catch.] One that makes it his employment to take birds.
A poor lark entered into a miserable expostulation with a birdcatcher, that had taken her in his net. L'Estrange.

BI'RDER. n. f. [from bird.] A birdcatcher.

BI'RDING PIECE. n. f. [from bird and piece.] A fowling piece; a gun to shoot birds with.
I'll creep up into the chimney.—There they always use to discharge their birding pieces; creep into the kill hole.
Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

BI'RDLINE. n. f. [from bird and lime.] A glutinous substance, which is spread upon twigs, by which the birds that light upon them are entangled.
Birdlime is made of the bark of holly, boiled for ten or twelve hours; and when the green coat is separated from the other, they cover it up for a fortnight, in a moist place, and pound it into a tough paste, that no fibres of the wood be left; then it is washed in a running stream, till no motes appear, and put up to ferment for four or five days, and scummed as often as any thing arises, and then laid up for use; at which time they incorporate with it a third part of nut oil, over the fire. The birdlime brought from Damascus is supposed to be made of febestens, the kernels being frequently found in it; but this will not endure the frost or wet. That brought from Spain is of an ill smell; but the bark of our lantone, or wayfaring shrub, will make very good birdlime. Chambers.

B I R

Holly is of so viscous a juice, as they make birdlime of the bark of it. Bacon's Natural History, N° 592.

With stores of gather'd glue, contrive
To stop the vents and crannies of their hive;
Not birdlime, or Idean pitch, produce
A more tenacious mass of clammy juice. Dryden's Virgil.
I'm ensnar'd;
Heav'n's birdlime wraps me round, and glues my wings.
Dryden's King Arthur.

The woodpecker, and other birds of this kind, because they prey upon flies which they catch with their tongue, have a couple of bags filled with a viscous humour, as if it were a natural birdlime, or liquid glue.
Grew's Cosmologia Sacra, b. i. c. 5.

BI'RDMAN. n. f. [from bird and man.] A birdcatcher; a fowler.
As a fowler was bending his net, a blackbird asked him what he was doing; why, says he, I am laying the foundations of a city; and so the birdman drew out of sight. L'Estrange.

BI'RDSEYE. n. f. [Adonis, Lat.] The name of a plant.
The leaves are like fennel or chamomile; the flowers consist of many leaves, which are expanded in form of a rose; the seeds are collected into oblong heads. The species are, 1. The common red birds eye. 2. The long leaved yellow birds eye, &c. The first sort is found in open borders, as an annual flower plant. The yellow sort is uncommon in England. Millar.

BI'RDSFOOT. [ornithopodium, Lat.] The name of a plant.
It has a papilionaceous flower; the ovary, which rises out of the flower cup, afterwards becomes a pod, sometimes distinguished into bells by transverse partitions, full of seeds, for the most part roundish; the leaves grow by threes, but have two wings, or little leaves, at the origin of their foot stalks. The species are, 1. The tallest hairy birdsfoot trefoil, with a glomerated flower. 2. Upright hoary birdsfoot trefoil, &c. The first of these plants is, by some, supposed to be the cytisus of Virgil; it dies to the ground with us every winter, and rises again the succeeding spring; and, when the roots are strong, the shoots will rise to four or five feet high, and produce flowers in great plenty; if it be cut while young, the cows are very fond of it, but horses will not eat it, unless they are very hungry. Millar.

BI'RDSNEST. n. f. An herb. Dict.

BI'RDSTONGUE. n. f. An herb. Dict.

BI'RGANDER. n. f. A fowl of the goose kind. Dict.

BIRT. n. f. A fish; the same with the turbot; which see.

BIRTH. n. f. [beorþ, Sax.]
1. The act of coming into life.
But thou art fair, and, at thy birth, dear boy,
Nature and fortune join'd to make thee great. Shakefp. K. J.
In Spain, our springs like old mens children be,
Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy;
No kindly showers fall on our barren earth,
To hatch the seasons in a timely birth. Dryden.

2. Extraction; lineage.
Most virtuous virgin, born of heav'nly birth. Fairy Q.
All truth I shall relate: nor first can I Myself to be of Grecian birth deny. Sir J. Denham.

3. Rank which is inherited by descent.
He doth object, I am too great of birth.
Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
Be just in all you say, and all you do;
Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be
A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden's Juvenal.

4. The condition, or circumstances, in which any man is born.
High in his chariot then Halesus came,
A foe by birth to Troy's unhappy name. Dryden's Virgil.

5. Thing born; production.
The people fear me; for they do observe Unfather'd heirs and loathly births of nature. Shakefp. H. IV.
That poets are far rarer births than kings,
Your noblest father prov'd. Ben. Johnson's Epigrams.
Who of themselves
Abhor to join: and, by imprudence mix'd,
Produce prodigious births, of body, or mind.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 687.
She, for this many thousand years,
Seems to have practis'd with much care,
To frame the race of woman fair;
Yet never could a perfect birth
Produce before, to grace the earth. Waller.
His eldest birth
Flies, mark'd by heav'n, a fugitive o'er earth. Prior.
The vallies smile, and, with their flow'ry face,
And wealthy births, confess the flood's embrace. Blackmore.
Others hatch their eggs, and tend the birth, till it is able to Shift for itself. Addison's Spectator, N° 120.

6. The act of bringing forth.
That fair Syrian shepherdess,
Who after years of barrenness,
The highly favour'd Joseph bore
To him that serv'd for her before;

And at her next birth, much like thee,
Through pangs fled to felicity.

Milton.

7. The seamen call a due or proper distance between ships lying at an anchor, or under sail, a birth. Also the proper place aboard for a masts to put their chefts, &c. is called the birth of that masts. Also a convenient place to moor a ship in, is called a birth.

Harris.

BI'RTHDAY. n. f. [from birth and day.]

1. The day on which any one is born.

Orient light,

Exhaling first from darkness, they beheld

Birthday of heaven and earth. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

2. The day of the year in which any one was born, annually observed.

This is my birthday; as this very day

Was Cassius born.

Shakefp. Julius Cæsar.

They tell me, 'tis my birthday, and I'll keep it

With double pomp of sadness:

'Tis what the day deserves, which gave me breath. Dryden.

Your country dames,

Whose cloaths returning birthday claims.

Prior.

BI'RTHDOM. n. f. [This is erroneously, I think, printed in Shakespeare, birthdom. It is derived from birth and dom. See Dom; as kingdom, dukedom.] Privilege of birth.

Let it rather

Hold fast the mortal sword; and, like good men,

Bestride our downfaln birthdom.

Shakefp. Macbeth.

BI'RTHNIGHT. n. f. [from birth and night.]

1. The night in which any one is born.

Th' angelick song in Bethlehem field,

On thy birthnight, that sung the Saviour born. Par. Regain.

2. The night annually kept in memory of any one's birth.

A youth more glittering than a birthnight beau.

Pope.

BI'RTHPPLACE. n. f. [from birth and place.] Place where any one is born.

My birthplace have I and my lovers left;

This enemy's town I'll enter.

Shakefp. Coriolanus.

A degree of stupidity beyond even what we have been ever charged with, upon the score of our birthplace and climate.

Swift's Address to Parliament.

BI'RTHRIGHT. n. f. [from birth and right.] The rights and privileges to which a man is born; the right of the first born.

Thy blood and virtue

Contend for empire in thee, and thy goodness

Shares with thy birthright. Shakefp. All's well that ends well.

And hast been found

By merit, more than birthright, Son of God.

Milton's Parad. Lost, b. iii. l. 308.

I lov'd her first, I cannot quit the claim,

But will preserve the birthright of my passion. Otway's Orph.

While no baseness in this breast I find,

I have not lost the birthright of my mind. Dryden's Aurengz.

To say, that liberty and property are the birthright of the English nation, but that if a prince invades them by illegal methods, we must upon no pretence resist, is to confound governments.

Addison's Whig Examiner.

BIRTHSTRANGL'D. adj. [from birth and strangle.] Strangled or suffocated in being born.

Finger of birthstrangl'd babe,

Ditch deliver'd by a drab.

Shakefp. Macbeth.

BI'RTHWORT. n. f. [from birth and wort; I suppose from a quality of hastening delivery. Aristolochia, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The stalks are flexible; the leaves are placed alternately on the branches; the flowers consist of one leaf, are of an anomalous figure, hollowed like a pipe, and shaped like a tongue, generally hooked; the flower cup turns to a membrane, oval shaped fruit, divided into five cells, and full of flat seeds. The species are, 1. The round rooted birthwort. 2. The climbing birthwort. 3. Spanish birthwort, &c. The first and second are sometimes used in medicine, and are easily propagated by parting their roots.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 5.

BI'SECTION. n. f. [from the verb.] A geometrical term, signifying the division of any quantity into two equal parts.

BI'SHOP. n. f. [from episcopus, Lat. the Saxons formed biscop, which was afterwards softened into bishop.] One of the head order of the clergy.

A bishop is an overseer, or superintendant, of religious matters in the christian church.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

You shall find him well accompany'd

With reverend fathers, and well learned bishops.

Shakefp. Richard III.

Their zealous superstition thinks, or pretends, they cannot do God a greater service, than to destroy the primitive, apostolical, and anciently universal government of the church by bishops.

K. Charles.

In case a bishop should commit treason and felony, and forfeit his estate, with his life, the lands of his bishoprick remain still in the church.

South.

On the word bishop, in French evêque, I would observe, that there is no natural connexion between the sacred office and the letters or sound; for evêque, and bishop, signify the same office, though there is not one letter alike in them.

Watts's Logic.

BI'SHOP. n. f. A cant word for a mixture of wine, oranges, and sugar.

Fine oranges,

Well roasted, with sugar and wine in a cup;

They'll make a sweet bishop, when gentle folks sup. Swift.

To BI'SHOP. v. a. [from the noun.] To confirm; to admit solemnly into the church.

They are prophane, imperfect, oh! too bad,

Except confirm'd and bishoped by thee.

Donne.

BI'SHOPRICK. n. f. [biscoprice, Saxon.] The diocese of a bishop; the district over which the jurisdiction of a bishop extends.

It will be fit, that, by the king's supreme power in causes ecclesiastical, they be subordinate under some bishop, and bishoprick, of this realm.

Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

A virtuous woman should reject marriage, as a good man does a bishoprick; but I would advise neither to persist in refusing.

Addison. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup> 89.

Those pastors had episcopal ordination, possessed preferences in the church, and were sometimes promoted to bishopricks themselves. Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of E. man.

BI'SHOPSWOED. [Ammi, Lat.] The name of a plant.

This is an umbelliferous weed, with small striated seeds; the petals of the flowers are unequal, and shaped like a heart. The seeds of the greater bishopswweed are used in medicine, and should be sown in an open situation, early in the spring.

Mill.

BISK. n. f. [bisque, Fr.] Soup; broth made by boiling several sorts of flesh.

A prince, who in a forest rides astray,

And, weary, to some cottage finds the way,

Talks of no pyramids, or fowl, or bisks of fish,

But hungry sups his cream serv'd up in earthen dish.

King's Art of Cookery.

BI'SKET. See BISCUIT.

BI'SMUTH. n. f. The same as marcasite; it properly signifies a hard, white, brittle, mineral substance, of a metalline nature, found at Misnia; though supposed to be only a recementitious matter thrown off in the formation of tin, as unfit to enter its composition. There are some, however, who esteem it a metal sui generis; though it usually contains some silver. There is an artificial bismuth made, for the shops, of tin.

Quincy.

BI'SSEXTILE. n. f. [from bis, and sextilis, Lat.] Leap year; the year in which the day, arising from six odd hours in each year, is intercalated.

The year of the sun consisteth of three hundred and sixty five days and six hours, wanting eleven minutes; which six hours omitted, will, in time, deprave the compute; and this was the occasion of bissextile, or leap year.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 12.

Towards the latter end of February is the bissextile or intercalary day; called bissextile, because the sixth of the calends of March is twice repeated.

Holder on Time.

BI'SSON. adj. [derived by Skinner from by and sin.] Blind.

But who, oh! who hath seen the mobled queen,

Run barefoot up and down, threat'ning the flames

With bisson rheum.

Shakefp. Hamlet.

What harm can your bisson conspectivities glean out of this character.

Shakefp. Coriolanus.

- To BLAB. v. a. [blabberen, Dutch.]
1. To tell what ought to be kept secret; it usually implies rather thoughtlessness than treachery; but may be used in either sense.
The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day,
Is crept into the bosom of the sea. Shakesp. Henry VI.
Thy dues be done, and none left out,
Ere the blabbing eastern scout
The nice morn on the Indian steep,
From her cabin'd loophole peep.
Nature has made man's breast no windores,
To publish what he does within doors;
Nor what dark secrets there inhabit,
Unless his own rash folly blab it. Hudibras, p. ii. c. ii.
Sorrow nor joy can be disguis'd by art,
Our foreheads blab the secrets of our heart. Dryden's Juv.

That huge great body which the giant bore,
Was vanquish'd quite, and of that monstrous mass

Was nothing left, but like an empty bladder was. Fairy Q.

A bladder but moderately filled with air, and strongly tied, being held near the fire, grew exceeding turgid and hard; but afterwards being brought nearer to the fire, it suddenly broke, with so loud a noise as made us for a while after almost deaf. Boyle.

3. It is usual for those that learn to swim, to support themselves with blown bladders.

I have ventur'd,

Like little wanton boys, that swim on bladders,
These many summers, in a sea of glory;

But far beyond my depth: my highblown pride
At length broke under me. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

4. A blister; a pustule.

BLA'DDER-NUT. n. f. [staphylodendron, Lat.] A plant.

The flower consists of several leaves, which are placed circularly, and expand in form of a rose; out of whose many headed flower cup rises the pointal, which becomes a membranaceous fruit, somewhat like the inflated bladder of fishes, and divided into two or three cells, containing seeds in form of a scull.

The species are, 1. The common wild bladder-nut. 2. Three leaved Virginian bladder-nut. 3. Bladder-nut, with single shining leaves. 4. Bladder-nut, with narrow bay leaves. 5. Three leaved American bladder-nut, with cut leaves. The first of these trees is found wild in the woods, and other shady places, in the northern parts of England. The second sort is a native of America, but is so hardy as to endure the severest cold of our climate, in the open air. Both these kinds may be propagated, by sowing their seeds early in the spring. They will commonly grow in England to the height of twelve or fourteen feet. Mill.

BLA'DDER-SENA. n. f. [colutea, Lat.] The name of a plant.

It hath a papilionaceous flower, succeeded by pods, resembling the inflated bladder of fishes, in which are contained several kidney shaped seeds. The species are five. These shrubs grow to the height of eight or ten feet; and, among flowering trees,

trees, the oddness of their flowers and pods will make a pretty variety. Millar.

BLADE. n. f. [blæd, bleb, Sax. bled, Fr.] The spire of grass before it grows to seed; the green shoots of corn which rise from the seed. This seems to me the primitive signification of the word blade; from which, I believe, the blade of a sword was first named, because of its similitude in shape; and, from the blade of a sword, that of other weapons or tools.

There is hardly found a plant that yieldeth a red juice in the blade or ear, except it be the tree that beareth sanguis draconis. Bacon.

Sends in his feeding flocks betimes, t' invade
The rising bulk of the luxuriant blade. Dryden's Georg.

If we were able to dive into her secret recesses, we should find that the smallest blade of grass, or most contemptible weed, has its particular use. Swift on the Faculties of the Mind.

Hung on every spray, on every blade
Of grass, the myriad dewdrops twinkle round. Thomson.

BLADE. n. f. [blatte, Germ. blad, Dutch.]

1. The sharp or striking part of a weapon or instrument, distinct from the handle. It is usually taken for a weapon, and so called probably from the likeness of a sword blade to a blade of grass.

He fought all round about, his thirsty blade
To bathe in blood of faithless enemy. Fairy Queen, b. i.

She knew the virtue of her blade, nor would Pollute her fabre with ignoble blood. Dryden's Hind and P.

Be his this sword, whose blade of brass displays
A ruddy gleam; whose hilt a silver blaze. Pope.

2. A brisk man, either fierce or gay, called so in contempt. So we say mettle for courage.

You'll find yourself mistaken, Sir, if you'll take upon you to judge of these blades by their garbs, looks, and outward appearance. L'Estrange.

Then turning about to the hangman, he said,
Dispatch me, I pri'thee, this troublesome blade. Prior.

BLADE of the Shoulder. } n. f. The bone called by anatomists the BLA'DEBONE. } scapula, or scapular bone.

He fell most furiously on the broiled relics of a shoulder of mutton, commonly called a bladebone. Pope.

TO BLADE. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish, or fit with a blade.

BLA'DED. adj. [from blade.] Having blades or spires.

Her silver visage in the wat'ry glass,
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass. Shakesp. Midsummer Night's Dream.

As where the lightning runs along the ground,
Nor bladed grass, nor bearded corn succeeds,
But scales of scurf and putrefaction breeds. Dryden.

BLAIN. n. f. [blegene, Sax. bleyne, Dutch.] A pustule; a botch; a blister.

Itches, blains,
Sow all th' Athenian bosoms, and the crop
Be general leprosy. Shakesp. Timon.

Botches and blains must all his flesh imbosh,
And all his people. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii. l. 180.

Whene'er I hear a rival nam'd,
I feel my body all inflam'd;
Which breaking out in boils and blains,
With yellow filth my linen stains. Swift.

BLA'MABLE. adj. [from blame.] Culpable; faulty.

Virtue is placed between two extremes, which are on both sides equally blamable. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

BLA'MABLENESS. n. f. [from blamable.] Fault; the state of being liable to blame.

BLA'MABLY. adv. [from blamable.] Culpable; in a manner liable to censure.

A process may be carried on against a person, that is maliciously or blamably absent, even to a definitive sentence. Ayliffe.

TO BLAME. v. a. [blamer, Fr.]

1. To censure; to charge with a fault: it generally implies a slight censure.

Our pow'r
Shall do a court'fy to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not controul. Shakesp. King Lear.

Porphyrius, you too far did tempt your fate;
'Tis true, your duty to me it became;
But praising that, I must your conduct blame. Dryden's Tyrannick Love.

Each finding, like a friend,
Something to blame, and something to commend. Pope.

2. To blame has usually the particle for before the fault.

The reader must not blame me for making use here, all along of the word sentiment. Locke.

3. Sometimes, but rarely, of.

Tomoreus he blam'd of inconsiderate rashness, for that he would busy himself in matters not belonging to his vocation. Knolles's History of the Turks.

BLAME. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Fault; imputation of a fault.

In arms, the praise of success is shared amongst many; yet the blame of misadventures is charged upon one. Sir J. Hayward.

They lay the blame on the poor little ones, sometimes passionately enough, to divert it from themselves. Locke.

2. Crime; that which produces or deserves censure.

Who would not judge us to be discharged of all blame, which are confest to have no great fault, even by their very word and testimony, in whose eyes no fault of ours hath ever hitherto been accustomed to seem small. Hooker, b. v. § 27.

I unspeak mine own detraction; here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. Shakesp. Macbeth.

3. Hurt.

Therewith upon his crest,
With rigour so outrageous he smit,
That a large share it hew'd out of the rest,
And glancing down his shield, from blame him fairly blest. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. ii. stanza. 18.

4. There is a peculiar structure of this word, in which it is not very evident whether it be a noun or a verb; but I conceive it to be the noun. To blame, in French, à tort.

You were to blame, I must be plain with you,
To part so slightly with your wife's first gift. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

I do not ask whether they were mistaken; but, on supposition they were not, whether they were to blame in the manner. Stillingsfleet.

Now we should hold them much to blame,
If they went back before they came. Prior.

BLA'MEFUL. adj. [from blame and full.] Criminal; guilty; meriting blame.

Is not the causer of these timeless deaths,
As blameful as the executioner? Shakesp. Richard III.

Bluntwitted lord, ignoble in demeanour,
If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much,
Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untutor'd churl. Shakesp. Henry VI. p. ii.

BLA'MELESS. adj. [from blame.]

1. Guiltless; innocent; exempt from censure or blame.

She found out the righteous, and preserved him blameless unto God. Wisdom, x. 5.

The flames ascend on either altar clear,
While thus the blameless maid address'd her pray'r. Dryden.

Such a lessening of our coin will deprive great numbers of blameless men, of a fifth part of their estates. Locke.

2. Sometimes it is used with of.

We will be blameless of this thine oath. Josiah, ii. 17.

BLA'MELESSLY. adv. [from blameless.] Innocently; without crime.

It is the wilful opposing explicit articles, and not the not believing them when not revealed, or not with that conviction, against which he cannot blamelessly, without pertinacy, hold out, that will bring danger of ruin on any. Hammond's Fundamentals.

BLA'MELESSNESS. n. f. [from blameless.] Innocence; exemption from censure.

Having resolved, with him in Homer, that all is chargeable on Jupiter and fate, they infer, with him, the blamelessness of the inferiour agent. Hammond's Fundamentals.

BLA'MER. n. f. [from blame.] One that blames or finds fault; a censurer.

In me you've hallowed a pagan muse,
And denizon'd a stranger, who, mistaught
By blamers of the times they marr'd, hath fought Virtues in corners. Donne.

BLAMEWORTHY. adj. [from blame and worthy.] Culpable; blameable; worthy of blame or censure.

Although the same should be blameworthy, yet this age hath reasonably well forborn to incur the danger of any such blame. Hooker, b. v. § 12.

TO BLANCH. v. a. [blanchir, Fr.]

1. To whiten; to change from some other colour to white.

You can behold such fights,
And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks,
When mine is blanch'd with fear. Shakesp. Macbeth.

A way of whitening wax cheaply may be of use; and we have set down the practice of tradesmen who blanch it. Boyle.

And fin's black dye seems blanch'd by age to virtue. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

Acts, xxvi. 11.

BLASPHE'MER. n. f. [from blaspheme.] A wretch that speaks of God in impious and irreverent terms.

Who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious.

1 Tim. i. 13.

Even that blasphemer himself would inwardly reverence him, as he in his heart really despises him for his cowardly base silence.

South.

Deny the curst blasphemer's tongue to rage,

And turn God's fury from an impious age.

Tickell.

Should each blasphemer quite escape the rod,

Because the insult's not to man, but God.

Pope.

BLASPHEMOUS. adj. [from blaspheme.] It is usually spoken with the accent on the first syllable, but used by Milton with it on the second.] Impiously irreverent with regard to God.

O man, take heed how thou the gods do move,

To cause full wrath, which thou canst not resist;

Blasphemous words the speaker vain do prove. Sidney, b. ii.

And dar'st thou to the Son of God propound,

To worship thee accurs'd; now more accurs'd

For this attempt, bolder than that on Eve,

And more blasphemous? Milton's Paradise Regained, b. iii.

A man can hardly pass the streets, without having his ears grated with such horrid and blasphemous oaths and curses. Tillot.

That any thing that wears the name of a christian, or but of man,

man, should venture to own such a villainous, impudent, and blasphemous assertion in the face of the world, as this! South.
BLASPHEMOUSLY. adv. [from blaspheme.] Impiously; with wicked irreverence.

Where is the right use of his reason, while he would blasphemously set up to controul the commands of the Almighty? Swift.
BLASPHEMY. n. f. [from blaspheme.]

Blasphemy, strictly and properly, is an offering of some indignity, or injury, unto God himself, either by words or writing. Ayliffe's Parergon.

But that my heart's on future mischief set,
 I would speak blasphemy, ere bid you fly;
 But fly you must. Shakesp. Henry VI. p. ii.
 Intrinick goodness consists in accordance, and sin in contrariety, to the secret will of God; or else God could not be defined good, so far as his thoughts and secrets, but only superficially good, as far as he is pleased to reveal himself, which is perfect blasphemy to imagine. Hammond's Fundamentals.

BLAST. n. f. [from blæȝe, Saxon; blasen, Germ. to blow.]

1. A gust, or puff of wind.
 They that stand high, have many blasts to shake them;
 And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces. Shakesp. Richard III.

Welcome, then,
 Thou unsubstantial air, that I embrace;
 The wretch that thou hast blown unto the worst,
 Owes nothing to thy blasts. Shakesp. King Lear.
 Perhaps thy fortune doth controul the winds,
 Doth loose or bind their blasts in secret cave. Fairfax, b. i.
 Three ships were hurry'd by the southern blast,
 And on the secret shelves with fury cast. Dryden's Æneid.
 2. The sound made by blowing any instrument of wind musick.
 In peace there's nothing so becomes a man,
 As modest stillness and humility;
 But when the blast of war blows in our ears,
 Then imitate the action of the tyger. Shakesp. Henry V.
 He blew his trumpet—the angelick blast
 Fill'd all the regions. Milt. Par. Lost, b. xi. l. 76.
 The Veline fountains, and sulphureous Nar,
 Shake at the baleful blast, the signal of the war. Dryden's Æn.
 Whether there be two different goddesses called Fame, or one goddess sounding two different trumpets, it is certain, villainy has as good a title to a blast from the proper trumpet, as virtue has from the former. Swift.

3. The stroke of a malignant planet; the infection of any thing pestilential.

By the blast of God they perish: Job, iv. 9.
TO BLAST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To strike with some sudden plague or calamity.
 You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames
 Into her scornful eyes! infect her beauty,
 You fenfuk'd fogs, drawn by the powerful fun,
 To fall and blast her pride. Shakesp. King Lear.
 Oh! Portius, is there not some chosen curse,
 Some hidden thunder in the store of heaven,
 Red with uncommon wrath, to blast the man,
 Who owes his greatness to his country's ruin. Addison. Cato.
2. To make to wither.
 Upon this blasted heath you stop our way. Macbeth.

 The people's praise, if always praise unmixt?
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 47.

3. Blaze is a white mark upon a horse, descending from the forehead almost to the nose. Farrier's Dict.

TO BLAZE. v. n. [from the noun.]
 1. To flame; to shew the light of the flame.
 Thus you may long live an happy instrument for your king and country; you shall not be a meteor, or a blazing star, but stella fixa; happy here, and more happy hereafter. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

2. To be conspicuous.
TO BLAZE. v. a.
 1. To publish; to make known; to spread far and wide.
 The noise of this fight, and issue thereof, being blazed by the country people to some noblemen thereabouts, they came thither. Sidney, b. ii.

My words, in hopes to blaze a steadfast mind,
 This marble chose, as of like temper known. Sidney.
 Thou shalt live, till we can find a time
 To blaze your marriage; reconcile your friends,
 Beg pardon of thy prince, and call thee back. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

When beggars die, there are no comets seen;
 The heav'ns themselves blaze forth the death of princes: Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.
 But he went out, and began to publish it much, and to blaze abroad the matter. Mark, i. 45.

Such musick worthiest were to blaze
 The peerless height of her immortal praise,
 Whose lustre leads us. Milton.

Far beyond
 The sons of Anak, famous now and blaz'd,
 Fearless of danger, like a petty god
 I walk'd about. Milton's Agonistes, l. 527.

Whose follies, blaz'd about, to all are known,
 And are a secret to himself alone. Granville.
 But, mortals, know, 'tis still our greatest pride
 To blaze those virtues, which the good would hide. Pope.

2. To blazon; to give an account of ensigns armorial in proper terms. This is not now used.
 This, in ancient times, was called a fierce; and you should then have blazed it thus: he bears a fierce, fable, between two fierces, or. Peacham on Drawing.

3. To inflame; to fire. This is not a proper use.
 Pall'd thy blazed youth
 Becomes assuag'd, and doth beg the alms
 Of palsied eld. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

BLAZER. n. f. [from blaze.] One that spreads reports.
 Utterers of secrets he from thence debarr'd,
 Babblers of folly, and blazers of crime;
 His larum-bell might loud and wide be heard,
 When cause requir'd, but never out of time;
 Early and late it rung, at evening and at prime. Fairy Queen.

TO BLAZON. v. a. [blazonner, Fr.]
 1. To explain, in proper terms, the figures on ensigns armorial.
 King Edward gave to them the coat of arms, which I am not herald enough to blazon into English. Addison. Guardian.

2. To deck; to embellish; to adorn.
 Then blazons in dread smiles her hideous form;
 So lightning gilds the unrelenting storm. Garth's Dispensat.
3. To display; to set to show.

O thou goddess,
 Thou divine nature! how thyself thou blazon'st
 In these two princely boys! they are as gentle
 As zephyrs blowing below the violet,
 Not wagging his sweet head. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

4. To celebrate; to set out.
 One that excels the quirk of blazoning pens,
 And, in terrestrial vesture of creation,
 Does bear all excellency. Shakesp. Othello.

5. To blaze about; to make publick.

BLE

- What's this but libelling against the senate,
And blazoning our injustice every where? Shakesp. Tit. Andr.
- BLAZON. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The art of drawing or explaining coats of arms.
Proceed unto beasts that are given in arms, and teach me what I ought to observe in their blazon. Peacham.
  2. Show; divulgation; publication.
But this eternal blazon must not be
To ears of flesh and blood. Shakesp. Hamlet.
  3. Celebration; proclamation of some quality.
I am a gentleman.—I'll be sworn thou art;
Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbs, action, and spirit,
Do give thee five-fold blazon. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.
Men con over their pedigrees, and obtrude the blazon of their exploits upon the company. Collier on Pride.
- BLAZONRY. n. f. [from blazon.] The art of blazoning.
Give me certain rules as to the principles of blazonry.
Peacham on Drawing.
- TO BLEACH. v. a. [bleechen, Germ.] To whiten; commonly to whiten by exposure to the open air.
When turtles tread, and rooks and daws;
And maidens bleach their summer smocks.
Shakesp. Love's Labour Lost.
Should I not seek
The clemency of some more temp'rate clime,
To purge my gloom; and, by the sun refin'd,
Bask in his beams, and bleach me in the wind? Dryden.
For there are various penances enjoin'd;
And some are hung to bleach upon the wind;
Some plung'd in waters. Dryden's Æneid.
- TO BLEACH. v. n. To grow white; to grow white in the open air.
The white sheet bleaching in the open field. Sh. W. Tale.
On every nerve
The deadly winter seizes; shuts up sense;
Lays him along the snows, a stiffen'd corse,
Stretch'd out, and bleaching in the northern blast. Thomson.
- BLEAK. adj. [blac, blæc, Saxon.]
1. Pale.
  2. Cold; chill.
- Intreat the north
To make his bleak winds kiss my parched lips,
And comfort me with cold. Shakesp. King John.
The goddess that in rural shrine
Dwell'd here with Pan, or Sylvan, by blest song
Forbidding every bleak unkindly fog
To touch the prosperous growth of this tall wood. Milton.
Her desolation presents us with nothing but bleak and barren prospects. Addison. Spectator, N° 477.
Say, will ye bless the bleak Atlantick shore,
Or bid the furious Gaul be rude no more. Pope.
- BLEAK. n. f. [from his white or bleak colour.] A small river fish.
The bleak, or freshwater sprat, is ever in motion, and therefore called by some the river swallow. His back is of a pleasant, sad sea water green; his belly white and shining like the mountain snow. Bleaks are excellent meat, and in best season in August. Walton's Angler.
- BLEAKNESS. n. f. [from bleak.] Coldness; chiliness.
The inhabitants of Nova Zembla go naked, without complaining of the bleakness of the air in which they are born; as the armies of the northern nations keep the field all winter.
Addison. Guardian, N° 102.
- BLEAKY. adj. [from bleak.] Bleak; cold; chill.
On shrubs they browse, and, on the bleaky top
Of rugged hills, the thorny bramble crop. Dryden.
- BLEAR. adj. [blaer, a blister, Dutch.]
1. Dim with rheum or water; sore with rheum.
It is an ancient tradition, that blear eyes affect sound eyes.
Bacon's Natural History, N° 923.
It is no more in the power of calumny to blast the dignity of an honest man, than of the blear eyed owl to cast scandal on the sun. L'Estrange.
His blear eyes ran in gutters to his chin;
His beard was stubble, and his cheeks were thin. Dryden.
When thou shalt see the blear ey'd fathers teach
Their sons this harsh and mouldy sort of speech. Dryden.
  2. Dim; obscure in general; or that which makes dimness.
Thus I hurl
My dazzling spells into the spongy air,
Of power to cheat the eye with blear illusion,
And give it false presentments. Milton.
- TO BLEAR. v. a. [from the adjective.]
1. To make the eyes watry, or sore with rheum.
All tongues speak of him, and the bleared fights
Are spectacl'd to see him. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
The Dardanian wives,
With bleared visages, come forth to view
Th' issue of th' exploit. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
When I was young, I, like a lazy fool,
Would blear my eyes with oil, to stay from school;
Averse to pains. Dryden's Persius, sat. iii.
  2. To dim the eyes.

BLE

- This may stand for a pretty superficial argument, to blear
our eyes, and lull us asleep in security. Raleigh's Essays.
- BLEAREDNESS. n. f. [from bleared.] The state of being blear- ed, or dimmed with rheum.
The defluxion falling upon the edges of the eyelids, makes a blearedness. Wifeman's Surgery.
- TO BLEAT. v. n. [blætan, Sax.] To cry as a sheep.
We were as twinn'd lambs, that did frisk i' th' sun,
And bleat the one at th' other, Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
You may as well use question with the wolf,
Why he hath made the ewe bleat for the lamb.
Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
While on sweet grass her bleating charge does lie,
Our happy lover feeds upon her eye. Roscommon.
What bull dares bellow, or what sheep dares bleat
Within the lion's den? Dryden's Spanish Friar.
- BLEAT. n. f. [from the verb.] The cry of a sheep or lamb.
Set in my ship, mine ear reach'd, where we rood,
The bellowing of oxen, and the bleat
Of fleecy sheep. Chapman's Odyssey, b. xii.
The rivers and their hills around,
With lowings, and with dying bleats resound. Dryden.
- BLEB. n. f. [blaen, to swell, Germ.] A blister. Skinner.
- BLED. particip. [from to bleed.]
- TO BLEED. v. n. pret. I bled; I have bled. [bleban, Saxon.]
1. To lose blood; to run with blood.
I bled inwardly for my lord. Shakesp. Timon.
Bleed, bleed, poor country!
Great tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure;
For goodness dare not check thee! Shakesp. Macbeth.
Many, upon the seeing of others bleed, or strangled, or tortured, themselves are ready to faint, as if they bled.
Bacon's Nat. History, N° 795.
  2. To die a violent death.
The lamb thy riot dooms to bleed today;
Had he thy reason, would he skip and play? Pope.
  3. To drop, as blood. It is applied to any thing that drops from some body, as blood from an animal.
For me the balm shall bleed, and amber flow,
The coral redden, and the ruby glow. Pope's Windsor Forest.
- TO BLEED. v. a. To let blood; to take blood from:
That from a patriot of distinguish'd note,
Have bled, and purg'd me to a simple vote. Pope.
- BLEIT. adj. Bashful. It is used in Scotland, and the border-
- BLATE. ing counties.
- TO BLEMISH. v. a. [from blame, Junius; from blême, white, Fr. Skinner.]
1. To mark with any deformity.
Likelier that my outward face might have been disguised, than that the face of so excellent a mind could have been thus blemished. Sidney.
  2. To defame; to tarnish, with respect to reputation.
Not that my verse would blemish all the fair;
But yet if some be bad, 'tis wisdom to beware: Dryden.
Those, who, by concerted defamations, endeavour to blemish his character, incur the complicated guilt of slander and perjury. Addison. Freeholder.
- BLEMISH. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A mark of deformity; a scar; a diminution of beauty.
As he hath caus'd a blemish in a man, so shall it be done to him again. Lev. xxiv. 20.
Open it such a distance off from the eyelid, that you divide not that; for, in so doing, you will leave a remediless blemish.
Wifeman's Surgery.
  2. Reproach; disgrace; imputation.
Live thou, and to thy mother dead attest,
That clear she died from blemish criminal. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
That you have been earnest, should be no blemish or discredit at all unto you. Hooker, Preface.
And if we shall neglect to propagate these blessed dispositions, what others can undertake it, without some blemish to us? some reflection on our negligence? Sprat.
None more industriously publish the blemishes of an extraordinary reputation, than such as lie open to the same censures; raising applause to themselves, for resembling a person of an exalted reputation, though in the blamable parts of his character. Addison. Spectator, N° 256.
  3. A soil; turpitude; taint; deformity.
First shall virtue be vice, and beauty be counted a blemish;
Ere that I leave with song of praise her praise to solemnize.
Sidney, b. i.
Is conformity with Rome a blemish unto the church of England, and unto churches abroad an ornament?
Hooker, b. iv. §. 6.
Not a hair perish'd:
On their sustaining garments not a blemish,
But fresher than before. Shakesp. Tempest.
Evadne's husband 'tis a fault
To love, a blemish to my thought. Waller's M. Trag.
That your duty may no blemish take,
I will myself your father's captive make. Dryd. Indian Emp.

BLE

Such a mirth as this is capable of making a beauty, as well as a blemish, the subject of derision. Addison. Spect. N° 291.

To BLEND. v. n. To shrink; to start back; to fly off.
I'll observe his looks;
I'll tent him to the quick; if he but blench,
I know my course. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Patience herself, what goddesses ere she be,
Doth lesser blench at sufferance than I do. Shakesp. Tr. and Cr.
Hold you ever to our special drift;

Though sometimes you do blench from this to that,
As cause doth minister. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

To BLEND. v. a. To hinder; to obstruct.
The rebels besieged them, winning the even ground on the top, by carrying up great trusses of hay before them, to blench the defendants fight, and dead their shot. Carew's Survey.

To BLEND. v. a. preter. I blended; anciently, blent. [blendan, Saxon.]

1. To mingle together.
'Tis beauty truly blent, whose red and white
Nature's own sweet and cunning hand hath laid on.
Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

The mission taught by the ancients is too slight or gross; for bodies, mixed according to their hypothesis, would not appear such to the acute eyes of a lynx, who would discern the elements, if they were no otherwise mingled, than but blended, but not united. Boyle.

He had his calmer influence, and his mien
Did love and majesty together blend. Dryden.

The grave, where even the great find rest,
And blended lie th' oppressor and th' oppress'd. Pope.

2. To confound.
The moon should wander from her beaten way, the times and seasons of the year blend themselves by disordered and confused mixture. Hooker, b. i. § 3.

3. To pollute; to spoil; to corrupt. This signification was anciently much in use, but is now wholly obsolete.

Which when he saw, he burnt with jealous fire;
The eye of reason was with rage yblent. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

BLENT. The obsolete participle of blend. See BLEND.

To BLESS. v. a. [blessan, Saxon.]

1. To make happy; to prosper.
The quality of mercy is not strain'd;
It droppeth as the gentle rain of heaven
Upon the place beneath. It is twice blest'd;
It blesteth him that gives, and him that takes. Merch. of Ven.
Had I but died an hour before this chance,
I had liv'd a blest time: for, from this instant,
There's nothing. Shakesp. Macbeth.

This kingdom enjoyed the greatest calm, and the fullest measure of felicity, that any people, in any age for so long time together, have been blest with. Clarendon.

Happy this isle, which such a hero blest;
What virtue dwells not in his loyal breast? Waller.

In vain with folding arms the youth assay'd
To stop her flight, and strain the flying shade;
But she return'd no more, to blest his longing eyes. Dryden.

O hospitable Jove! we thus invoke,
Blest to both nations this auspicious hour. Dryden's Æn.

2. To wish happiness to another; to pronounce a blessing upon him.

And this is the blessing wherewith Moses the man of God blest the children of Israel, before his death. Deut. xxxiii. 1.

3. To praise; to glorify for benefits received; to celebrate.

Unto us there is one only guide of all agents natural, and he both the creator and worker of all in all, alone to be blest, adored, and honoured by all for ever. Hooker, b. i. § 3.

But blest'd be that great pow'r, that hath us blest'd
With longer life than earth and heav'n can have. Davies.

4. It seems, in one place of Spenser, to signify the same as to wave; to brandish; to flourish.

Whom when the prince to battle new addrest,
And threat'ning high his dreadful stroke did see,
His sparkling blade about his head he blest,

And smote off quite his right leg by the knee. Fairy Q. b. i.

BLESS'D. particip. adj. [from to blest.] Happy; enjoying heavenly felicity.

BLESS'D Thistle. [cnicus, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The characters are; It hath flosculous flowers; consisting of many florets, which are multifid, and stand upon the embryo; these florets are inclosed in a scaly cup, surrounded with leaves.

The species are, 1. The blest thistle. 2. The yellow distaff thistle. The blest thistle is cultivated in gardens for the herb, which is dried and preserved for medicinal uses; but of late years it hath been less used than formerly. Millar.

eyes, and be no longer led blindfold by a male legislature.
Addison. Freeholder, N° 32.
- BLINDLY. adv. [from blind.]
1. Without sight.
2. Implicitly; without examination.
The old king, after a long debate,
By his imperious mistress blindly led,
Has given Cydaria to Orbellan's bed. Dryd. Indian Emp.
How ready zeal for interest and party, is to charge atheism on those, who will not, without examining, submit, and blindly swallow their nonsense. Locke.
2. Without judgment or direction.
How seas, and earth, and air, and active flame,
Fell through the mighty void; and, in their fall,
Were blindly gather'd in this goodly ball. Dryden's Silenus.
- BLINDMAN'S BUFF. n. f. A play in which some one is to have his eyes covered, and hunt out the rest of the company.

- Disguis'd in all the mask of night;
We left our champion on his flight:
At blindman's buff to grope his way,
In equal fear of night and day. Hudibras, p. iii. c. ii.
He imagines I shut my eyes again; but surely he fancies I play at blindman's buff with him; for he thinks I never have my eyes open. Stillingfleet's Defence of Disc. on Romish Idolatry.
- BLINDNESS. n. f. [from blind.]
1. Want of sight.
Nor can we call it choice, when what we chuse,
Folly and blindness only could refuse. Denham.
2. Ignorance; intellectual darkness.
All the rest as born of savage brood,
But with base thoughts are into blindness led;
And kept from looking on the lightsome day. Spenser.
Whensoever we would proceed beyond these simple ideas, we fall presently into darkness and difficulties, and can discover nothing farther but our own blindness and ignorance. Locke.
- BLINDSIDE. n. f. [from blind and side.] Weakness; foible; weak part.
He is too great a lover of himself; but this is one of his blindfides; and the best of men, I fear, are not without them.
Swift's Wonderful Wonder of Wonders.
- BLINDWORM. n. f. [from blind and worm.] A small viper, the least of our English serpents, but venomous.
You spotted snakes, with double tongue;
Thorny hedgehogs, be not seen;
Newts and blindworms, do no wrong;
Come not near our fairy queen. Shakesp. Mid. N. Dr.
The greater slow worm, called also the blindworm, is commonly thought to be blind, because of the littleness of his eyes.
Grew's Museum.
- To BLINK. v. n. [blincken, Danish.]
1. To wink, or twinkle with the eyes.
So politick, as if one eye
Upon the other were a spy;
That to trepan the one to think
The other blind, both strove to blink. Hudibras, p. iii. c. ii.
2. To see obscurely.
What's here! the portrait of a blinking idiot.
Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
Sweet and lovely well,
Shew me thy chink, to blink through with mine eyne.
Shakesp. Midsummer Night's Dream.
His figure such as might his soul proclaim;
One eye was blinking, and one leg was lame. Pope's Iliad.
- BLINKARD. n. f. [from blink.]
1. One that has bad eyes.
2. Something twinkling.
In some parts we see many glorious and eminent stars, in others few of any remarkable greatness, and, in some, none but blinkards, and obscure ones. Hakewell on Providence.
- BLISS. n. f. [blisse, Sax. from blisarian, to rejoice.]
1. The highest degree of happiness; blessedness; felicity; generally used of the happiness of blessed souls.
A mighty Saviour hath witnessed of himself, I am the way;
the way that leadeth us from misery into bliss. Hooker, b. i.
Dim sadness did not spare
That time celestial visages; yet, mix'd
With pity, violated not their bliss. Par. Lost, b. x. l. 25.
With me
All my redeem'd may dwell, in joy and bliss. Par. Lost, b. xi.
2. Felicity in general.
Condition, circumstance is not the thing;
Bliss is the same in subject or in king. Pope.
- BLISSFUL. adj. [from bliss and full.] Full of joy; happy in the highest degree.
Yet swimming in that sea of blissful joy,
He nought forgot. Fairy Queen, b. i. c. i. stan. 41.
The two saddest ingredients in hell, are deprivation of the blissful vision, and confusion of face. Hammond.
Reaping immortal fruits of joy and love;
Uninterrupted joy, unrival'd love,
In blissful solitude. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 89.
First in the fields I try the silvan strains;
Nor blush to sport in Windsor's blissful plains. Pope.
- BLISSFULLY. adv. [from blissful.] Happily.
- BLISSFULNESS. n. f. [from blissful.] Happiness; fulness of joy.
- To BLISSOM. v. n. To caterwaul; to be lustful. Dict.
- BLISTER. n. f. [bluyster, Dutch.]
1. A pustule formed by raising the cuticle from the cutis, and filled with serous blood.
In this state she gallops, night by night,
O'er ladies lips, who strait on kisses dream;
Which oft the angry mob with blisters plagues,
Because their breaths with sweetmeats tainted are.
Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.
I found a great blister drawn by the garlick, but had it cut, which run a good deal of water, but filled again by next night. Temple.
2. Any swelling made by the separation of a film or skin from the other parts.

B L O

Upon the leaves there riseth a tumour like a blister. Bacon.
To BLISTER. v. n. [from the noun.] To rise in blisters.
 If I prove honeymouth, let my tongue blister,
 And never to my red look'd anger be
 The trumpet any more. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
 Embrace thy knees with loathing hands,
 Which blister when they touch thee. Dryden's Don Sebast.
To BLISTER. v. a.
 1. To raise blisters by some hurt, as a burn, or rubbing.
 Look, here comes one, a gentlewoman of mine,
 Who falling in the flames of her own youth,
 Hath blister'd her report. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.
 2. To raise blisters with a medical intention.
 I blistered the legs and thighs; but was too late, he died howling. Wiseman's Surgery.
BLITHE. adj. [blithe, Saxon.] Gay; airy; merry; joyous; sprightly; mirthful.
 We have always one eye fixed upon the countenance of our enemies; and, according to the blithe or heavy aspect thereof, our other eye sheweth some other suitable token either of dislike or approbation. Hooker, b. iv. § 9.
 Then sigh not so, but let them go,
 And be you blithe and bonny. Shakesp. M. ado about Noth.
 For that fair female troop thou saw'st, that seem'd
 Of goddesses, so blithe, so smooth, so gay;
 Yet empty of all good. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
 To whom the wily adder, blithe and glad:
 Empress! the way is ready, and not long. Par. Lost, b. ix.
 And the milkmaid fingeth blithe,
 And the mower whets his scythe. Milton.
 Should he return, that troop so blithe and bold,
 Precipitant in fear, would wing their flight. Pope.
BLITHELY. adv. [from blithe.] In a blithe manner.
BLITHESS. n. f. [from blithe.] The quality of being blithe.
BLITHESOMENESS. n. f. [from blithe.] The quality of being blithe.
BLITHESOME. adj. [from blithe.] Gay; cheerful.
 Frosty blasts deface
 The blithesome year: trees of their shrivell'd fruits
 Are widow'd. Philips.
To BLOAT. v. a. [probably from blow.] To swell, or make turgid with wind.
 His rude essays
 Encourage him, and bloat him up with praise,
 That he may get more bulk before he dies. Dryden.
 The strutting petticoat smooths all distinctions, levels the mother with the daughter. I cannot but be troubled to see so many well-shaped innocent virgins bloated up, and waddling up and down like bigbellied women. Addison. Spectator.
To BLOAT. v. n. To grow turgid.
 If a person of a firm constitution begins to bloat, from being warm grows cold, his fibres grow weak. Arbuthnot.
BLOATEDNESS. n. f. [from bloat.] Turgidness; swelling; tumour.
 Lassitude, laziness, bloatedness, and scorbutical spots, are symptoms of weak fibres. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
BLOBBER. n. f. [from blob.] A word used in some counties for a bubble.
 There swimmeth also in the sea a round slimy substance, called a blobber, reputed noisome to the fish. Carew.
BLOBBERLIP. n. f. [from blob, or blobber, and lip.] A thick lip.
 They make a wit of their insipid friend,
 His blobberlips and beetlebrows commend. Dryden's Juvenal.
BLOBLIPPED. adj. Having swelled or thick lips.
BLOBBERLIPPED. adj. Having swelled or thick lips.
 A bloblipped shell, which seemeth to be a kind of mussel.
Grew's Musæum.
 His person deformed to the highest degree; flat nosed, and blobberlipped. L'Estrange.
BLOCK. n. f. [block, Dutch; bloc, Fr.]
 1. A heavy piece of timber, rather thick than long.
 2. A mass of matter.
 Homer's apotheosis consists of a groupe of figures, cut in the same block of marble, and rising one above another. Addison.
 3. A massy body.
 Small causes are sufficient to make a man uneasy, when great ones are not in the way: for want of a block, he will stumble at a straw. Swift's Thoughts on various Subjects.
 4. A rude piece of timber; in contempt.
 When, by the help of wedges and beetles, an image is cleft out of the trunk of some tree, yet, after all the skill of artifi-cers to set forth such a divine block, it cannot one moment secure itself from being eaten by worms. Stillingfleet.
 5. The piece of wood on which hats are formed.
 He wears his faith but as the fashion of his hat; it ever changes with the next block. Shakesp. Much ado about Nothing.
 6. The wood on which criminals are beheaded.
 Some guard these traitors to the block of death,
 Treason's true bed, and yielder up of breath. Shakesp. H. IV.
 At the instant of his death, having a long beard, after his head was upon the block, he gently drew his beard aside, and said, this hath not offended the king. Bacon's Apophthegms.
 I'll drag him thence,
 Even from the holy altar to the block. Dryden's W. of B.

B L O

7. An obstruction; a stop.
 Can he ever dream, that the suffering for righteousness sake is our felicity, when he sees us run so from it, that no crime is block enough in our way, to stop our flight? Decay of Piety.
 8. A sea term for a pulley.
 9. A blockhead; a fellow remarkable for stupidity.
 The country is a desert, where the good
 Gain'd, inhabits not; born's not understood;
 There men become beasts, and prone to all evils;
 In cities, blocks. Donne.
 What tongueless blocks were they, would they not speak?
Shakesp. Richard III.
To BLOCK. v. a. [bloquer, Fr.] To shut up; to inclose, so as to hinder egress.
 The states about them should neither by encrease of dominion, nor by blocking of trade, have it in their power to hurt or annoy. Bacon's War with Spain.
 Recommend it to the governour of Abingdon, to send some troops to block it up, from infesting the great road. Clarendon.
 They block the castle kept by Bertram;
 But now they cry, down with the palace, fire it. Dryden.
 The abbot raises an army, and blocks up the town on the side that faces his dominions. Addison on Italy.
BLOCK-HOUSE. n. f. [from block and house.] A fortress built to obstruct or block up a pass.

BLOCKISHNESS. n. f. [from blockish.] Stupidity.
BLOMARY. n. f. The first forge in the iron mills, through which the metal passes, after it has been first melted from the mine. Dict.
BLOUNKET. n. f. [I suppose for blanket.]
 Our blonket livery's been all too sad
 For thilke same season, when all is yclad
 With pleasance. Spenser's Pastorals.
BLOOD. n. f. [blob, Saxon.]
 1. The red liquor that circulates in the bodies of animals.
 But flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall you not eat. Gen. ix. 4.
 2. Child; progeny.
 We'll no more meet, no more see one another:
 But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter.
Shakesp. King Lear.
 3. Family; kindred.
 As many and as well born bloods as those,
 Stand in his face, to contradict his claim. Shakesp. K. John.
 O! what an happiness is it to find
 A friend of our own blood, a brother kind. Waller.
 According to the common law of England, in administrations, the whole blood ought to be preferred to the half blood.
Ayliffe's Parergon.
 4. Descent; lineage.
 Epithets of flattery, deserved by few of them; and not running in a blood, like the perpetual gentleness of the Ormond family. Dryden's Fab. Dedication.
 5. Blood royal; royal lineage.
 They will almost
 Give us a prince o' th' blood, a son of Priam,
 In change of him. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.
 6. Birth; high extraction.
 I am a gentleman of blood and breeding. Shakesp. K. Lear.

Shakefp. K. Lear.

I grant him bloody,

Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful.

Shakefp. Macbeth.

Thou bloodier villain;

Than terms can give thee out,

Shakefp. Macbeth.

Alas! why gnaw you so your nether lip?

Some bloody passion shakes your very frame;

These are portents: but yet I hope, I hope,

They do not point on me.

Shakefp. Othello.

The bloody fact

Will be aveng'd; and th' other's faith approv'd,

Lose no reward; though here thou see him die,

Rolling in dust and gore.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 457.

The bloodiest vengeance which she could pursue,

Would be a trifle to my loss of you.

brought forth buds, and bloomed blossoms, and yielded almonds.
Numb. xvii. 8.
It is a common experience, that if you do not pull off some blossoms the first time a tree bloometh, it will blossom itself to death. Bacon's Natural Hist. N° 449.
2. To produce, as blossoms.
Rites and customs, now superstitious, when the strength of virtuous, devout, or charitable affection bloomed them, no man could justly have condemned as evil. Hooker, b. v. § 3.
3. To be in a state of youth and improvement.
Beauty, frail flow'r, that ev'ry season fears,
Blossoms in thy colours for a thousand years. Pope's Epistles.
O greatly blest'd with every blossoming grace!
With equal steps the paths of glory trace. Pope's Odyss. b. i.
BLO'OMY. adj. [from bloom.] Full of blossoms; flowery.
O nightingale! that on yon blossomy spray
Warblest at eve, when all the woods are still. Milton.
Departing spring could only stay to shed
Her blossomy beauties on the genial bed,
But left the manly summer in her stead. Dryden.
Hear how the birds, on ev'ry blossomy spray,
With joyous music wake the dawning day. Pope.
BLORE. n. f. [from blow.] Act of blowing; blast.
Out rusht, with an unmeasur'd roar,
Those two winds, tumbling clouds in heaps; ushers to either's blore. Chapman's Iliads.
BLO'SSOM. n. f. [blor-me, Sax.] The flower that grows on any plant, previous to the seed or fruit. We generally call those flowers blossoms, which are not much regarded in themselves, but as a token of some following production.
Cold news for me:
Thus are my blossoms blasted in the bud,
And caterpillars eat my leaves away. Shakesp. Henry IV.
Merrily, merrily shall I live now,
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough. Shakesp. Tempest.
The pulling off many of the blossoms of a fruit tree, doth make the fruit fairer. Bacon's Natural History, N° 449.
To his green years your censure you would suit,
Not blast the blossom, but expect the fruit. Dryden.
Sweeter than spring,
Thou sole surviving blossom from the root,
That nourish'd up my fortune. Thomson's Autumn.
To BLO'SSOM. v. n. [from the noun.] To put forth blossoms.
This is the state of man: to day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope; tomorrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him. Sh. H. VIII.
Although the figtree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines, yet I will rejoice in the Lord. Habb. iii. 17.
The want of rain at blossoming time, often occasions the dropping off of the blossoms, for want of sap. Mortimer.
To BLOT. v. a. [from blottir, Fr. to hide.]
1. To obliterate; to make writing invisible, by covering it with ink.
You that are king,
Have caus'd him, by new act of parliament,
To blot out me, and put his own son in. Shakesp. Henry VI.
Ev'n copious Dryden wanted, or forgot,
The last and greatest art, the art to blot. Pope.
A man of the most understanding will find it impossible to make the best use of it, while he writes in constraint, perpetually softening, correcting, or blotting out expressions. Swift.
2. To efface; to erase.
O Bertran, oh! no more my foe, but brother:
One act like this blots out a thousand crimes. Dryden.
These simple ideas, offered to the mind, the understanding can no more refuse, nor alter, nor blot out, than a mirror can refuse, alter, or obliterate, the images which the objects produce. Locke.
3. To make black spots on a paper; to blur.
Heads overfull of matter, be like pens over full of ink, which will sooner blot, than make any fair letter at all.
Ascham's Schoolmaster.
O sweet Portia!
Here are a few of the unpleasant words
That ever blotted paper. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

4. To disgrace; to disfigure.
Unknit that threat'ning unkind brow;
It blots thy beauty, as frost bites the meads,
Confounds thy fame. Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.
My guilt thy growing virtues did defame;
My blackness blotted thy unblemish'd name. Dryden's Æn.
For mercy's sake, restrain thy hand,
Blot not thy innocence with guiltless blood. Rowe.
5. To darken.
He sung how earth blots the moon's gilded wane,
Whilst foolish men beat sounding brass in vain. Cowley.
BLOT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. An obliteration of something written.
Let flames on your unlucky papers prey,
Your wars, your loves, your praises, be forgot,
And make of all an universal blot. Dryden's Juven. sat. vii.
2. A blur; a spot upon paper.
3. A spot in reputation; a stain; a disgrace; a reproach.
Make known,
It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
That hath depriv'd me. Shakesp. King Lear.
A lie is a foul blot in a man; yet it is continually in the mouth of the untaught. Ecclus. xx. 24.
A disappointed hope, a blot of honour, a strain of conscience, an unfortunate love, will serve the turn. Temple.
4. [At backgammon.] When a single man lies open to be taken up; whence to hit a blot.
He is too great a master of his art, to make a blot which may so easily be hit. Dryden's Dedication, Æneid.
BLOTCH. n. f. [from blot.] A spot or pustule upon the skin.
Spots and blotches, of several colours and figures, straggling over the body; some are red, others yellow, livid, or black.
Harvey on Consumptions.
To BLOTE. v. a. To smoke, or dry by the smoke; as bloted herrings, or red herrings.
BLOW. n. f. [blowe, Dutch.]
1. A stroke.
A most poor man, made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakesp. King Lear.
A woman's tongue,
That gives not half so great a blow to th' ear,
As will a chesnut. Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.
Words of great contempt, commonly finding a return of equal scorn, blows were fastened upon the most pragmatical of the crew. Clarendon.
2. The fatal stroke; the stroke of death.
Assuage your thirst of blood, and strike the blow. Dryd.
3. A single action; a sudden event.
Every year they gain a victory, and a town; but if they are once defeated, they lose a province at a blow. Dryden.
4. The act of a fly, by which she lodges eggs in flesh.
I much fear, lest with the blows of flies,
His brass inflicted wounds are fill'd. Chapman's Iliads.
To BLOW. v. n. pret. blew; particip. pass. blown. [blapan, Sax.]
1. To move with a current of air.
At his sight the mountains are shaken, and at his will the south wind bloweth. Ecclus. xliii. 16.
Fruits, for long keeping, gather before they are full ripe, and in a dry day, towards noon, and when the wind bloweth not south; and when the moon is in decrease. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
By the fragrant winds that blow
O'er th' Elyian flow'rs. Pope's St. Cecilia.
2. This word is used sometimes impersonally with it.
It blew a terrible tempest at sea once, and there was one seaman praying. L'Estrange.
If it blows a happy gale, we must set up all our sails, though it sometimes happens, that our natural heat is more powerful than our care and correctness. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
3. To pant; to puff; to be breathless.
Here's Mrs. Page at the door, sweating and blowing, and looking wildly. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
Each aking nerve refuse the lance to throw,
And each spent courser at the chariot blow. Pope's Iliad.
4. To breathe.
Says the satyr, if you have gotten a trick of blowing hot and cold out of the same mouth, I've e'en done with ye. L'Estrange.
5. To sound by being blown.
Nor with less dread the loud
Ethereal trumpet from on high 'gan blow. Par. Lost, b. vi.
There let the prating organ blow,
To the full-voic'd quire below. Milton.
6. To sound, or play musically by wind.
When ye blow an alarm, then the camps that lie on the east parts shall go forward. Numb. x. 5.
7. To blow over. To pass away without effect.
Storms, though they blow over divers times, yet may fall at last. Bacon's Essays, N° 16.
When the storm is blown over,
How blest is the swain,
Who begins to discover
An end of his pain. Granville.

And bears his blushing honours thick upon him. Sh. H. VI.
Along those blushing borders, bright with dew. Thomson.
3. It has at before the cause of shame.
He whin'd, and roar'd away your victory,
That pages blush'd at him; and men of heart
Look'd wond'ring at each other. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
You have not yet lost all your natural modesty, but blush at your vices. Calamy's Sermons.
- BLUSH. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The colour in the cheeks, raised by shame or confusion.
The virgin's wish, without her fears, impart,
Excuse the blush, and pour out all the heart. Pope.
2. A red or purple colour.
But here the roses blush so rare,
Here the mornings smile so fair,
As if neither cloud, nor wind,
But would be courteous, would be kind. Crashaw.
3. Sudden

3. Sudden appearance; a signification that seems barbarous, yet used by good writers.

All purely identical propositions, obviously and at first blush, appear to contain no certain instruction in them. Locke.

BLUSHY. adj. [from blush.] Having the colour of a blush.

Blossoms of trees, that are white, are commonly inodorate; those of apples, crabs, and peaches, are blushy, and smell sweet.

Bacon's Natural Hist. N° 507.

Stratonica entering, moved a blushy colour in his face; but, deserting him, he relapsed into the same paleness and languour.

Harvey on Consumptions.

To BLUSTER. v. n. [supposed from blast.]

1. To roar as a storm; to be violent and loud.

Earth his uncouth mother was,

And blustering Æolus his boasted fire.

Spenser.

So now he storms with many a sturdy store;

So now his blustering blast each coast doth scour. Spenser.

2. To bully; to puff; to swagger; to be tumultuous.

My heart's too big to bear this, says a blustering fellow; I'll destroy myself. Sir, says the gentleman, here's a dagger at your service; so the humour went off. L'Estrange.

Either he must sink to a downright confession, or else he must huff and bluster, till perhaps he raise a counter-storm.

Government of the Tongue.

Virgil had the majesty of a lawful prince, and Statius only the blustering of a tyrant. Dryden's Spanish Friar, Dedication.

There let him reign the jailor of the wind;

With hoarse commands his breathing subjects call,

And boast and bluster in his empty hall. Dryden's Æneid.

BLUSTER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Roar; noise; tumult.

The skies look grimly,

And threaten present blusters. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

BMI. n. s. A note in musick.

Gamut I am, the ground of all accord,

Bmi, Bianca, take him for thy lord. Shakesp. Tam. Shrew.

Bo. interj. A word of terrour; from Bo, an old northern captain, of such fame, that his name was used to terrify the enemy. Temple.

BOAR. n. s. [bar, Saxon; beer, Dutch.] The male swine.

To fly the boar, before the boar pursues,

Were to incense the boar to follow us. Shakesp. Rich. III.

She sped the boar away;

His eyeballs glare with fire, suffus'd with blood;

His neck shuts up a thickest thorny wood;

His bristled back a trench impal'd appears. Dryden's Fables.

BO'AR-SPEAR. n. s. [from boar and spear.] A spear used in hunting the boar.

And in her hand a sharp boar-spear she held,

And at her back a bow and quiver gay,

Stuff'd with steel-headed darts. Fairy Queen, b. i. c. iii.

Echion threw the first, but miss'd his mark,

And struck his boar-spear on a maple bark. Dryden's Ovid.

BOARD. n. s. [baurd, Goth. bræd, Saxon.]

1. A piece of wood of more length and breadth than thickness. With the saw they have fundred trees in boards and planks.

Raleigh's Essays.

Every house has a board over the door, whereon is written the number, sex, and quality of the persons living in it. Temple.

Go now, go trust the wind's uncertain breath,

Remov'd four fingers from approaching death;

Or seven at most, when thickest is the board. Dryden's Juv.

2. A table. [from burdd, Welch.]

Soon after which, three hundred lords he slew,

Of British blood, all sitting at his board. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

At board he fed not, for my urging it. Shakesp. Com. of Err.

I'll follow thee in fun'ral flames; when dead,

My ghost shall thee attend at board and bed. Sir J. Denham.

Cleopatra made Antony a supper, which was sumptuous and royal; howbeit there was no extraordinary service upon the board. Hakewell on Providence.

May ev'ry god his friendly aid afford;

Pan guard thy flock, and Ceres blest thy board. Prior.

3. Entertainment; food.

4. A table at which a council or court is held.

VOL. I.

Both better acquainted with affairs, than any other who sat then at that board. Clarendon.

5. An assembly seated at a table; a court of jurisdiction.

I wish the king would be pleased sometimes to be present at that board; it adds a majesty to it. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

6. The deck or floor of a ship; on board signifies in a ship.

Now board to board the rival vessels row,

The billows lave the skies, and ocean groans below. Dryd.

Our captain thought his ship in so great danger, that he confessed himself to a capuchin, who was on board. Addison.

He ordered his men to arm long poles with sharp hooks, wherewith they took hold of the tackling, which held the main-yard to the mast of their enemy's ship; then, rowing their own ship, they cut the tackling, and brought the mainyard by the board. Arbutnot on Coins.

To BOARD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To enter a ship by force; the same as to storm, used of a city.

I boarded the king's ship: now on the beak,

Now in the waste, the deck, in every cabin,

I flam'd amazement. Shakesp. Tempest.

Yet not inclin'd the English ship to board,

More on his guns relies than on his sword,

From whence a fatal volley we receiv'd;

It miss'd the duke; but his great heart it griev'd. Waller.

Arm, arm, she cry'd, and let our Tyrians board

With our's his fleet, and carry fire and sword. Denham.

2. To attack, or make the first attempt upon a man; aborder quelqu'un, Fr.

Whom thus at gaze, the Palmer 'gan to board

With goodly reason, and thus fair bespake. Fairy Q. b. ii.

Away, I do beseech you, both away;

I'll board him presently. Shakesp. Hamlet.

3. Sure, unless he knew some strain in me, that I knew not myself, he would never have boarded me in this fury. Shakespeare.

They learn what associates and correspondents they had, and how far every one is engaged, and what new ones they meant afterwards to try or board. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. To lay or pave with boards.

Having thus boarded the whole room, the edges of some boards lie higher than the next board; therefore they peruse the whole floor; and, where they find any irregularities, plane them off. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

To BOARD. v. n. To live in a house, where a certain rate is paid for eating.

That we might not part,

As we at first did board with thee,

Now thou wouldst taste our misery. Herbert.

We are several of us, gentlemen and ladies, who board in the same house; and, after dinner, one of our company stands up, and reads your paper to us all. Spectator, N° 961.

To BOARD. v. a. To place as a boarder in another's house.

BOARD-WAGES. n. s. [from board and wages.] Wages allowed to servants to keep themselves in victuals.

What more than madness reigns,

When one short sitting many hundreds drains,

And not enough is left him, to supply

Board-wages, or a footman's livery? Dryden's Juv. sat. i.

Bo'ARDER. n. s. [from board.] A tabler; one that eats with another at a settled rate.

Bo'ARDING-SCHOOL. n. s. [from board and school.] A school where the scholars live with the teacher.

Confounded be all them that serve graven images, that boast themselves of idols. Psaln xcvi. 7.

BOAST. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A cause of boasting; an occasion of pride; the thing boasted,

B O B

- Not Tyro, nor Mycene, match her name,
Nor great Alcmena, the proud boasts of fame. Pope's Odyssey.
2. An expression of ostentation; a proud speech.
Thou that makest thy boast of the law, through breaking the law dishonourest thou God? Rom. ii. 23.
The world is more apt to find fault than to commend; the boast will probably be censured, when the great action that occasioned it, is forgotten. Spectator, N° 255.
- BO'ASTER. n. f. [from boast.] A bragger; a man that vaunts any thing ostentatiously.
Complaints the more candid and judicious of the chymists themselves are wont to make of those boasters, that confidently pretend, that they have extracted the salt or sulphur of quick-silver, when they have disguised it by additaments, wherewith it resembles the concretes. Boyle.
No more delays, vain boaster! but begin;
I prophesy beforehand I shall win:
I'll teach you how to brag another time. Dryden's Virgil.
He the proud boasters sent, with stern assault,
Down to the realms of night. Philips.
- BO'ASTFUL. adj. [from boast and full.] Ostentatious; inclined to brag.
Boastful, and rough, your first son is a 'squire;
The next a tradesman, meek, and much a liar. Pope.
- BO'ASTINGLY. adv. [from boasting.] Ostentatiously.
We look on it as a pitch of impiety, boastingly to avow our sins; and it deserves to be considered, whether this kind of confessing them, have not some affinity with it. Decay of Piety.
- BOAT. n. f. [bat, Saxon.]
1. A vessel to pass the water in. It is usually distinguished from other vessels, by being smaller and uncovered, and commonly moved by rowing.
I do not think that any one nation, the Syrian excepted, to whom the knowledge of the ark came, did find out at once the device of either ship or boat, in which they durst venture themselves upon the seas. Raleigh's Essays.
An effeminate scoundrel multitude!
Whose utmost daring is to cross the Nile,
In painted boats, to fright the crocodile. Tate's Juv. sat. xv.
2. A ship of a small size; as, a passage boat, packet boat, advice boat, fly boat.
BOA'TION. n. f. [from boare, Lat.] Roar; noise; loud sound.

An ill-bred boatman, rough as waves and wind. Prior.
- BO'ATSWAIN. n. f. [from boat and swain.] An officer on board a ship, who has charge of all her rigging, ropes, cables, anchors, sails, flags, colours, pendants, &c. He also takes care of the long-boat and its furniture, and steers her either by himself or his mate. He calls out the several gangs and companies to the execution of their watches, works, and spells; and he is also a kind of provost marshal, seizes, and punishes all offenders, that are sentenced by the captain, or court martial of the whole fleet. Harris.
Sometimes the meanest boatswain may help to preserve the ship from sinking. Howel's Pre-eminence of Parliament.
- To BOB. v. a. [of uncertain etymology; Skinner deduces it from bobo, foolish, Span.]
1. To cut. Junius.
2. To beat; to drub; to bang.
Those bastard Britons, whom our fathers
Have in their own land beaten, bobb'd, and thump'd.
Shakespeare. Richard III.
3. To cheat; to gain by fraud.
I have bobbed his brain more than he has beat my bones.
Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.
Live, Roderigo!
He calls me to a restitution large,
Of gold and jewels, that I bobb'd from him,
As gifts to Desdemona. Shakespeare. Othello.
Here we have been worrying one another, who should have the booty, till this cursed fox has bobbed us both on't. L'Estr.
- To BOB. v. n. To play backward and forward; to play loosely against any thing.
And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab;
And when she drinks, against her lips I bob,
And on her wither'd dewlap pour the ale. Midsum. N. Dr.
They comb, and then they order ev'ry hair;
A birthday jewel bobbing at their ear. Dryd. Persius, sat. i.
You may tell her,
I'm rich in jewels, rings, and bobbing pearls,
Pluck'd from Moors ears. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
- BOB. n. f. [from the verb neuter.]
1. Something that hangs so as to play loosely; generally an ornament at the ear; a pendant; an ear-ring.

B O D

sent to knit, or sit down to bobbins, or bone-lace. Tatler.
- BO'BBINWORK. n. f. [from bobbin and work.] Work woven with bobbins.
Not netted nor woven with warp and woof, but after the manner of bobbinwork. Grew's Museum.
- BO'BBERRY. n. f. [from bob and cherry.] A play among children, in which the cherry is hung so as to bob against the mouth.
Bobcherry teaches at once two noble virtues, patience and constancy; the first, in adhering to the pursuit of one end;
the latter, in bearing a disappointment. Arb. and Pop. M. Scr.
- BO'BTAIL. [from bob, in the sense of cut.] Cut tail; short tail.
Avaunt, you curs!
Be thy mouth or black or white,
Or bobtail like, or trundle tail,
Tom will make him weep and wail. Shakespeare. King Lear.
- BO'BTAILED. adj. [from bobtail.] Having a tail cut, or short.
There was a bobtailed cur cried in a gazette, and one that found him, brought him home to his master. L'Estrange.
- BO'BWIG. n. f. [from bob and wig.] A short wig.
A young fellow riding towards us full gallop, with a bobwig

of. It is used in a sense of either good or bad.
This bodes some strange eruption to our state. Hamlet.
By this design, you have opposed their false policy, with true and great wisdom; what they boded would be a mischief to us, you are providing, shall be one of our principal strengths.
Sprat's Sermons.
- It happen'd once, a boding prodigy!
A swarm of bees that cut the liquid sky,
Upon the topmost branch in clouds alight. Dryden's Æneid.
If fiery red his glowing globe descends,
High winds and furious tempests he portends:
But if his cheeks are swoln with livid blue,
He bodes wet weather by his watry hue. Dryden's Georg.
- To BODE. v. n. To be an omen; to foreflew.
Sir, give me leave to say, whatever now
The omen prove, it boded well to you. Dryden's Aurengz.

Great Birnam wood to Dunfinane's high hill
Shall come against him. —
That will never be:
Sweet bodements, good. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
- To BODGE. v. n. [a word in Shakespeare, which is perhaps corrupted from boggle.] To boggle; to stop; to fail.
With this we charg'd again; but out! alas,
We bodg'd again; as I have seen a swan,
With bootless labour, swim against the tide. Shakespeare. H. VI.
- BO'DICE. n. f. [from bodies.] Stays; a waistcoat quilted with whalebone, worn by women.
Her bodice halfway she unlac'd,
About his arms she flily cast
The filken band, and held him fast. Prior.
This consideration should keep ignorant nurses and bodice makers from meddling. Locke on Education, § 11.
- BO'DILESS. adj. [from body.] Incorporeal; without a body.
Which bodiless and immaterial are,
And can be only lodg'd within our minds. Davies.
This is the very coinage of your brain,
This bodiless creation ecstacy
Is very cunning in. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
These are but shadows,
Phantoms bodiless and vain,
Empty visions of the brain. Swift.
- BO'DILY. adj. [from body.]
1. Corporeal; containing body.
What resemblance could wood or stone bear to a spirit void of all sensible qualities, and bodily dimensions? South.
2. Relating to the body, not the mind.
Of such as resorted to our Saviour Christ, being present on earth, there came not any unto him with better success, for the benefit of their souls everlasting happiness, than they whose bodi'y necessities gave occasion of seeking relief. Hooker, b. v.
Virtue

Virtue atones for bodily defects; beauty is nothing worth, without a mind.

L'Estrange.

As clearness of the bodily eye doth dispose it for a quicker sight, so doth freedom from lust and passion, dispose us for the most perfect acts of reason.

Tillotson.

I would not have children much beaten for their faults, because I would not have them think bodily pain the greatest punishment.

Locke on Education, § 115.

3. Real; actual.

A gulf profound! as that Serbonian bog,

Betwixt Damietta and Mount Casius old.

Par. Lost, b. ii.

He walks upon bogs and whirlpools; wheresoever he treads, he sinks.

South.

Learn from so great a wit, a land of bogs

With ditches fenced, a heaven fat with fogs.

Dryden.

He is drawn, by a sort of ignis fatuus, into bogs and mire, almost every day of his life.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

BOG-TROTTER. n. f. [from bog and trot.] One that lives in a boggy country.

To BO'GGLE. v. n. [from bogil, Dutch, a spectre; a bugbear; a phantom.]

1. To start; to fly back; to fear to come forward.

You boggle shrewdly; every feather starts you.

Shakefp. All's well that ends well.

We start and boggle at every unusual appearance, and cannot endure the sight of the bugbear.

Glanville's Scepis, c. 16.

Nature, that rude, and in her first essay,

Stood boggling at the roughness of the way;

Us'd to the road, unknowing to return,

Goes boldly on, and loves the path when worn.

Dryden.

2. To hesitate; to be in doubt.

And never boggle to restore

The members you deliver o'er;

Upon demand.

Hudibras, p. iii. c. i.

The well-shaped changeling is a man that has a rational soul, say you. Make the ears a little longer, and more pointed, and the nose a little flatter than ordinary, and then you begin to boggle.

Locke.

3. To play fast and loose; to dissemble.

When summoned to his last end, it was no time for him to boggle with the world.

Howel's Vocal Forest.

BO'GGLER. n. f. [from boggle.] A doubter; a timorous man.

Arbutnot.

BO'GHOUSE. n. f. [from bog and house.] A house of office.

BOHE'A. n. f. [an Indian word.] A species of tea, of higher colour, and more astringent taste, than green tea.

Coarse pewter, appearing to consist chiefly of lead, is part of the bales in which bohea tea was brought from China.

Woodw.

As some frail cup of China's fairest mold,

The tumults of the boiling bohea braves,

And holds secure the coffee's sable waves.

Tickell.

She went from op'ra, park, assembly, play;

To morning walks, and pray'rs three hours a day;

To part her time 'twixt reading and bohea,

To muse, and spill her solitary tea.

Pope.

To BOIL. v. n. [bouiller, Fr. bullio, Lat.]

1. To be agitated by heat; to fluctuate with heat.

He saw there boil the fiery whirlpools.

2. The vessel in which any thing is boiled.

This coffee-room is much frequented; and there are generally several pots and boilers before the fire. Woodward.

BO'ISTEROUS. adj. [byster, furious, Dutch.]

1. Violent; loud; roaring; stormy.

By a divine instinct, men's minds mistrust

Ensuing danger; as by proof we see

The waters swell before a boisterous storm. Shakesp. R. III.

As when loud winds a well-grown oak would rend

Up by the roots, this way and that they bend

His reeling trunk, and with a boist'rous sound

Scatter his leaves, and strew them on the ground. Waller.

2. Turbulent; tumultuous; furious.

Spirit of peace,

Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself

Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,

Into the harsh and boist'rous tongue of war? Shakesp. H. IV.

His sweetness won a more regard

Unto his place, than all the boist'rous moods

That ignorant greatness practiseth. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

God, into the hands of their deliverer,

Puts invincible might,

To quell the mighty of the earth, th' oppressor,

The brute and boist'rous force of violent men. Milton.

Still must I beg thee not to name Sempronius:

Lucia; I like not that loud boisterous man. Addison's Cato.

3. Unwieldy.

His boisterous club, so buried in the ground,

He could not rearen up again so light,

But that the knight him at advantage found. Fairy Q. b. i.

- To BOLT. v. n. To spring out with speed and suddenness; to start out with the quickness of an arrow.
This Puck seems but a dreaming dolt,
Still walking like a ragged colt,
And oft out of a bush doth bolt,
Of purpose to deceive us. Drayton's Nymphid.
They erected a fort, and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest, sometimes into the forest, sometimes into the woods and fastnesses, and sometimes back again to their den.
Bacon's War with Spain.
As the house was all in a flame, out bolts a mouse from the ruins, to save herself. L'Estrange.
I have reflected on those men, who, from time to time, have shot themselves into the world. I have seen many successions of them; some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and others hissed off. Dryden.
The birds to foreign feats repair'd,
And beasts, that bolted out, and saw the forest bar'd. Dryd.
- BOLT-ROPE. n. f. [from bolt and rope.] The rope on which the sail of a ship is sewed and fastened. Sea Dict.
- BOLTER. n. f. [from the verb.] A sieve to separate meal from bran or husks; or to separate finer from coarser parts.
These hakes, and divers others of the fore-cited, are taken with threads, and some of them with the bolter, which is a spiller of a bigger size. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
Dowlas, filthy dowlas: I have given them away to bakers wives, and they have made bolters of them. Shakefp. Henry IV.
With a good strong chopping-knife mince the two capons, bones and all, as small as ordinary minced meat; put them into a large neat bolter. Bacon's Natural Hist. N° 46.
When superciliously he sifts
Through coarsest bolter others gifts. Hudibras, p. i. c. iii.
- BOLTHEAD. n. f. A long strait-necked glass vessel, for chymical distillations, called also a matrafs, or receiver.
This spirit abounds in salt, which may be separated, by putting the liquor into a bolthead, with a long and narrow neck. Boyle's Sceptical Chymistry.
- BOLTING-HOUSE. n. f. [from bolt and house.] The place where meal is sifted.
The jade is returned as white, and as powdered, as if she had been at work in a bolting-house. Dennis's Letters.
- BOLTSPRIT. n. f. A mast running out at the head of a ship, not standing upright, but aslope. The but-end of it is generally set against the foot of the foremast; so that they are a stay to one another. The length without board is sufficient to let its sails hang clear of all incumbrances. If the boltspit fail in bad weather, the foremast cannot hold long after. Bowspit is perhaps the right spelling. Sea Dictionary.
Sometimes I'd divide,
And burn in many places; on the topmast,
The yards, and boltspit, would I flame distinctly. Sh. Temp.
- BOLUS. n. f. [βολος.] A form of medicine, in which the ingredients are made up into a soft mass, larger than pills, to be swallowed at once.
Keep their bodies soluble the while by clysters, lenitive boluses of cassia and manna, with syrup of violets. Wise man.
By poets we are well assur'd,
That love, alas! can ne'er be cur'd;
A complicated heap of ills,
Despising boluses and pills. Swift.
- BOMB. n. f. [bombus, Lat.]
1. A loud noise.
There was an upper chamber, which being thought weak, was supported by a pillar of iron, of the bigness of one's arm in the midst; which, if you had struck, would make a little flat noise noise in the room, but a great bomb in the chamber beneath.

Bacon's Natural Hist. N<sup>o</sup> 151.

2. A hollow iron ball, or shell, filled with gunpowder, and furnished with a vent for a fusée, or wooden tube, filled with combustible matter; to be thrown out from a mortar, which had its name from the noise it makes. The fusée, being set on fire, burns slowly till it reach the gunpowder, which goes off at once, bursting the shell to pieces with incredible violence; whence the use of bombs in besieging towns. The largest are about eighteen inches in diameter. By whom they were invented, is not known, and the time is uncertain, some fixing it to 1588, and others to 1495. Chambers.

The loud cannon missive iron pours,

And in the slaughter ring bomb Gradivus roars. Rowe.

To BOMB. v. a. [from the noun.] To fall upon with bombs; to bombard.

Our king thus trembles at Namur,

Whilst Villeroy, who ne'er afraid is,

To Bruxelles marches on secure,

To bomb the monks, and scare the ladies. Prior.

BOMB-CHEST. n. f. [from bomb and chest.] A kind of chest filled usually with bombs, and sometimes only with gunpowder, placed under ground, to tear and blow it up in the air, with those who stand on it. They are now much disused. Chambers.

BOMB-KETCH. } n. f. A kind of ship, strongly built, to bear

BOMB-VESSEL. } the shock of a mortar, when bombs are to be fired into a town.

Nor could an ordinary fleet, with bomb-vessels, hope to succeed against a place that has in its arsenal galleys and men of war. Addison on Italy.

Bo'MBARD. n. f. [bombardus, Lat.] A great gun; a cannon: it is a word now obsolete.

They planted in divers places twelve great bombards, where-with they threw huge stones into the air, which, falling down into the city, might break down the houses. Knolles's History.

To BOMBARD. v. a. [from the noun.] To attack with bombs.

A medal is struck on the English failing in their attempts on Dunkirk, when they endeavoured to blow up a fort, and bombard the town. Addison on ancient Medals.

BOMBARDIER. n. f. [from bombard.] The engineer whose employment it is to shoot bombs.

The bombardier tosses his balls sometimes into the midst of a city, with a design to fill all around him with terror and combustion. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup> 88.

BOMBARDMENT. n. f. [from bombard.] An attack made upon any city, by throwing bombs into it.

Genoa is not yet secure from a bombardment, though it is not so exposed as formerly. Addison on Italy.

Bo'MBASIN. n. f. [bombasin, Fr. from bombycinus, silken, Lat.] A slight silken stuff, for mourning.

Bo'MBAST. n. f. [This word seems to be derived from Bombastius, one of the names of Paracelsus; a man remarkable for founding professions, and unintelligible language.] Fustian; big words, without meaning.

Not pedants motley tongue, soldiers bombast,
Mountebanks drug-tongue, nor the terms of law,
Are strong enough preparatives to draw
Me to hear this. Donne.

Are all the flights of heroick poetry to be concluded bombast, unnatural, and mere madness, because they are not affected with their excellencies? Dryden's State of Innocence, Preface.

Bo'MBAST. adj. [from the substantive.] High sounding; of big sound without meaning.

He, as loving his own pride and purpose,

Evades them with a bombast circumstance,

Horribly stuff'd with epithets of war. Shakespeare. Othello.

BOMBILATION. n. f. [from bombus, Lat.] Sound; noise; report.

How to abate the vigour, or silence the bombilation of guns, a way is said to be by borax and butter, mixt in a due proportion, which will almost take off the report, and also the force of the charge. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 5.

BOMBYCINOUS. adj. [bombycinus, Lat.] Silken; made of silk. D.

BONA ROBA. n. f. [Ital. a fine gown.] A whore.

We knew where the bona robas were. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

BONA'SUS. n. f. [Lat.] A kind of buffalo, or wild bull.

1. Cords, or chains, with which any one is bound.

There left me, and my man, both bound together;

Till, gnawing with my teeth my bonds asunder,

I gain'd my freedom. Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors.

2. Ligament that holds any thing together.

Let any one send his contemplation to the extremities of the universe, and see, what conceivable hoops, what bond he can imagine to hold this mass of matter in so close a pressure together. Locke.

3. Union; connexion.

Observe, in working up the walls, that no side of the house, nor any part of the walls, be wrought up three feet above the other, before the next adjoining wall be wrought up to it, so that they may be all joined together, and make a good bond. Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. Chains; imprisonment; captivity.

Whom I perceived to have nothing laid to his charge, worthy of death, or of bonds. Acts, xxiii. 29.

5. Cement of union; cause of union; link of connexion.

Wedding is great Juno's crown;

O blessed bond of board and bed! Shakespeare. As you like it.

Love cools, brothers divide, and the bond is cracked 'twixt son and father. Shakespeare. King Lear.

6. A writing of obligation to pay a sum, or perform a contract.

Go with me to a notary, seal me there

Your single bond. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.

What if I ne'er consent to make you mine;

My father's promise ties me not to time;

And bonds without a date, they say are void. Dryden.

7. Obligation; law by which any man is obliged.

Unhappy that I am! I cannot heave

My heart into my mouth: I love your majesty

According to my bond, no more nor less. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

Take which you please, it dissolves the bonds of government and obedience. Locke.

BOND. adj. [from bind, perhaps for bound; from gebonden, Saxon.] Captive; in a servile state.

Whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free. 1 Cor. xii. 13.

Bo'NDAGE. n. f. [from bond.] Captivity; imprisonment; state of restraint.

You only have overthrown me, and in my bondage consists my glory. Sidney, b. ii.

Say, gentle princess, would you not suppose

Your bondage happy, to be made a queen?—

—To be a queen in bondage, is more vile

Than is a slave in base servility. Shakespeare. Henry VI. p. i.

Our cage

We make a choir, as doth the prison'd bird,

And sing our bondage freely. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

He must resolve by no means to be enslaved, and brought under the bondage of observing oaths, which ought to vanish, when they stand in competition with eating or drinking, or taking money. South.

The king, when he design'd you for my guard,

Resolv'd he would not make my bondage hard. Dryden.

If she has a struggle for honour, she is in a bondage to love; which gives the story its turn that way. Pope; notes on Iliad.

Bo'NDMAID. n. f. [from bond, captive, and maid.] A woman slave.

Good sister, wrong me not, nor wrong yourself,

To make a bondmaid and a slave of me. Shakespeare. T. Shrew.

Bo'NDMAN. n. f. [from bond and man.] A man slave.

Amongst the Romans, in making of a bondman free, was it not wondered wherefore so great ado should be made; the master to present his slave in some court, to take him by the hand, and not only to say, in the hearing of the publick magistrate, I will that this man become free; but, after those solemn words uttered, to strike him on the cheek, to turn him round, the hair of his head to be shaved off, the magistrate to touch him thrice with a rod; in the end, a cap and a white garment given him. Hooker, b. iv. § 1.

O freedom! first delight of human kind;

Not that which bondmen from their masters find. Dryden.

BONDSE'RVANT. n. f. [from bond and servant.] A slave; a servant without the liberty of quitting his master.

And if thy brother, that dwelleth by thee, be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee; thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bondservant. Lev. xxv. 39.

BONDSE'RVICE. n. f. [from bond and service.] The condition of a bondservant; slavery.

Upon those did Solomon levy a tribute of bondservice.

1 Kings, ix. 21.

Bo'NDSLAVE. n. f. [from bond and slave.] A man in slavery; a slave.

Love enjoined such diligence, that no apprentice, no, no bondslave, could ever be, by fear, more ready at all commandments, than that young princess was. Sidney, b. ii.

All her ornaments are taken away; of a freewoman she is become a bondslave. 1 Mac. ii. 11.

Commonly the bondslave is fed by his lord, but here the lord was fed by his bondslave. Sir J. Davies on Ireland.

Bo'NDSMAN. n. f. [from bond and man.]

1. A slave.

Carnal greedy people, without such a precept, would have no mercy upon their poor bondsmen and beasts. Derb. Ph. Theol.

2. A person bound, or giving security for another.

Bo'NDSWOMAN. n. f. [from bond and woman.] A woman slave.

My lords, the senators

Are sold for slaves, and their wives for bondswomen.

Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

BONE.

B O N

BONE. n. f. [ban, Saxon.]

1. The solid parts of the body of an animal are made up of hard fibres, tied one to another by small transverse fibres, as those of the muscles. In a fœtus they are porous, soft, and easily discerned. As their pores fill with a substance of their own nature, so they increase, harden, and grow close to one another. They are all spongy, and full of little cells, or are of a considerable firm thickness, with a large cavity, except the teeth; and where they are articulated, they are covered with a thin and strong membrane, called the periosteum. Each bone is much bigger at its extremity than in the middle, that the articulations might be firm, and the bones not easily put out of joint. But, because the middle of the bone should be strong, to sustain its allotted weight, and resist accidents, the fibres are there more closely compacted together, supporting one another; and the bone is made hollow, and consequently not so easily broken, as it must have been, had it been solid and smaller.

Quincy.

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold. Macbeth.

There was lately a young gentleman bit to the bone. Tatler.

2. A fragment of meat; a bone with as much flesh as adheres to it.

Like Æsop's hounds, contending for the bone,
Each pleaded right, and would be lord alone. Dryden.

3. To be upon the bones. To attack.

Pufs had a month's mind to be upon the bones of him, but was not willing to pick a quarrel. L'Estrange.

4. To make no bones. To make no scruple; a metaphor taken from a dog, who readily swallows meat that has no bones.

5. BONES. A sort of bobbins, made of trotter bones, for weaving bonelace.

6. BONES. Dice.

But then my study was to cog the dice,
And dext'rously to throw the lucky sice:
To shun ames ace that swept my stakes away;
And watch the box, for fear they should convey False bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryden's Pers.

To BONE. v. a. [from the noun.] To take out the bones from the flesh.

Bo'NELACE. n. f. [from bone and lace; the bobbins with which lace is woven being frequently made of bones.] Flaxen lace, such as women wear on their linen.

The things you follow, and make songs on now, should be sent to knit, or sit down to bobbins or bonelace. Tatler.

We destroy the symmetry of the human figure, and foolishly contrive to call off the eye from great and real beauties, to childish gewgaw ribbands and bonelace. Spectator, N° 99.

Bo'NELESS. adj. [from bone.] Without bones.

I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have pluckt my nipple from his boneless gums,
And dasht the brains out. Shakefp. King Lear.

To Bo'NESET. v. n. [from bone and set.] To restore a bone out of joint to its place; or join a bone broken to the other part.

A fractured leg set in the country by one pretending to bone-setting. Wifeman's Surgery.

Bo'NESETTER. n. f. [from boneset.] A surgeon; one who particularly professes the art of restoring broken or luxated bones.

At present my desire is only to have a good bonesetter. Denham's Sophy.

Bo'NFIRE. n. f. [from bon, good, Fr. and fire.] A fire made for some publick cause of triumph or exultation.

Ring ye the bells to make it wear away,
And bonfires make all day. Spenser's Epithalamium.

How came so many bonfires to be made in queen Mary's days? Why, she had abused and deceived her people. South.

Full soon by bonfire, and by bell,
We learnt our liege was passing well. Gay.

Bo'NGRACE. n. f. [bonne grace, Fr.] A forehead-cloth, or covering for the forehead. Skinner.

I have seen her beset all over with emeralds and pearls, ranged in rows about her cawl, her peruke, her bongrace, and chapel. Hakewell on Providence.

Bo'NNET. n. f. [bonnet, Fr.] A covering for the head; a hat; a cap.

Go to them with this bonnet in thy hand,
And thus far having stretch'd it, here be with them,
Thy knee bussing the stones; for, in such business,
Action is eloquence. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

They had not probably the ceremony of veiling the bonnet in their salutations; for, in medals, they still have it on their heads. Addison on ancient Medals.

Bo'NNET. [In fortification.] A kind of little ravelin, without any ditch, having a parapet three feet high, anciently placed before the points of the salient angles of the glacis; being pallisadoed round: of late also used before the angles of bastions, and the points of ravelins.

Bo'NNET à prestre, or priest's cap, is an outwork, having at the head three salient angles, and two inwards. It differs from the double tenaille, because its sides, instead of being parallel, grow narrow at the gorge, and open wider at the front.

Bo'NNETS. [In the sea language.] Small sails set on the courses on the mizzen, mainfail, and foresail of a ship, when these are too narrow or shallow to cloath the mast, or in order to make more way in calm weather. Chambers.

Bo'NNILY. adv. [from bonny.] Gayly; handsomely; plumply.

Bo'NNINESS. n. f. [from bonny.] Gayety; handsomeness; plumpness.

BONNY. adj. [from bon, bonne, Fr. It is a word now almost confined to the Scottish dialect.]

1. Handsome; beautiful.

Match to match I have encounter'd him,

And made a prey for carrion kites and crows,

Ev'n of the bonny beast he lov'd so well. Shakefp. Henry VI.

Thus wail'd the louts in melancholy strain,

Till bonny Susan sped across the plain. Gay's Pastorals.

2. Gay; merry; frolicsome; cheerful; blithe.

Then sigh not so, but let them go,

And be you blithe and bonny. Shakefp. Much ado about N.

3. It seems to be generally used in conversation for plump.

BONNY-CLABBER. n. f. A word used in some counties for sour buttermilk.

We scorn, for want of talk, to jabber,

Of parties o'er our bonny-clabber;

Nor are we studious to enquire,

Who votes for manours, who for hire. Swift.

BO'NUM MAGNUM. n. f. See PLUM; of which it is a species.

Bo'NY. adj. [from bone.]

1. Consisting of bones.

At the end of this hole is a membrane, fastened to a round bony limb, and stretched like the head of a drum; and therefore, by anatomists, called tympanum. Ray on the Creation.

2. Full of bones.

Bo'OBY. n. f. [a word of no certain etymology; Henshaw thinks it a corruption of bull-beef ridiculously; Skinner imagines it to be derived from bobo, foolish, Span. Junius finds bowbard to be an old Scottish word for a coward, a contemptible fellow; from which he naturally deduces booby; but the original of bowbard is not known.] A dull, heavy, stupid fellow; a lubber.

But one exception to this fact we find,

That booby Phaon only was unkind,

An ill-bred boatman, rough as waves and wind. Prior.

Young master next must rise to fill him wine,

And starve himself to see the booby dine. King.

BOOK. n. f. [boc, Sax. supposed from boc, a beech; because they wrote on beechen boards, as liber in Latin, from the rind of a tree.]

1. A volume in which we read or write.

See a book of prayer in his hand;

True ornaments to know a holy man. Shakefp. Richard III.

Receive the sentence of the law for sins,

Such as by God's book are adjudg'd to death.

Shakefp. Henry IV.

But in the coffin that had the books, they were found as fresh as if they had been but newly written; being written on parchment, and covered over with watch candles of wax. Bacon.

Books are a sort of dumb teachers; they cannot answer sudden questions, or explain present doubts: this is properly the work of a living instructor. Watts.

2. A particular part of a work.

The first book we divide into sections; whereof the first is these chapters past. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. The register in which a trader keeps an account of his debts.

This life

Is nobler than attending for a check;

Prouder, than rustling in unpaid for silk:

Such gain the cap of him that makes them fine,

Yet keeps his book uncross'd. Shakefp. Cymbeline.

4. In books. In kind remembrance.

I was so much in his books, that, at his decease, he left me the lamp by which he used to write his lucubrations. Addison.

5. Without book. By memory; by repetition; without reading.

Sermons read they abhor in the church; but sermons without book, sermons which spend their life in their birth, and may have publick audience but once. Hooker, b. v. § 21.

To BOOK. v. a. [from the noun.] To register in a book.

I beseech your grace, let it be booked with the rest of this day's deeds; or I will have it in a particular ballad else, with mine own picture on the top of it. Shakefp. Henry IV. p. ii.

He made wilful murder high treason; he caused the marchers to book their men, for whom they should make answer. Davies on Ireland.

BOOK-KEEPING. n. f. [from book and keep.] The art of keeping accounts, or recording the transactions of a man's affairs, in such a manner, that at any time he may thereby know the true state of the whole, or any part, of his affairs, with clearness and expedition. Harris.

Bo'OKBINDER. n. f. [from book and bind.] A man whose profession it is to bind books.

Bo'OKFUL. adj. [from book and full.] Full of notions gleaned from books; crouded with undigested knowledge.

The bookful blockhead, ignorantly read,
With loads of learned lumber in his head,
With his own tongue still edifies his ears,
And always list'ning to himself appears. Pope's Ess. on Crit.
Bo'OKISH. adj. [from book.] Given to books; acquainted only with books. It is generally used contemptuously.

I'll make him yield the crown,
Whose bookish rule hath pull'd fair England down.
Shakefp. Henry VI. p. ii.

I'm not bookish, yet I can read waiting gentlewomen in the 'scape. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.

Xantippe follows the example of her namesake; being married to a bookish man, who has no knowledge of the world.
Spectator, N° 482.

Bo'OKISHNESS. n. f. [from bookish.] Much application to books;
over-studiousness.

BOOKLE'ARNED. adj. [from book and learned.] Versed in books, or literature: a term implying some slight contempt.

Whate'er these booklearn'd blockheads say,
Solon's the verifit fool in all the play. Dryden's Persius.

He will quote passages out of Plato and Pindar, at his own table, to some booklearned companion, without blushing. Swift.

BOOKLE'ARNING. n. f. [from book and learning.] Skill in literature; acquaintance with books; a term of some contempt.

They might talk of booklearning what they would; but, for his part, he never saw more unfeaty fellows than great clerks.
Sidney.

Neither does it so much require booklearning and scholarship, as good natural sense, to distinguish true and false, and to discern what is well proved, and what is not. Burnet's Th. Earth.

Bo'OKMAN. n. f. [from book and man.] A man whose profession is the study of books.

This civil war of wits were much better us'd
On Navarre and his bookmen; for here 'tis abus'd.
Shakefp. Love's Labour Lost.

Bo'OKMATE. n. f. [from book and mate.] Schoolfellow.

This Armado is a Spaniard that keeps here in court,
A phantasm, a monarch, and one that makes sport
To the prince and his bookmates. Shakefp. Love's Labour Lost.

Bo'OKSELLER. n. f. [from book and sell.] He whose profession it is to sell books.

He went to the bookseller, and told him in anger, he had sold a book in which there was false divinity.
Walton's Life of Bishop Saunderson.

Bo'OKWORM. n. f. [from book and worm.]

1. A worm or mite that eats holes in books, chiefly when damp.

My lion, like a moth or bookworm, feeds upon nothing but paper, and I shall beg of them to diet him with wholesome and substantial food. Guardian, N° 114.

2. A student too closely given to books; a reader without judgment.

Among those venerable galleries and solitary scenes of the university, I wanted but a black gown, and a salary, to be as mere a bookworm as any there. Pope's Letters.

Bo'OLY. n. f. [an Irish term.]

All the Tartarians, and the people about the Caspian sea, which are naturally Scythians, live in herds; being the very fame that the Irish boodies are, driving their cattle continually with them, and feeding only on their milk and white meats.
Spenser's Ireland.

BOOM. n. f. [from boom, a tree, Dutch.]

1. [In sea language.] A long pole used to spread out the clue of the fudding sail; and sometimes the clues of the mainfail and forefail are boomed out.

2. A pole with bushes or baskets, set up as a mark to shew the failors how to steer in the channel, when a country is overflown.
Sea Dict.

3. A bar of wood laid cross a harbour, to keep off the enemy.

As his heroick worth struck envy dumb,
Who took the Dutchman, and who cut the boom. Dryden.

To Boom. v. n. [from the noun. A sea term.] To rush with violence; as a ship is said to come booming, when she makes all the sail she can.

Forfook by thee, in vain I fought thy aid,
When booming billows clos'd above my head. Pope's Odyss.

BOON. n. f. [from bene, Sax. a petition.] A gift; a grant; a benefaction; a present.

Vouchsafe me for my meed but one fair look:
A smaller boon than this I cannot beg,
And less than this, I'm sure, you cannot give.
Shakefp. Two Gentlemen of Verona.

That courtier, who obtained a boon of the emperour, that he might every morning whisper him in the ear, and say nothing, asked no unprofitable suit for himself. Bacon.

The blust'ring fool has satisfy'd his will;
His boon is giv'n; his knight has gain'd the day,
But lost the prize. Dryden's Fables.

What rhetorick didst thou use,
To gain this mighty boon? she pities me! Addison's Cato.

BOON. adj. [bon, Fr.] Gay; merry; as, a boon companion.

Satiate at length,
And heighten'd as with wine, jocund and boon,
Thus to herself she pleasingly began. Parad. Lost, b. ix.

I know the infirmity of our family; we are apt to play the boon companion, and throw our money away in our cups.
Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.

BOOR. n. f. [beer, Dutch; gebuene, Sax.] A ploughman; a country fellow; a lout; a clown.

The bare sense of a calamity is called grumbling; and if a man does but make a face upon the boor, he is presently a male-content. L'Estrange.

He may live as well as a boor of Holland, whose cares of growing still richer waste his life. Temple.

To one well-born, th' affront is worse and more,
When he's abus'd and baff'd by a boor. Dryden.

Bo'ORISH. adj. [from boor.] Clownish; rustick; untaught; uncivilized.

Therefore, you clown, abandon, which is in the vulgar, leave the society, which, in the boorish, is, company of this female. Shakefp. As you like it.

Bo'ORISHLY. adv. [from boorish.] In a boorish manner; after a clownish manner.

Bo'ORISHNESS. n. f. [from boorish.] Clownishness; rusticity; coarseness of manners.

BOOSE. n. f. [bozig, Sax.] A stall for a cow or an ox.

To BOOT. v. a. [baten, to profit, Dutch; botz, in Saxon, is recompence, repentance, or fine paid by way of expiation; botan is, to repent, or to compensate; as,

He is þir þ botz and boze,
And bet bivopen dome.]

1. To profit; to advantage.

It shall not boot them, who derogate from reading, to excuse it, when they see no other remedy; as if their intent were only to deny, that aliens and strangers from the family of God are won, or that belief doth use to be wrought at the first in them, without sermons. Hooker, b. v. § 22.

For what I have, I need not to repeat;
And what I want, it boots not to complain. Shakefp. R. II.

If we shun
The purpos'd end, or here lie fixed all,
What boots it us these wars to have begun. Fairfax, b. i.

What boots the regal circle on his head,
That long behind he trails his pompous robe? Pope.

2. To enrich; to benefit.

And I will boot thee with what gift beside,
That modesty can beg. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

BOOT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Profit; gain; advantage.

My gravity,
Wherein, let no man hear me, I take pride,
Could I, with boot, change for an idle plume,
Which the air beats for vain. Shakefp. Measure for Measure.

2. To boot. With advantage; over and above.

Canst thou, O partial sleep, give thy repose
To the wet seaboy, in an hour so rude:
And, in the calmest and the stillest night,
With all appliances, and means to boot,
Deny it to a king? Shakefp. Henry IV. p. ii.

Man is God's image; but a poor man is Christ's stamp to boot: both images regard. Herbert.

He might have his mind and manners formed, and he be instructed to boot in several sciences. Locke.

3. It seems, in the following lines, used for booty, or plunder.

Others, like soldiers, armed in their flings,
Make boot upon the summer's velvet buds. Shakefp. Henry V.

BOOT. n. f. [bottas, Armorick; botes, a shoe, Welch; botte, French.]

1. A covering for the leg, used by horsemen.

That my leg is too long—
—No; that it is too little.—
—I'll wear a boot, to make it somewhat rounder.
Shakefp. Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Shew'd him his room, where he must lodge that night,
Pull'd off his boots, and took away the light. Milton.

Bishop Wilkins says, he does not question, but it will be as usual for a man to call for his wings, when he is going a journey, as it is now to call for his boots. Addison. Guardian.

2. A kind of rack for the leg, formerly used in Scotland for torturing criminals.

BOOT of a Coach. The space between the coachman and the coach.

To BOOT. v. a. [from the noun.] To put on boots.

Boot, boot, Master Shallow; I know the young king is sick for me: let us take any man's horses. Shakefp. Henry IV. p. ii.

BOOT-HOSE. n. f. [from boot and hose.] Stockings to serve for boots; spatterdashies.

His lacquey with a linen stock on one leg, and a boot-hose on the other, gartered with a red and blue list. Shakefp. Taming of the Shrew.

BOOT-TREE. n. f. [from boot and tree.] Two pieces of wood, shaped like a leg, to be driven into boots, for stretching and widening them.

Bo'OTCATCHER. n. f. [from boot and catch.] The person whose business at an inn is to pull off the boots of passengers.

The offler and the bootcatcher ought to partake. Swift.
Bo'OTED. adj. [from boot.] In boots; in a horseman's habit.
 A booted judge shall sit to try his cause,
 Not by the statute, but by martial laws. Dryden's Juvenal.
BoOTH. n. f. [boed, Dutch; bwth, Welch.] A house built of boards, or boughs, to be used for a short time.
 The clothiers found means to have all the quest made of the northern men, such as had their booths standing in the fair.
Camden's Remains.

Much mischief will be done at Bartholomew fair, by the fall of a booth. Swift's Predictions.

Bo'OTLESS. adj. [from boot.]

1. Useless; unprofitable; unavailing; without advantage.
 When those accursed messengers of hell
 Came to their wicked man, and 'gan tell
 Their bootless pains, and ill succeeding night. Fairy Q. b. i.
 God did not suffer him, being desirous of the light of wisdom, with bootless expence of travel, to wander in darkness.
Hooker, b. i. p. 36.

Bootless speed,
 When cowardice pursues, and valour flies. Shakespeare.
 Let him alone;
 I'll follow him no more with bootless pray'rs:
 He seeks my life. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
 2. Without success; perhaps without booty; Shakespeare having,
 in another place, used the word boot for booty.

Thrice from the banks of Wye,
 And sandy bottom'd Severn, have I sent
 Him bootless home, and weatherbeaten back. Shakespeare. H. IV.

Bo'OTY. n. f. [buyt, Dutch; butin, Fr.]

1. Plunder; pillage; spoils gained from the enemy.
 One way a band select from forage drives
 A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,
 Their booty. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 650.
 His conscience is the hue and cry that pursues him; and when he reckons that he has gotten a booty, he has only caught
 a Tartar. L'Estrange.

For, should you to extortion be inclin'd,
 Your cruel guilt will little booty find. Dryden's Juv. sat. viii.
 2. Things gotten by robbery.

If I had a mind to be honest, I see, fortune would not suffer me; she drops booties in my mouth. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

3. To play booty. To play dishonestly, with an intent to lose. The French use, Je suis botte, when they mean to say, I will not go.

We understand what we ought to do; but when we deliberate, we play booty against ourselves: our consciences direct us
 one way, our corruptions hurry us another. L'Estrange.

I have set this argument in the best light, that the ladies may not think I write booty. Dryden.

BoPE'EP. n. f. [from bo and peep.] To look out, and draw back as if frightened, or with the purpose to fright some other.

Then they for sudden joy did weep,
 And I for sorrow sung,
 That such a king should play bopeep,
 And go the fools among. Shakespeare. King Lear:
 Rivers,

That serve instead of peaceful barriers,
 To part th' engagements of their warriours,
 Where both from side to side may skip,
 And only encounter at bopeep. Hudibras, p. iii. c. iii.

There the devil plays at bopeep, puts out his horns to do mischief, then shrinks them back for safety. Dryden's Span. Friar.

BORACHIO. n. f. [borracho, Span.] A drunkard.

How you stink of wine! D' ye think my niece will ever endure such a borachio! you're an absolute borachio.

Bo'RABLE. adj. [from bore.] That may be bored.

Bo'RAGE. n. f. [from borago, Lat.] A plant.

The leaves are broad and rough; the flowers consist of one leaf; are of a wheel shape, and divided into five segments, almost to the bottom, which end in sharp points, like a star; the apices, in the middle of the flower, are sharp-pointed, and adhere together; the seeds are rough, and appear like a viper's head. This plant is often used in the kitchen, and for a cool tankard in the summer time; and the flowers are used in medicinal cordials. Millar.

BORAMEZ. n. f. The Scythian lamb, generally known by the name of Agnus Scythicus.

Much wonder is made of the boramez, that strange plant-animal, or vegetable lamb of Tartary, which wolves delight to feed on; which hath the shape of a lamb, affordeth a bloody juice upon breaking, and liveth while the plants be consumed about it. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 27.

BORAX. n. f. [borax, low Latin.] An artificial salt, prepared from sal armoniac, nitre, calcined tartar, sea salt, and alum, dissolved in wine. It is principally used to solder metals, and sometimes an uterine ingredient in medicine. Quincy.

Bo'RDEL. n. f. [bordeel, Teut. bordel, Armorick.] A brothel;
 a bawdyhouse.

Making even his own house a stews, a bordel, and a school of lewdness, to instil vice into the unwary years of his poor children. South.

Bo'OTLESS. adj. [from boot.]

1. Useless; unprofitable; unavailing; without advantage.

When those accursed messengers of hell
 Came to their wicked man, and 'gan tell
 Their bootless pains, and ill succeeding night. Fairy Q. b. i.
 God did not suffer him, being desirous of the light of wisdom, with bootless expence of travel, to wander in darkness.
Hooker, b. i. p. 36.

Bootless speed,
 When cowardice pursues, and valour flies. Shakespeare.
 Let him alone;
 I'll follow him no more with bootless pray'rs:
 He seeks my life. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
 2. Without success; perhaps without booty; Shakespeare having,
 in another place, used the word boot for booty.

Thrice from the banks of Wye,
 And sandy bottom'd Severn, have I sent
 Him bootless home, and weatherbeaten back. Shakespeare. H. IV.

Bo'OTY. n. f. [buyt, Dutch; butin, Fr.]

1. Plunder; pillage; spoils gained from the enemy.

One way a band select from forage drives
 A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,
 Their booty. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 650.
 His conscience is the hue and cry that pursues him; and when he reckons that he has gotten a booty, he has only caught
 a Tartar. L'Estrange.

For, should you to extortion be inclin'd,
 Your cruel guilt will little booty find. Dryden's Juv. sat. viii.
 2. Things gotten by robbery.

If I had a mind to be honest, I see, fortune would not suffer me; she drops booties in my mouth. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

3. To play booty. To play dishonestly, with an intent to lose. The French use, Je suis botte, when they mean to say, I will not go.

We understand what we ought to do; but when we deliberate, we play booty against ourselves: our consciences direct us
 one way, our corruptions hurry us another. L'Estrange.

I have set this argument in the best light, that the ladies may not think I write booty. Dryden.

BoPE'EP. n. f. [from bo and peep.] To look out, and draw back as if frightened, or with the purpose to fright some other.

Then they for sudden joy did weep,

Those milk paps,
That through the window lawn bore at men's eyes,
Are not within the leaf of pity writ. Shakesp. Timon.
Nor southward to the raining regions run;
But boring to the west, and hov'ring there,
With gaping mouths they draw prolifick air. Dryden.
To BORE. v. n. [with farriers.] Is when a horse carries his nose near the ground. Dist.
BORE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The hole made by boring.
Into hollow engines long and round,
Thick ramm'd, at th' other bore with touch of fire
Dilated, and infuriate. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
We took a cylindrical pipe of glass, whose bore was about a quarter of an inch in diameter. Boyle.
2. The instrument with which a hole is bored.
So shall that hole be fit for the file, or square bore, if the curiosity of your proposed work cannot allow it to pass without filing. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.
3. The size of any hole.
Our careful monarch stands in person by,
This new-cast cannon's firmness to explore;
The strength of big-corn'd powder loves to try,
And ball and cartridge forts for every bore. Dryden.
It will best appear in the *bore*s of wind instruments; therefore cause pipes to be made with a single, double, and so on, to a sextuple bore; and mark what tone every one giveth. Bacon.
BORE. The preterite of bear.
The father bore it with undaunted soul,
Like one who durst his destiny controul;
Yet with becoming grief he bore his part,
Resign'd his son, but not resign'd his heart. Dryden.
'Twas my fate
To kill my father, and pollute his bed,
By marrying her who bore me. Dryden and Lee's OEdipus.
BO'REAL. adj. [borealis, Lat.] Northern.
Crete's ample fields diminish to our eye;
Before the boreal blasts the vessels fly. Pope's Odyssey.
BO'REAS. n. f. [Lat.] The north wind.
Boreas, and Cærias, and Argestas loud,
And Thrascias, rend the woods, and seas up-turn.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 699.
BO'REE. n. f. A kind of dance.
Dick could neatly dance a jig,
But Tom was best at borees. Swift.
BO'RER. n. f. [from bore.] A piercer; an instrument to make holes with.
The master-bricklayer must try all the foundations, with a borer, such as well-diggers use, to try what ground they have.
Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.
BORN. The participle passive of bear.
Their charge was always born by the queen, and duly paid out of the exchequer. Bacon.
The great men were enabled to oppress their inferiours; and their followers were born out and countenanced in wicked actions. Sir John Davies on Ireland.
Upon some occasions, Clodius may be bold and insolent,
born away by his passion. Swift.
To be BORN. v. n. pass. [derived from the word to bear, in the sense of bringing forth; as, my mother bore me twenty years ago; or, I was born twenty years ago.]
1. To come into life.
When we are born, we cry, that we are come
To this great stage of fools. Shakesp. King Lear.
Nor nature's law with fruitless sorrow mourn,
But die, O mortal man! for thou wast born. Prior.
All that are born into the world, are surrounded with bodies, that perpetually and diversly affect them. Locke.
2. It is usually spoken with regard to circumstances; as, he was born a prince; he was born to empire; he was born for greatness; that is, formed at the birth.
The stranger that dwelleth with you, shall be unto you as one born among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself. Levit. xix. 34.
Yet man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward. Job, v. 7.
A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adversity. Prov. xvii. 17.
The new born babe by nurses overlaid. Dryden.
Either of you knights may well deserve
A prince's born; and such is she you serve. Dryden's Fab.
Two rising crests his royal head adorn;
Born from a god, himself to godhead born. Dryden's Æn.
Both must alike from heav'n derive their light;
These born to judge, as well as those to write. Pope.
For all mankind alike require their grace;
All born to want; a miserable race! Pope's Odyssey.
I was born to a good estate, although it now turneth to little account. Swift's Story of an injured Lady.
Their lands are let to lords, who never designed to be tenants, naturally murmur at the payment of rents, as a subserviency they were not born to. Swift.

3. It has usually the particle of before the mother.
Be bloody, bold, and resolute, laugh to scorn
The pow'r of man; for none of woman born Shall harm Macbeth. Shakesp. Macbeth.
I being born of my father's first wife, and she of his third, she converses with me rather like a daughter than a sister. Tatler.
BO'ROUGH. n. f. [borhoe, Saxon.]
1. It signified anciently a surety, or a man bound for others.
A borough, as I here use it, and as the old laws still use, is not a borough town, that is, a franchised town; but a main pledge of an hundred free persons, therefore called a free bo- rough, or, as you say, francplegium. For berth, in old Saxon, signifieth a pledge or surety; and yet it is so used with us in some speeches, as Chaucer saith, St. John to Boreh; that is, for assurance and warranty. Spenser's Ireland.
2. A town with a corporation.
BO'ROUGH English, is a customary descent of lands or tenements, whereby, in all places where this custom holds, lands and tenements descend to the youngest son; or, if the owner have no issue, to his youngest brother. Cowel.
BO'RREL. n. f. [it is explained by Junius without etymology.]
A mean fellow.
Siker thou speak'st like a lewd sorrel,
Of heaven, to deemen so:
Howbe I am but rude and borrel,
Yet nearer ways I know. Spenser's Past.
To BO'RROW. v. a. [borgen, Dutch; borxian, Saxon.]
1. To take something from another upon credit.
He borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman, and swore he would pay him again when he was able. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
We have borrowed money for the king's tribute, and that upon our lands and vineyards. Neh. v. 4.
2. To ask of another the use of something for a time.
Then he said, go, borrow thee vessels abroad of all thy neighbours. 2 Kings, iv. 3.
Where darkness and surprize made conquest cheap!
Where virtue borrowed the arms of chance,
And struck a random blow! Dryden's Span. Friar.
3. To take something of another.
A borrow'd title hast thou bought too dear;
Why didst thou tell me that thou wert a king? Sh. H. IV.
They may borrow something of instruction even from their past guilt. Decay of Piety.
I was engaged in the translation of Virgil, from whom I have borrowed only two months. Dryden's Dufresn.
These verbal signs they sometimes borrow from others, and sometimes make themselves; as one may observe among the new names children give to things. Locke.
Some persons of bright parts have narrow remembrance; for having riches of their own, they are not solicitous to borrow.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
4. To use as one's own, though not belonging to one.
Unkind and cruel, to deceive your son
In borrow'd shapes, and his embrace to shun. Dryden's Æn.
BO'RROW. n. f. [from the verb.] The thing borrowed.
Yet of your royal presence I'll adventure
The borrow of a week. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
BO'RROWER. n. f. [from borrow.]
1. He that borrows; he that takes money upon trust.
His talk is of nothing but of his poverty, for fear belike lest
I should have proved a young borrower. Sidney, b. ii.
Neither a borrower nor a lender be;
For loan oft loses both itself and friend,
And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry. Hamlet.
Go not, my horse, the better;
I must become a borrower of the night
For a dark hour or twain. Shakesp. Macbeth.
But you invert the cov'nants of her trust,
And harshly deal, like an ill borrower,
With that which you receiv'd on other terms. Milton.
2. He that takes what is another's, and uses it as his own.
Some say, that I am a great borrower; however, none of my creditors have challenged me for it. Pope.
BO'SCAGE. n. f. [boscage, Fr.] Wood, or woodlands; representation of woods.
We bent our course thither, where we saw the appearance of land; and, the next day, we might plainly discern that it was a land flat to our sight, and full of boscage, which made it shew the more dark. Bacon's N. Atlantis.
Chearful paintings in feasting and banqueting rooms; graver stories in galleries; landskips and boscage, and such wild works, in open terraces, or summer-houses. Wotton.
BO'SKY. adj. [bosque, Fr.] Woody.
And with each end of thy blue bow do'st crown
My bosky acres, and my unshrub'd down. Shakesp. Tempest.
I know each land, and every alley green,
Dingle, or bushy dell, of this wild wood,
And every bosky bourn from side to side. Milton.
BO'SOM. n. f. [boyme, bojom, Saxon.]
1. The embrace of the arms holding any thing to the breast.
2. The breast; the heart.

B O S

- Our good old friend,
Lay comforts to your bosom; and bestow
Your needful counsel to our businesses. Shakefp. King Lear.
3. The inclosure.
Unto laws thus made and received by a whole church, they which live within the bosom of that church, must not think it a matter indifferent, either to yield, or not to yield, obedience.
Hooker, b. ii.
4. The folds of the dress that cover the breast.
Put now thy hand into thy bosom; and he put his hand into his bosom: and when he took it out, behold his hand was leprous as snow. Exodus, iv. 6.
5. The tender affections; kindness; favour.
Whose age has charms in it, whose title more,
To pluck the common bosoms on his side. Shakefp. K. Lear.
To whom the great Creator thus reply'd:
O Son, in whom my soul hath chief delight;
Son of my bosom, Son who art alone
My word, my wisdom, and effectual might. Par. Lost, b. iii.
6. Inclination; desire.
If you can pace your wisdom
In that good path that I could wish it go,
You shall have your bosom on this wretch.
Shakefp. Measure for Measure.
- BOSOM, in composition, implies intimacy; confidence; a fondness.
No more that thane of Cawder shall deceive
Our bosom-int'rest; go, pronounce his death. Macbeth.
This Antonio,
Being the bosom-lover of my lord,
Must needs be like my lord. Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.
Those domestick traitors, bosom-thieves,
Whom custom hath call'd wives; the readiest helps
To betray the heady husbands, rob the easy.
Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
He sent for his bosom-friends, with whom he most confidently consulted, and shewed the paper to them; the contents whereof he could not conceive. Clarendon.
The fourth privilege of friendship is that which is here specified in the text, a communication of secrets. A bosom-secret, and a bosom-friend, are usually put together. South.
She who was a bosom-friend of her royal mistress, he calls an insolent woman, the worst of her sex. Addison's Whig Exam.
- TO BOSOM. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To inclose in the bosom.
Bosom up my counsel;
You'll find it wholesome. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
I do not think my sister so to seek,
Or so unprincipled in virtue's book,
And the sweet peace that bosoms goodness ever. Milton.
2. To conceal in privacy.
The groves, the fountains, and the flow'rs,
That open now their choicest bosom'd smells,
Reserv'd for night, and kept for thee in store. Par. Lost, b. v.
Towers and battlements it sees,
Bosom'd high in tufted trees,
Where perhaps some beauty lies,
The cynosure of neighbouring eyes. Milton.
To happy convents, bosom'd deep in vines,
Where slumber abbots, purple as their wines. Pope.
- BO'SON. n. f. [corrupted from boatswain.]
The barks upon the billows ride,
The master will not stay;
The merry boson from his side
His whistle takes, to check and chide
The ling'ring lad's delay. Dryden's Albion.
- BOSS. n. f. [bosse, Fr.]
1. A stud; an ornament raised above the rest of the work; a shining prominence.
What signifies beauty, strength, youth, fortune, embroidered furniture, or gaudy bosses? L'Estrange.
This ivory was intended for the bosses of a bridle, was laid up for a prince, and a woman of Caria or Mæonia dyed it.
Pope's Notes on Iliad.
2. The part rising in the midst of any thing.
He runneth upon him, even on his neck, upon the thick bosses of his bucklers. Job, xv. 26.
3. A thick body of any kind.
A boss made of wood, with an iron hook, to hang on the laths, or on a ladder, in which the labourer puts the mortar at the britches of the tiles. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.
If a close appulse be made by the lips, then is framed M; if by the boss of the tongue to the palate, near the throat, then K.
Holder's Elements of Speech.
- BO'SSAGE. n. f. [in architecture.]
1. Any stone that has a projecture, and is laid in a place in a building, to be afterwards carved.
2. Rustick work, which consists of stones, which seem to advance beyond the naked of a building, by reason of indentures or channels left in the joinings: these are chiefly in the corners of edifices, and called rustick quoins. Builder's Dict.
- BO'SVEL. n. f. A species of crowfoot; which see.

And, plodding on, must make a calf an ox,
Hath made a lawyer. Donne.
Botches and blains must all his flesh imbosh,
And all his people. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii. l. 180.
It proves far more incommodious, which, if it were propelled in boils, botches, or ulcers, as in the scurvy, would rather conduce to health. Harvey on Consumptions.
2. A part in any work ill finished, so as to appear worse than the rest.
With him,
To leave no rubs or botches in the work,
Fleance, his son, must embrace the fate. Shakefp. Macbeth.
3. An adscititious, adventitious part clumsily added.
If both those words are not notorious botches, I am much deceived; though the French translator thinks otherways.
Dryden's Dedication, Æneid.
A comma ne'er could claim
A place in any British name;
Yet, making here a perfect botch,
Thrusts your poor vowel from his notch. Swift.
- TO BOTCH. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To mend or patch cloaths clumsily.
Their coats, from botching newly brought, are torn. Dryden.

Religion and the government. Hudibras, p. iii. c. ii.
3. To put together unsuitably, or unskilfully; to make up of unsuitable pieces.
Go with me to my house,
And hear thou there, how many fruitless pranks
This ruffian hath botch'd up, that thou thereby May smile at this. Shakefp. Twelfth Night.
Her speech is nothing,
Yet the unshaped use of it doth move
The hearers to collection; they aim at it,
And botch the words up fit to their own thoughts. Hamlet.
For treason botch'd in rhyme will be thy bane;
Rhime is the rock on which thou art to wreck. Dryden.
4. To mark with botches.
Young Hylas, botch'd with stains too foul to name,
In cradle here renews his youthful frame. Garth's Dispens.
- BO'TCHER. n. f. [from botch.] A mender of old cloaths; the same to a taylor as a cobbler to a shoemaker.
He was a botcher's prentice in Paris, from whence he was whipt for getting the sheriff's fool with child.
Shakefp. All's well that ends well.
Botchers left old cloaths in the lurch,
And fell to turn and patch the church. Hudibras, c. ii.
- BO'TCHY. adj. [from botch.] Marked with botches.

Illimitable ocean! without bound;

Without dimension; where length, breadth, and height,

And time, and place, are lost. Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 892.

Those vast Scythian regions were separated by the common natural bounds, of rivers, lakes, mountains, woods, or marshes. Temple.

Indus and Ganges, our wide empire's bounds,

Swell their dy'd currents with their natives wounds. Dryden.

Through all th' infernal bounds,

Which flaming Phlegethon surrounds,

Sad Orpheus sought his consort lost. Pope's St. Cecilia.

2. A limit by which any excursion is restrained.

Hath he set bounds between their love and me?

I am their mother, who shall bar me from them. Rich. III.

Stronger and fiercer by restraint he roars,

And knows no bound, but makes his pow'r his shores. Denb.

Any bounds made with body, even adamantine walls, are far from putting a stop to the mind, in its farther progress in space. Locke.

3. [from to bound, v. n.] A leap; a jump; a spring.

VOL. I.

Do but note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetiching mad bounds, bellowing, and neighing loud.

Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.

The horses started with a sudden bound,

And flung the reins and chariot to the ground. Addis. Ovid.

Dext'rous he escapes the coach with nimble bounds,

Whilst ev'ry honest tongue stop thief resounds. Gay.

Mark then a bounding valour in our English,

That being dead, like to the bullets grazing,

Breaks out into a second course of mischief. Shakefp. H. V.

TO BOUND. v. a. To make to bound.

If I might buffet for any love, or bound my horse for her favours, I would lay on like a butcher, and sit like a jackanapes, never off. Shakefp. Henry V.

If love, ambitious, fought a match of birth,

Whose veins bound richer blood than lady Blanch. Rich. III.

BOUND. participle passive of bind.

Nay, said Pamela, none shall take that office from myself, being so much bound as I am for my education. Sidney, b. ii.

This is Antonio;

To whom I am so infinitely bound.—

—You should in all sense be much bound to him;

For, as I hear, he was much bound for you. Merch. of Ven.

The gentleman is learn'd, a most rare speaker;

To nature none more bound. Shakefp. Henry VIII.

The bishops of Hungary, being wonderfully rich, were bound to keep great numbers of horsemen, which they used to bring into the field. Knolles's History of the Turks.

They summoned the governour to deliver it to them, or else they would not leave one stone upon another. To which the governour made no other reply, than that he was not bound to repair it; but, however, he would, by God's help, keep the ground afterwards. Clarendon, b. viii.

BOUND. adj. [a word of doubtful etymology.] Destined; intending to come to any place.

His be that care, whom most it doth concern,

Said he; but whither with such hasty flight

Art thou now bound? for well might I discern

Great cause, that carries thee so swift and light. Fairy Q. b. ii.

To be bound for a port one desires extremely, and sail to it, with a fair gale, is very pleasant. Temple.

Willing we sought your shores; and hither bound,

The port so long desir'd, at length we found. Dryden.

3. To bend, or incline, in condescension.

Let it not grieve thee to bow down thine ear to the poor, and give him a friendly answer. Ecclus, iv. 8.

4. To depress ; to crush.

Are you so gospell'd,

To pray for this good man, and for his issue,

Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,

And beggar'd yours for ever. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Now wasting years my former strength confound,

And added woes may bow me to the ground. Pope.

To Bow. v. n.

1. To bend ; to suffer flexure.

2. To make a reverence.

B O W

- Rather let my head
Stoop to the block, than these knees bow to any,
Save to the God of heav'n, and to my king. Shakesp. H. VI.
This is the great idol to which the world bows; to this we pay our devoutest homage. Decay of Piety.
Admir'd, ador'd by all the circling crowd,
For where'er she turn'd her face, they bow'd. Dryden.
3. To stoop.
The people bow'd down upon their knees, to drink water. Judges, vii. 6.

- Bow. n. f. [from the verb. It is pronounced, like the verb, as now, bow.] An act of reverence or submission, by bending the body.
Some clergy too she wou'd allow,
Nor quarrel'd at their awkward bow. Swift.
- Bow. n. f. [pronounced as grow, no, lo, without any regard to the w.]
1. An instrument of war, made by holding wood or metal bent with a string, which, by its spring, shoots arrows with great force.
Take, I pray thee, thy weapons, thy quiver and thy bow, and go out to the field, and take me some venison. Gen. xxvii. 3.
The white faith of hist'ry cannot show,
That e'er the musket yet could beat the bow. Alleyne's Henry VII.
Twining woody haunts, or the tough yew
To bows strong-straining. Thomson's Autumn.
2. A rainbow.
I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth. Gen. ix. 13.
3. The instrument with which string-instruments are struck.
Their instruments were various in their kind;
Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind:
The sawtry, pipe, and hautboy's noisy band,
And the soft lute trembling beneath the touching hand. Dryden's Fables.
4. The doubling of a string in a slip-knot.
Make a knot, and let the second knot be with a bow. Wifeman's Surgery.
5. A yoke.
As the ox hath his bow, Sir, the horse his curb, and the faulcon his bells, so man hath his desire. Shakesp. As you like it.
6. Bow of a saddle. The bows of a saddle are two pieces of wood laid archwise, to receive the upper part of a horse's back, to give the saddle its due form, and to keep it tight. Farrier's D.
7. Bow of a ship. That part of her which begins at the loof, and compassing ends of the stern, and ends at the sternmost parts of the fore-castle. If a ship hath a broad bow, they call it a bald bow; if a narrow thin bow, they say she hath a lean bow. The piece of ordnance that lies in this place, is called the bow-piece; and the anchors that hang here, are called her great and little bows.
8. Bow is also a mathematical instrument, made of wood, formerly used by seamen in taking the sun's altitude.
9. Bow is likewise a beam of wood or brass, with three long screws, that direct a lath of wood or steel to any arch; used commonly to draw draughts of ships, projections of the sphere, or wherever it is requisite to draw long arches. Harris.

- lowing the veins, he has made himself two or three fountains in the bowels of the mountain. Addison on Italy.
3. Tendernefs; compassion.
He had no other consideration of money, than for the support of his lustre; and whilst he could do that, he cared not for money; having no bowels in the point of running in debt, or borrowing all he could. Clarendon.
4. This word seldom has a singular, except in writers of anatomy.
- Bo'WER. n. f. [from bough or branch, or from the verb to bow or bend.]
1. An arbour; a sheltered place covered with green trees, twined and bent.
But, O sad virgin, that thy power
Might raise Musæus from his bower. Milton.
To Gods appealing, when I reach their bow'rs
With loud complaints, they answer me in show'rs. Waller.
Refresh'd, they wait them to the bow'r of state,
Where, circl'd with his peers, Atrides sat. Pope.
2. It seems to signify, in Spenser, a blow; a stroke: bourrer, Fr. to fall upon.
His rawbone arms, whose mighty brawned bowers
Were wont to rive steel plates, and helmets hew,
Were clean consum'd, and all his vital powers
Decay'd. Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. viii. stanza. 41.
- Bo'WER. n. f. [from the bow of a ship.] Anchors so called. See Bow.
- To Bo'WER. v. a. [from the noun.] To embower; to inclose.

In mortal paradise of such sweet flesh. Shakesp.
- Bo'WERY. adj. [from bower.] Full of bowers.
Landscips how gay the bow'ry grotto yields,
Which thought creates, and lavish fancy builds. Tickell.
Snatch'd through the verdant maze, the hurried eye
Distracted wanders: now the bowery walk
Of covert close, where scarce a speck of day Falls on the lengthen'd gloom, protracted sweeps. Thomson.
- To BOWGE. See To BOUGE.
- BOWL. n. f. [buelin, Welch; which signifies, according to Ju-nius, any thing made of horn, as drinking cups anciently were. It is pronounced bole.]
1. A vessel to hold liquids, rather wide than deep; distinguished from a cup, which is rather deep than wide.
Give me a bowl of wine;
I have not that alacrity of spirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have. Richard III.
If a piece of iron be fastened on the side of a bowl of water, a loadstone, in a boat of cork, will presently make into it. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. iii.
The sacred priests, with ready knives, bereave
The beasts of life, and in full bowls receive
The streaming blood. Dryden's Æneid.
While the bright Sein, t' exalt the soul,
With sparkling plenty crowns the bowl,
And wit and social mirth inspires. Fenton to Lord Gower.

- BOWL. n. f. [boule, Fr. It is pronounced as cow, bowl.] A round mass, which may be rolled along the ground.
Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground,
I've tumbld past the throw. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
How finely dost thou times and seasons spin!
And make a twist checker'd with night and day!
Which, as it lengthens, winds, and winds us in,
As bowls go on, but turning all the way. Herbert.
Like him, who would lodge a bowl upon a precipice, either my praise falls back, or stays not on the top, but rolls over. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.
Men may make a game at bowls in the summer, and a game at whisk in the winter. Dennis's Letters.
Though that piece of wood, which is now a bowl, may be made square, yet, if roundness be taken away, it is no longer a bowl. Watts's Logick.
- To BOWL. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To play at bowls.
2. To throw bowls at any thing.
Alas! I had rather be set quick i' th' earth,
And bowl'd to death with turnips. Merry W. of Windsor.
- Bo'WLER-STONES. n. f. Lumps or fragments of stones or marble, broke from the adjacent cliffs, rounded by being tumbled to and again by the action of the water; whence their name. Woodward on Fossils.

BOX. n. f. [box, Saxon; boxus, Lat.] A tree.

The characters are; The leaves are pennated, and evergreen; it hath male flowers, that are produced at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree; the fruit is shaped like a porridge-pot inverted, and is divided into three cells, containing two seeds in each, which, when ripe, are cast forth by the elasticity of the vessels. The species are; 1. The box-tree. 2. The narrow-leaved box-tree. 3. Striped box. 4. The golden edged box-tree. 5. The dwarf box. 6. The dwarf striped box. 7. The silver edged box. On Boxhill, near Dorking in Surrey, were formerly many large trees of this kind; but, of late years, their number is pretty much decreased; yet some remain of a considerable bigness. The wood is very useful for engravers and mathematical instrument-makers; being so hard, close, and ponderous, as to sink in water. Millar.

Box, there are two sorts of it; the dwarf box, and a taller sort, that grows to a considerable height. The dwarf box is very good for borders, and is easily kept in order, with one clipping in the year. It will increase of slips set in March, or about Bartholomew-tide, and may be raised of layers and suckers, and will prosper on the declivity of cold, dry, barren, chalky hills, where nothing else will grow. Mortimer.

Box. n. f. [box, Sax. busfe, Germ.]

1. A case made of wood, or other matter, to hold any thing. It is distinguished from chest, as the less from the greater. It is supposed to have its name from the box wood.

A perfect magnet, though but in an ivory box, will, through the box, send forth his embracing virtue to a beloved needle. Sidney, b. ii.

About his shelves

A beggarly account of empty boxes. Shakefp. Rom. and Jul.

This head is to open a most wide voracious mouth, which shall take in letters and papers. There will be under it a box, of which the key will be kept in my custody, to receive such papers as are dropped into it. Addison. Guard. N° 98.

This casket India's glowing gems unlocks,
And all Arabia breathes from yonder box. Pope.

2. The case of the mariners compass.

3. The chest into which money given is put.

So many more, so every one was used,
That to give largely to the box refused. Spenser.

4. The seats in the playhouse, where the ladies are placed.

'Tis left to you, the boxes and the pit
Are sovereign judges of this sort of wit. Dryden.

She glares in balls, front boxes, and the ring,
A vain, unquiet, glittering, wretched thing. Pope.

To Box. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose in a box.

Box'd in a chair, the beau impatient sits,
While spouts run clatt'ring o'er the roof by fits. Swift.

BOX. n. f. [bock, a cheek, Welch.] A blow on the head given with the hand.

For the box o' th' ear that the prince gave you, he gave it like a rude prince. Shakefp. Henry IV.

If one should take my hand perforce, and give another a box on the ear with it, the law punisheth the other.

There may happen concussions of the brain from a box on the ear. Wifeman's Surgery.

Olphis, the fisherman, received a box on the ear from Thestylis. Addison. Spectator, N° 233.

To Box. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight with the fist.

The ass very fairly looked on, till they had boxed themselves a-weary, and then left them fairly in the lurch. L'Estrange.

BRA

A leopard is like a cat; he boxes with his forefeet, as a cat doth her kitlins. Grew.

The fighting with a man's shadow consists in brandishing two sticks, loaden with plugs of lead; this gives a man all the pleasure of boxing, without the blows. Spectat. N° 115.

He hath had six duels, and four and twenty boxing matches, in defence of his majesty's title. Spectator, N° 629.

To Box. v. a. To strike with the fist.

Bo'XEN. adj. [from box.]

1. Made of box.

The young gentlemen learned, before all other things, to design upon tablets of boxen wood. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

As lads and lasses stood around,

To hear my boxen hautboy sound. Gay's Pastorals.

2. Resembling box.

Her faded cheeks are chang'd to boxen hue,
And in her eyes the tears are ever new. Dryden.

Bo'XER. n. f. [from box.] A man who fights with his fist.

BOY. n. f. [beb, Germ. the etymology is not agreed on.]

1. A male child; not a girl.

2. One in the state of adolescence; older than an infant, yet not arrived at puberty or manhood.

Speak thou, boy;

Perhaps thy childishness will move him more

Than can our reasons. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

Sometimes forgotten things, long cast behind,

Rush forward in the brain, and come to mind:

The nurse's legends are for truths receiv'd,
And the man dreams but what the boy believ'd. Dryden.

3. A word of contempt for young men, as noting their immaturity.

Men of worth and parts will not easily admit the familiarity of boys, who yet need the care of a tutor. Locke.

The pale boy senator yet tingling stands,

And holds his breeches close with both his hands. Pope.

To Boy. v. n. [from the noun.] To act apishly, or like a boy.

Anthony

Shall be brought drunken forth, and I shall see

Some squeaking Cleopatra boy my greatness,
I th' posture of a whore. Shakefp. Antony and Cleopatra.

Bo'YHOOD. n. f. [from boy.] The state of a boy; the part of life in which we are boys.

If you should look at him, in his boyhood, through the magnifying end of a perspective, and, in his manhood, through the other, it would be impossible to spy any difference; the same air, the same strut. Swift.

Bo'YISH. adj. [from boy.]

1. Belonging to a boy.

I ran it through, e'en from my boyish days,

To th' very moment that he bade me tell it. Shakefp. Othello.

2. Childish; trifling.

This unheard fauciness, and boyish troops,

The king doth smile at, and is well prepar'd

To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms. Sh. K. John.

Young men take up some English poet for their model, and imitate him, without knowing wherein he is defective, where he is boyish and trifling. Dryden.

Bo'YISHLY. adv. [from boyish.] Childishly; triflingly.

Bo'YISHNESS. n. f. [from boyish.] Childishness; trivialness.

Bo'YISM. n. f. [from boy.] Puerility; childishness.

He had complain'd he was farther off, by being so near, and a thousand such boyisms, which Chaucer rejected as below the subject. Dryden's Fab. Preface.

BP. An abbreviation of bishop.

BRA'BBLE. n. f. [brabbelen, Dutch.] A clamorous contest; a squabble; a broil.

Here in the streets, desperate in shame and state,

In private brabble did we apprehend him. Shakefp. T. Night.

To BRA'BBLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To clamour; to contest noisily.

BRA'BBLER. n. f. [from brabble.] A clamorous, quarrelsome, noisy fellow.

To BRACE. v. a. [embrasser, Fr.]

1. To bind; to tie close with bandages.

The women of China, by bracing and binding them from their infancy, have very little feet. Locke.

2. To intend; to make tense; to strain up.

The tympanum is not capable of tension that way, in such a manner as a drum is braced. Holder's Elements of Speech.

The diminution of the force of the pressure of the external air, in bracing the fibres, must create a debility in muscular motion. Arbutnot on Air.

BRACE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Cincture; bandage.

2. That which holds any thing tight.

The little bones of the ear-drum do the same office in straining and relaxing it, as the braces of the war drum do in that. Derham's Physico-Theology.

3. BRACE. [in architecture.] Is a piece of timber framed in with bevil joints, used to keep the building from swerving either way. Builder's Dict.

4. BRACES. [a sea term.] Ropes belonging to all the yards, except cept the mizen. They have a pendant seized to the yard-arm, two braces to each yard; and, at the end of the pendant, a block is seized, through which the rope called the brace is reeved. The braces serve to square and traverse the yards.

Sea Dict.

5. BRACES of a coach. Thick straps of leather on which it hangs.

6. Harness.

7. BRACE. [in printing.] A crooked line inclosing a passage, which ought to be taken together, and not separately; as in a triplet.

Charge Venus to command her son,
Wherever else she lets him rove,
To shun my house, and field, and grove;
Peace cannot dwell with hate or love.

} Prior.

8. Warlike preparation; from bracing the armour; as we say, girded for the battle.

As it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it;
For that it stands not in such warlike brace,
But altogether lacks th' abilities
That Rhodes is drest'd in.

Shakesp. Othello.

9. Tension; tightness.

The most frequent cause of deafness is the laxness of the tympanum, when it has lost its brace or tension. Holder.

BRACE. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. A pair; a couple. It is not braces, but brace, in the plural.

Down from a hill the beasts that reign in woods,
First hunter then, pursu'd a gentle brace,
Goodliest of all the forest, hart and hind. Par. Lost, b. xi.
Ten brace and more of greyhounds, snowy fair,
And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair.

Dryden's Fables.

2. It is used generally in conversation as a sportsman's word.

He is said, this summer, to have shot with his own hands fifty brace of pheasants. Addison. Freeholder, N° 36.

3. It is applied to men in contempt.

But you, my brace of lords, were I so minded,
I here could pluck his highness' frown upon you. Sh. Tempest.

BRA'CELET. n. f. [bracelet, Fr.]

1. An ornament for the arms.

Both his hands were cut off, being known to have worn bracelets of gold about his wrists. Sir J. Hayward.

Tie about our tawny wrists

Bracelets of the fairy twigs. Ben. Johnson's Fairy Prince.

A very ingenious lady used to wear, in rings and bracelets, store of those gems. Boyle.

2. A piece of defensive armour for the arm.

BRA'CER. n. f. [from brace.] A cincture; a bandage.

When they affect the belly, they may be restrained by a bracer, without much trouble. Wise man's Surgery.

BRACH. n. f. [braque, Fr.] A bitch hound.

Truth's a dog must to kennel; he must be whipped out, when the lady brach may stand by the fire, and stink. Shakesp.

BRA'CHIAL. adj. [from brachium, an arm, Lat.] Belonging to the arm.

BRACHY'GRAPHY. n. f. [βραχυς, short, and γραφω, to write.] The art or practice of writing in a short compass.

All the certainty of those high pretenders, bating what they have of the first principles, and the word of God, may be circumscribed by as small a circle as the creed, when brachygraphy had confined it within the compass of a penny. Glanville.

BRACK. n. f. [from break.] A breach; a broken part.

The place was but weak, and the bracks fair; but the defendants, by resolution, supplied all the defects. Hayward.

Let them compare my work with what is taught in the schools, and if they find in theirs many bracks and short ends, which cannot be spun into an even piece, and, in mine, a fair coherence throughout, I shall promise myself an acquiescence.

Digby on the Soul, Dedicat.

BRA'CKET. n. f. A piece of wood fixed for the support of something.

Let your shelves be laid upon brackets, being about two feet wide, and edged with a small lath. Mortimer.

BRA'CKISH. adj. [brack, Dutch.] Salt; somewhat salt: it is used particularly of the water of the sea.

Pits upon the sea shore turn into fresh water, by percolation of the salt through the sand: but it is farther noted, after a time, the water in such pits will become brackish again. Bacon.

When I had gain'd the brow and top,
A lake of brackish waters on the ground,

Was all I found. Herbert.

The wise contriver, on his end intent,
Mix'd them with salt, and season'd all the sea.

What other cause could this effect produce?
The brackish tincture through the main diffuse? Blackmore.

BRA'CKISHNESS. n. f. [from brackish.] Saltiness.

All the artificial strainings, hitherto discovered, leave a brackishness in salt water, that makes it unfit for animal uses.

Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

BRAD, being an initial, signifies broad, spacious, from the Saxon brad, and the Gothick braid.

Gibson's Camden.

BRAD. n. f. A sort of nail to floor rooms with. They are about the size of a tenpenny nail, but have not their heads made with a shoulder over their flank, as other nails, but are made pretty thick towards the upper end, that the very top may be driven into, and buried in the board they nail down; so that the tops of these brads will not catch the thrums of the mops, when the floor is washing. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

To BRAG. v. n. [braggeren, Dutch.]

1. To boast; to display ostentatiously; to tell boastful stories.

Thou coward! art thou bragging to the stars?

Telling the bushes that thou look'st for wars,

And wilt not come?

Shakesp. Midsum. Night's Dream.

Mark me, with what violence she first loved the Moor, but for bragging, and telling her fantastical lies. Shakesp. Othello.

In bragging out some of their private tenets, as if they were the received established doctrine of the church of England.

Sanderfon's Pax Ecclesiæ.

The rebels were grown so strong there, that they intended then, as they already bragged, to come over, and make this the seat of war. Clarendon.

Mrs. Bull's condition was looked upon as desperate by all the men of art; but there were those that bragged they had an infallible ointment. Arbuthnot's Hist. of J. Bull.

2. It has of before the thing boasted.

Knowledge being the only thing whereof we poor old men can brag, we cannot make it known but by utterance. Sidney.

Verona brags of him,

To be a virtuous and well govern'd youth. Shakesp.

Ev'ry busy little scribbler now,

Swells with the praises which he gives himself,

And taking sanctuary in the croud,

Brags of his impudence, and scorns to mend. Roscommon.

3. On is used, but improperly.

Yet lo! in me what authors have to brag on,

Reduc'd at last to his in my own dragon. Pope's Dunciad.

BRAG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A boast; a proud expression.

A kind of conquest

Cæsar made here; but made not here his brag

Of came, and saw, and overcame. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

It was such a new thing for the Spaniards to receive so little hurt, upon dealing with the English, as Avellaneda made great brags of it, for no greater matter than the waiting upon the English afar off. Bacon's War with Spain.

2. The thing boasted.

Beauty is nature's brag, and must be shewn

In courts, at feasts, and high solemnities,

Where most may wonder. Milton.

BRAGGADO'CIO. n. f. [from brag.] A puffing, swelling, boasting fellow.

The world abounds in terrible fanfarons, in the masque of men of honour; but these braggadocios are easy to be detected. L'Estrange.

By the plot, you may guess much of the characters of the persons; a braggadocio captain, a parasite, and a lady of pleasure. Dryden.

BRA'GGART. adj. [from brag.] Boastful; vainly ostentatious.

Shall I, none's slave, of high-born or rais'd men

Fear frowns; and my mistress, truth, betray thee

To th' huffing, braggart, puff nobility?

Donne.

BRA'GGART. n. f. [from brag.] A boaster.

Who knows himself a braggart,

Let him fear this; for it will come to pass,

That every braggart shall be found an ass.

Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

BRA'GGER. n. f. [from brag.] A boaster; an ostentatious fellow.

Such as have had opportunity to sound these braggers thoroughly, by having sometimes endured the penance of their sottish company, have found them, in converse, empty and insipid. South.

BRA'GLESS. adj. [from brag.] Without a boast; without ostentation.

The bruit is, Hector's slain, and by Achilles.—

—If it is so, bragless let it be,

Great Hector was as good a man as he. Shak. Tr. and Creff.

BRA'GLY. adv. [from brag.] Finely; so as it may be bragged.

Seest not thilk hawthorn stud,

How bragly it begins to bud,

And utter his tender head?

Flora new calleth forth each flower;

And bids make ready Maia's bower.

Spenser's Past.

To BRAID. v. a. [brædan, Saxon.] To weave together.

Close the serpent fly;

Insinuating, wove with gordian twine

His braided train, and of his fatal guile

Gave proof unheeded. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv. l. 347.

Other wands, lying loosely, may each of them be easily dissociated from the rest; but when braided into a basket, they cohere strongly. Boyle.

A ribband did the braided tresses bind,

The rest was loose; and wanton'd in the wind. Dryden.

B R A

Since in braided gold her foot is bound,
And a long trailing manteau sweeps the ground,
Her shoe disdains the street. Gay's Trivia.
BRAID. n. f. [from the verb.] A texture; a knot, or complication of something woven together.
Listen where thou art sitting,
Under the glossy, cool, translucent wave,
In twisted braids of lillies knitting
The loose train of thy amber-dropping hair. Milton.
No longer shall thy comely traces break
In flowing ringlets on thy snowy neck,
Or sit behind thy head, an ample round,
In graceful braids, with various ribbon bound. Prior.
BRAID. adj. [To brede, in Chaucer, is to deceive.] An old word, which seems to signify deceitful.
Since Frenchmen are so braid,
Marry 'em that will. I'll live and die a maid.

Shakesp. All's well that ends well.
BRAILS. n. f. [Sea term.] Small ropes reeved through blocks, which are seized on either side the ties, a little off upon the yard; so that they come down before the sails of a ship, and are fastened at the skirt of the sail to the crengles. Their use is, when the sail is furled across, to hale up its bunt, that it may the more readily be taken up or let fall. Harris.

BRAIN. n. f. [bærgen, Sax. breyne, Dutch.]
1. That collection of vessels and organs in the head, from which sense and motion arise.

The brain is divided into cerebrum and cerebellum. Cerebrum is that part of the brain, which possesses all the upper and forepart of the cranium, being separated from the cerebellum by the second process of the dura mater, under which the cerebellum is situated. The substance of the brain is distinguished into outer and inner; the former is called corticalis, cinerea, or glandulosa;
the latter, medullaris, alba, or nervea. Cheselden.

If I be served such another trick, I'll have my brains ta'en out, and buttered, and give them to a dog for a new year's gift.
Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

That man proportionably hath the largest brain, I did, I confess, somewhat doubt, and conceived it might have failed in birds, especially such as having little bodies, have yet large craniums, and seem to contain much brain, as snipes and woodcocks;
but, upon trial, I find it very true. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. That part in which the understanding is placed; therefore taken for the understanding.

The force they are under is a real force, and that of their fate but an imaginary conceived one; the one but in their brains, the other on their shoulders. Hammond's Fundamentals.

A man is first a geometrician in his brain, before he be such in his hand. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. Sometimes the affections.
My son Edgar! had he a hand to write this, a heart and brain to breed it in? Shakesp. King Lear.

TO BRAIN. v. a. [from the noun.] To dash out the brains;
to kill by beating out the brains.

Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him i' th' afternoon to sleep; there thou may'st brain him. Shakesp. Tempest.
Outlaws of nature,
Fit to be shot and brain'd, without a process,
To stop infection; that's their proper death. Dryden.

Next seiz'd two wretches more, and headlong cast,
Brain'd on the rock, his second dire repast. Pope's Odyssey.

BRA'INISH. adj. [from brain.] Hotheaded; furious; as, cerebrosus in Latin.

In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras hearing something stir,
He whips his rapier out, and cries, a rat!
And, in his brainish apprehension, kills
The unseen good old man. Shakesp. Hamlet.

BRA'INLESS. adj. [from brain.] Silly; thoughtless; witless.
Some brainless men have, by great travel and labour, brought to pass, that the church is now ashamed of nothing more than of saints. Hooker, b. v. § 20.

If the dull brainless Ajax come safe off,
We'll dress him up in voices. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.
The brainless stripling, who, expell'd the town,
Damn'd the stiff college, and pedantick gown,
Aw'd by thy name, is dumb. Tickell.

BRA'INPAN. n. f. [from brain and pan.] The skull containing the brains.

With those huge bellows in his hands, he blows
New fire into my head: my brainpan glows. Dryden.

BRA'INSICK. adj. [from brain and sick.] Diseased in the understanding; addleheaded; giddy; thoughtless.

Nor once deject the courage of our minds,
Because Cassandra's mad; her brainsick raptures
Cannot distaste the goodness of a quarrel. Troilus and Cress.
They were brainsick men, who could neither endure the government of their king, nor yet thankfully receive the authours of their deliverance. Knolles's History of the Turks.

BRA'INSICKLY. adv. [from brainsick.] Weakly; headily.
Why, worthythane,
You do unbend your noble strength to think
So brainsickly of things. Shakesp. Macbeth.

B R A

BRA'INSICKNESS. n. f. [from brainsick.] Indiscretion; giddi-ness.

BRAIT. n. f. A term used by jewellers for a rough diamond. D.
BRAKE. The preterite of break.

He thought it sufficient to correct the multitude with sharp words, and brake out into this cholerick speech. Knolles's Hist.

BRAKE. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.] A thicket of bram-bles, or of thorns.

A dog of this town used daily to fetch meat, and to carry the same unto a blind mastiff, that lay in a brake without the town. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

If I'm traduc'd by tongues, which neither know
My faculties nor person; let me say,
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

In every bush and brake, where hap may find
The serpent sleeping. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix. l. 160.

Full little thought of him the gentle knight,
Who, flying death, had there conceal'd his flight;
In brakes and brambles hid, and shunning mortal fight. }
Dryden's Fables.

BRAKE. n. f.
1. An instrument for dressing hemp or flax.
2. The handle of a ship's pump.
3. A baker's kneading trough.
4. A sharp bit or snaffle for horses. Dict.

BRA'KY. adj. [from brake.] Thorny; prickly; rough.
Redeem arts from their rough and braky seats, where they lie hid and overgrown with thorns, to a pure, open light, where they may take the eye, and may be taken by the hand.
Ben. Johnson's Discovery.

BRAMBLE. n. f. [bæmblay, Sax. rubus, Lat.]

1. This plant hath a flower consisting of five leaves, which are placed circularly, and expand in form of a rose; the flower-cup is divided into five parts, containing many stamina, or chives, in the bosom of the flower; in the centre of which rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes the fruit, consisting of many protuberances, and full of juice. The species are; 1. The common bramble, or blackberry bush. 2. The dewberry bush, or lesser bramble. 3. The common greater bramble bush, with white fruit. 4. The greater bramble bush, with a beautiful striped leaf. 5. The raspberry bush, or hindberry. 6. The raspberry bush, with white fruit. 7. The raspberry bush, with late red fruit. 8. The raspberry bush, without thorns. 9. The Virginian raspberry bush, with black fruit. The first and second sorts are very common in hedges, and upon dry banks, in most parts of England, and are rarely cultivated in gardens.
The third sort was found by Mr. Jacob Bobart in a hedge, not far from Oxford. The fourth sort is a variety of the common bramble, differing therefrom only in having striped leaves. The raspberry bush is also very common in divers woods, in the northern counties of England; but is cultivated in all curious gardens, for the sake of its fruit. All these plants are easily propagated by suckers, which they send from the roots in great plenty. The best time to take them off, and transplant them, is in October. Millar.

2. It is taken, in popular language, for any rough prickly shrub.

The bush my bed, the bramble was my bow'r,
The woods can witness many a woful store. Spenser's Past.
There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. Shakesp. As you like it.

Content with food, which nature freely bred,
On wildings and on strawberries they fed:
Cornels and bramble berries gave the rest,
And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast. Dryden's Ovid.

Thy younglings, Cuddy, are but just awake,
No thrustles shrill the bramble bush forsake. Gay's Past.

BRA'MBLING. n. f. A bird, called also a mountain chaffinch. Dict.

BRAN. n. f. [brenna, Ital.] The husks of corn ground; the refuse of the sieve.

From me do back receive the flow'r of all,
And leave me but the bran. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

The citizens were driven to great distress for want of victuals; bread they made of the coarsest bran, moulded in cloaths;
for otherwise it would not cleave together. Hayward.

In the sifting of fourteen years of power and favour, all that came out, could not be pure meal, but must have, among it, a certain mixture of padar and bran, in this lower age of human fragility. Wotton.

I cannot bolt this matter to the bran,
As Bradwardin and holy Austin can. Dryden's Fables.

Then water him, and, drinking what he can,
Encourage him to thirst again with bran. Dryden's Virgil.

BRANCH. n. f. [branche, Fr.]

1. The shoot of a tree from one of the main boughs. See BOUGH.

Why grow the branches, when the root is gone?
Why wither not the leaves that want their sap? Shakesp.

2. Any member or part of the whole; any distinct article; any section or subdivision.

Your

Your oaths are past, and now subscribe your names,
That his own hand may strike his honour down,
That violates the smallest branch herein.

Shakesp. Love's Labour Lost.

The belief of this was of special importance, to confirm our hopes of another life, on which so many branches of christian piety does immediately depend. Hammond's Fundamentals.

In the several branches of justice and charity, comprehended in those general rules, of loving our neighbour as ourselves, and of doing to others as we would have them do to us, there is nothing but what is most fit and reasonable. Tillotson.

This precept will oblige us to perform our duty, according to the nature of the various branches of it. Rogers.

3. Any part that shoots out from the rest.

And six branches shall come out of the sides of it; three branches of the candlestick out of the one side, and three branches of the candlestick out of the other side. Exod. xxv. 32.

His blood, which disperseth itself by the branches of veins, may be resembled to waters carried by brooks. Raleigh's Hist.

4. A smaller river running into, or proceeding from a larger.

If, from a main river, any branch be separated and divided, then, where that branch doth first bound itself with new banks, there is that part of the river where the branch forsaketh the main stream, called the head of the river. Raleigh's History.

5. Any part of a family descending in a collateral line.

His father, a younger branch of the ancient stock planted in Somersetshire, took to wife the widow. Carew's Survey.

9. [In architecture.] The arches of Gothick vaults; which arches tranversing from one angle to another, diagonal ways, form a cross between the other arches, which make the sides of the square, of which the arches are diagonals. Harris.

To BRANCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To spread in branches.

They were trained together in their childhoods, and there rooted betwixt them such an affection, which cannot choose but branch now. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

The cause of scattering the boughs, is the hasty breaking forth of the sap; and therefore those trees rise not in a body of any height, but branch near the ground. The cause of the Pyramis, is the keeping in of the sap, long before it branch, and the spending of it, when it beginneth to branch by equal degrees. Bacon's Natural Hist. N° 588.

Plant it round with shade

Of laurel, ever-green, and branching plain. Milt. Agonistes.

Straight as a line in beauteous order stood,

Of oaks unshorn a venerable wood;

Fresh was the grass beneath, and ev'ry tree

At distance planted, in a due degree,

Their branching arms in air, with equal space,

Stretch'd to their neighbours with a long embrace. Dryden.

One sees her thighs transform'd, another views

Her arms shot out, and branching into boughs. Addison. Ovid.

2. To spread into separate and distinct parts and subdivisions.

The Alps at the one end, and the long range of Appenines that passes through the body of it, branch out, on all sides, into several different divisions. Addison on Italy.

If we would weigh, and keep in our minds, what it is we are considering, that would best instruct us when we should, or should not, branch into farther distinctions. Locke.

3. To speak diffusively, or with the distinction of the parts of a discourse.

I have known a woman branch out into a long dissertation upon the edging of a petticoat. Spectator, N° 247.

4. To have horns shooting out into antlers.

The swift stag from under ground

Bore up his branching head. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii. l. 470.

To BRANCH. v. a.

1. To divide as into branches.

The spirit of things animate are all continued within themselves, and are branched in canals, as blood is; and the spirits have not only branches, but certain cells or seats, where the principal spirits do reside. Bacon's Natural Hist.

2. To adorn with needlework, representing flowers and sprigs.

In robe of lily white she was array'd,

That from her shoulder to her heel down raught,

The train whereof loose far behind her stray'd,

Branch'd with gold and pearl, most richly wrought.

Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 9.

BRA'NCHER. n. f. [from branch.]

1. One that shoots out into branches.

If their child be not such a speedy spreader and brancher, like the vine, yet he may yield, with a little longer expectation, as useful and more sober fruit than the other. Wotton.

2. In falconry, a young hawk. [branchier, Fr.]

I enlarge my discourse to the observation of the eires, the brancher, and the two sorts of lentners. Walton's Angler.

BRA'NCHLESS. adj. [from branch.]

1. Without shoots or boughs.

2. Without any valuable product; naked.

If I lose mine honour,

I lose myself; better I were not yours,

Than yours so branchless. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

BRA'NCHY. adj. [from branch.] Full of branches; spreading.

Trees on trees o'erthrown,

Fall crackling round him, and the forests groan;

Sudden full twenty on the plain are strow'd,

And lopp'd, and lighten'd of their branchy load. Pope.

What carriage can bear away all the various, rude, and unwieldy loppings of a branchy tree at once? Watts.

BRAND. n. f. [branb, Saxon.]

1. A stick lighted, or fit to be lighted in the fire.

Have I caught thee?

He that parts us shall bring a brand from heav'n,

And fire us hence. Shakesp. King Lear.

Take it, she said, and when your needs require,

This little brand will serve to light your fire. Dryden's Fab.

If, with double diligence they labour to retrieve the hours they have lost, they shall be saved; though this is a service of great difficulty, and like a brand plucked out of the fire. Rogers.

2. A sword, in old language. [brandar, Runick.]

They looking back, all the eastern side beheld

Of paradise, so late their happy seat!

Wav'd over by that flaming brand; the gate

With dreadful faces throng'd, and fiery arms.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii. l. 643.

3. A thunderbolt.

The fire omnipotent prepares the brand,

By Vulcan wrought, and arms his potent hand;

Then flaming hurls it. Granville.

4. A mark made by burning a criminal with a hot iron, to note him as infamous.

Clerks convict should be burned in the hand, both because they might taste of some corporal punishment, and that they might carry a brand of infamy. Bacon's Hen. VII.

The rules of good and evil are inverted, and a brand of infamy passes for a badge of honour. L'Estrange.

Where did his wit on learning fix a brand,

And rail at arts he did not understand? Dryden's Macfleckno.

To BRAND. v. a. [branden, Dutch.] To mark with a brand, or note of infamy.

Have I liv'd thus long a wife, a true one,

Never yet branded with suspicion? Shakesp. Henry VIII.

The king was after branded, by Perkin's proclamation, for an execrable breaker of the rights of holy church. Bacon.

Brand not their actions with so foul a name;

Pity, at least, what we are forc'd to blame. Dryden.

Ha! dare not for thy life, I charge thee, dare not

To brand the spotless virtue of my prince. Rowe.

Our Punick faith

Is infamous, and branded to a proverb. Addison's Cato.

The spreader of the pardons answered him an easier way, by branding him with heresy. Atterbury.

BRA'NDGOOSE. n. f. A kind of wild fowl, less than a common goose, having its breast and wings of a dark colour. Dict.

To BRA'NDISH. v. a. [from brand, a sword.]

1. To wave, or shake, or flourish, as a weapon.

Brave Macbeth,

Disdaining fortune, with his brandish'd steel,

Like valour's minion, carved out his passage. Shakesp.

He said, and brandishing at once his blade,

With eager pace pursu'd the flaming shade. Dryden.

Let me march their leader, not their prince;

And, at the head of your renown'd Cydonians,

Brandish this fam'd sword. Smith's Phædr. and Hippol.

2. To play with; to flourish.

He, who shall employ all the force of his reason, only in brandishing of syllogisms, will discover very little. Locke.

no longer pestered with dull story-tellers, nor brangling disputers. Swift's Introduction to genteel Conversation.

BRA'NGLEMENT. n. f. [from brangle.] The same with brangle.

BRANK. n. f. Buckwheat, or brank, is a grain very useful and advantageous in dry barren lands. Mortimer.

BRA'NNY. adj. [from bran.] Having the appearance of bran. It became serpiginous, and was, when I saw it, covered with white branny scales. Wise man.

BRA'SIER. n. f. [from brass.]

1. A manufacturer that works in brass.

There is a fellow somewhat near the door, he should be a brasier by his face. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

Brasiers that turn andirons, pots, kettles, &c. have their lathe made different from the common turners lathe. Moxon.

2. A pan to hold coals. [probably from embraser, Fr.]

It is thought they had no chimneys, but were warmed with coals on brasiers. Arbuthnot on Coins.

BRASI'L. } n. f. An American wood, commonly supposed to have

BRAZI'L. } been thus denominated, because first brought from Brasil: though Huert shews it had been known by that name, many years before the discovery of that country; and the best fort comes from Fernambuc. The tree ordinarily grows in dry barren rocky places, is very thick and large, usually crooked and knotty; its flowers, which are of a beautiful red, exhale an agreeable smell, which strengthens the brain. The bark is so thick, that when the trunk is peeled, which might before be equal in circumference to the body of a man, it is reduced to that of his leg. The wood is heavy, and so dry, that it scarce raises any smoke. It is used by turners, and takes a good polish; but chiefly in dying, though it gives but a spurious red. Chamb.

BRASS. n. f. [bnaz; Sax. bræs, Welch.]

1. A yellow metal, made by mixing copper with lapis calaminaris. It is used, in popular language, for any kind of metal in which copper has a part.

Brass is made of copper and calaminaris. Bacon.

Men's evil manners live in brass, their virtues

We write in water. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

Let others mold the running mass

Of metals, and inform the breathing brass. Dryden.

2. Impudence.

BRA'SSINESS. n. f. [from brassy.] An appearance like brass; some quality of brass.

BRA'SSY. adj. [from brass.]

1. Partaking of brass.

The part in which they lie, is near black, with some sparks of a brassy pyrites in it. Woodward.

2. Hard as brass.

Loffes,

Enough to press a royal merchant down,

And pluck commiseration of his state

From brassy bosoms, and rough hearts of flint. Shakespeare.

3. Impudent.

BRAST. particip. adj. [from burst.] Burst; broken.

There creature never past,

That back returned without heavenly grace,

But dreadful furies which their chains have brast,

And damned sprights sent forth to make ill men agast.

Fairy Queen, b. v. c. v. stanza. 31.

BRAT. n. f. [Its etymology is uncertain; bratz, in Saxon, signifies a blanket; from which, perhaps, the modern signification may have come.]

1. A child, so called in contempt.

He leads them like a thing

Made by some other deity than nature,

That shapen man better; and they follow him,

Against us brats, with no less confidence,

Than boys pursuing summer butterflies. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

This brat is none of mine:

Hence with it, and, together with the dame,

Commit them to the fire. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

The friends, that got the brats, were poison'd too;

In this sad case what could our vermin do? Roscommon.

Jupiter summoned all the birds and beasts before him, with their brats and little ones, to see which of them had the prettiest children. L'Estrange.

I shall live to see the invisible lady, to whom I was obliged, and whom I never beheld, since she was a brat in hanging-sleeves. Swift.

I give command to kill or save,

Can grant ten thousand pounds a year,

And make a beggar's brat a peer. Swift.

2. The progeny; the offspring.

The two late conspiracies were the brats and offspring of two contrary factions. South.

BRAVA'DO. n. f. [from bravada, Span.] A boast; a brag.

Spain, to make good the bravado,

Names it the invincible armado. Anonymous.

BRAVE. adj. [brave, Fr.]

1. Courageous; daring; bold; generous; high-spirited.

An Egyptian soothsayer made Antonius believe, that his genius, which otherways was brave and confident, was, in the presence of Octavius Cæsar, poor and cowardly. Bacon.

From armed foes to bring a royal prize,
Shows your brave heart victorious as your eyes. Waller.

2. Gallant; having a noble mien; lofty; graceful.

I'll prove the prettier fellow of the two,

And wear my dagger with a braver grace. Shakespeare.

3. Magnificent; grand.

Rings put upon his fingers,

And brave attendants near him, when he wakes;

Would not the beggar then forget himself? Shakespeare.

But whosoe'er it was nature design'd

First a brave place, and then as brave a mind. Denham.

4. Excellent; noble: it is an indeterminate word, used to express the superabundance of any valuable quality in men or things.

Let not old age disgrace my high desire,

O heavenly soul, in human shape contain'd;

Old wood inflam'd doth yield the bravest fire,

When younger doth in smoke his virtue spend. Sidney.

If there be iron-ore, and mills, iron is a brave commodity where wood aboundeth. Bacon.

If a statesman has not this science, he must be subject to a braver man than himself, whose province it is to direct all his actions to this end. Digby on the Soul, Dedication.

BRAVE. n. f. [brave, Fr.]

1. A Hector; a man daring beyond decency or discretion.

Hot braves, like thee, may fight, but know not well

To manage this, the last great stake. Dryden.

Morat's too insolent, too much a brave,

His courage to his envy is a slave. Dryden's Aurengz.

2. A boast; a challenge; a defiance.

There end thy brave, and turn thy face in peace;

We grant thou canst outscold us. Shakespeare. King John.

To BRAVE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To defy; to challenge; to set at defiance.

He upbraids Iago, that he made him

Brave me upon the watch. Shakespeare. Othello.

My nobles leave me, and my state is brav'd,

Ev'n at my gates, with ranks of foreign powers. Shakespeare.

The ills of love, not those of fate I fear;

These I can brave, but those I cannot bear. Dryden.

Like a rock unmov'd, a rock that braves

The raging tempest, and the rising waves. Dryden's Æneid.

2. To carry a boasting appearance of.

Both particular persons and factions are apt enough to flatter themselves, or, at least, to brave that which they believe not. Bacon's Essays, N° 16.

Martin Swart, with his Germans, performed bravely. Bacon.

No fire, nor foe, nor fate, nor night,

The Trojan hero did affright, } Denham.

Who bravely twice renew'd the fight.

Your valour bravely did th' assault sustain,

And fill'd the moats and ditches with the slain. Dryden.

BRA'VERY. n. f. [from brave.]

1. Courage; magnanimity; generosity; gallantry.

Certainly it denotes no great bravery of mind, to do that out of a desire of fame, which we could not be prompted to by a generous passion for the glory of him that made us. Spectator, N° 255.

Juba, to all the bravery of a hero,

Adds softest love, and more than female sweetness. Addison.

2. Splendour; magnificence.

Where all the bravery that eye may see,

And all the happiness that heart desire,

Is to be found. Spenser's Hubberd's Tale.

3. Show; ostentation.

Let princes choose ministers more sensible of duty than of rising, and such as love business rather upon conscience than upon bravery. Bacon's Essays, N° 37.

4. Bravado; boast.

Never could man, with more unmanlike bravery, use his tongue to her disgrace, which lately had sung sonnets of her praises. Sidney's Arcadia.

For a bravery upon this occasion of power, they crowned their new king in the cathedral church of Dublin. Bacon.

There are those that make it a point of bravery, to bid defiance to the oracles of divine revelation. L'Estrange.

BRA'VO. n. f. [bravo, Ital.] A man who murders for hire.

For boldness, like the bravoes and banditti, is seldom employed, but upon desperate services. Government of the Tongue.

No bravoes here profess the bloody trade,

Nor is the church the murd'rer's refuge made. Gay's Trivia.

To BRAWL. v. n. [brouiller, or brauler, Fr.]

1. To quarrel noisily and indecently.

She troubled was, alas! that it might be,

With tedious brawlings of her parents dear. Sidney.

Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice

Hath often still'd my brawling discontent. Shakespeare.

How now, Sir John! what, are you brawling here?

Does this become your place, your time, your business? Shakespeare. Henry IV. p. ii.

Till their soul-fearing clamours have brawl'd down
The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city. Shakefp. K. John.
In council she gives licence to her tongue
Loquacious, brawling, ever in the wrong. Dryden's Fables.
Leave all noisy contests, all immodest clamours, brawling language, and especially all personal scandal and scurrility to the meanest part of the vulgar world. Watts.
2. To speak loud and indecently.
His divisions, as the times do brawl,
Are in three heads; one pow'r against the French,
And one against Glendower. Shakefp. Henry IV. p. ii.
3. To make a noise.
As he lay along
Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out
Upon the brook that brawls along this wood. Shakefp.
BRAWL. n. f. [from the verb.] Quarrel; noise; scurrility.
He findeth, that controversies thereby are made but brawls;
and therefore wisheth, that, in some lawful assembly of churches,
all these strifes may be decided. Hooker, Preface.
Never since that middle summer's spring
Met we on hill, in dale, forest, or mead,
But with thy brawls thou hast disturb'd our sport.
Shakefp. Midsummer Night's Dream.
That bonum is an animal,
Made good with stout polemick brawl. Hudibras.
BRA'WLER. n. f. [from brawl.] A wrangler; a quarrelsome, noisy fellow.

brawler in court, on purpose to lengthen out the cause. Ayliffe.
BRAWN. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]
1. The fleshy or muscular part of the body.
The brawn of the arm must appear full, shadowed on one side, then shew the wrist-bone thereof. Peacham.
But most their looks on the black monarch bend,
His rising muscles and his brawn commend;
His double biting ax, and beamy spear,
Each asking a gigantick force to rear. Dryden's Fables.
2. The arm, so called from its being muscular.
I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver,
And in my vantbrace put this wither'd brawn. Shakefp.
I had purpose
Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn. Shakefp.
3. Bulk; muscular strength.
Thy boist'rous hands are then of use, when I,
With this directing head, those hands apply;
Brawn without brain is thine. Dryden's Fables.
4. The flesh of a boar.
The best age for the boar is from two years to five years old,
at which time it is best to geld him, or sell him for brawn.
Mortimer.
5. A boar.
BRA'WNER. n. f. [from brawn.] A boar killed for the table.
At Christmas time be careful of your fame,
See the old tenant's table be the same;
Then if you would send up the brawner head,
Sweet rosemary and bays around it spread. King.
- BRA'WNINESS. n. f. [from brawny.] Strength; hardness.

Sound forth, my brayers! and the welkin rend. Pope.
2. [With printers; from to bray, or beat.] An instrument to temper the ink.
To BRAZE. v. a. [from brass.]
1. To solder with brass.
If the nut be not to be cast in brass, but only hath a worm brazed into it, this niceness is not so absolutely necessary, because that worm is first turned up, and bowed into the grooves of the spindle, and you may try that before it is brazed in the nut. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.
2. To harden to impudence.
I have so often blushed to acknowledge him, that now I am brazed to it. Shakefp. King Lear.
If damned custom hath not braz'd it so,
That it is proof and bulwark against sense. Shakefp. Hamlet.
- BRA'ZEN. adj. [from brass.]
1. Made of brass.
Get also a small pair of brazen compasses, and a fine ruler, for taking the distance. Peacham.
A bough his brazen helmet did sustain;
His heavier arms lay scatter'd on the plain. Dryden's Æn.
2. Proceeding from brass: a poetical use.
Trumpeters
With brazen din blast you the city's ear,
Make mingle with your rattling tabourines. Shakefp.
3. Impudent.
To BRA'ZEN. v. n. To be impudent; to bully.
When I used to reprimand him for his tricks, he would talk faucily, lye, and brazen it out, as if he had done nothing amiss.
Arbuthnot's Hist. of J. Bull.
- BRA'ZENFACE. n. f. [from brazen and face.] An impudent wretch.
You do, if you suspect me in any dishonesty.——Well said, brazenface; hold it out. Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
- BRA'ZENFACED. adj. [from brazenface.] Impudent; shameless.
What a brazenfaced varlet art thou, to deny thou knowest me? Is it two days ago, since I tript up thy heels, and beat thee before the king? Shakefp. King Lear.
Quick-witted, brazenfac'd, with fluent tongues,
Patient of labours, and dissembling wrongs. Dryden.
- BRA'ZENNESS. n. f. [from brazen.]

I will think you the most atheistical breakpromise, and the most hollow lover. Shakesp. As you like it.
- BRE'AKVOW. n. f. [from break and vow.] He that practises the breach of vows.
That daily breakvow, he that wins of all,
Of kings, of beggars, old men, young men, maids. Shakesp. King John.
- BREAM. n. f. [brame, Fr.] The name of a fish.
The bream being at full growth, is a large fish; he will breed both in rivers and ponds, but loves best to live in ponds. He is, by Gesner, taken to be more elegant than wholesome. He is long in growing, but breeds exceedingly in a water that pleases him, and, in many ponds, so fast as to overstock them, and starve the other fish. He is very broad, with a forked tail, and his scales set in excellent order. He hath large eyes, and a narrow sucking mouth, two sets of teeth, and a lozing bone, to help his grinders. The male is observed to have two large melts, and the female two large bags of eggs or spawn. Walton's Angler.
- A broad bream, to please some curious taste,
While yet alive in boiling water cast,
Vex'd with unwonted heat, boils, flings about. Waller.
- BREAST. n. f. [bpeort, Saxon.]
1. The middle part of the human body, between the neck and the belly.
2. The dugs or teats of women which contain the milk.
The substance of the breasts is composed of a great number of glands, of an oval figure, which lie in a great quantity of fat. Their excretory ducts, as they approach the nipple, join and unite together, till at last they form seven, eight, or more, small pipes, called tubuli lactiferi, which have several cross canals, by which they communicate with one another, that if any of them be stopped, the milk, which was brought to it, might not stagnate, but pass through by the other pipes, which all terminate in the extremity of the nipple. They have arteries and veins from the subclavian and intercostal. They have nerves from the vertebral pairs, and from the sixth pair of the brain. Their use is to separate the milk for the nourishment of the foetus. The tubes, which compose the glands of the breast in maids, like a sphincter muscle, contract so closely, that no part of the blood can enter them; but when the womb grows big with with a foetus, and compresses the descending trunk of the great artery, the blood flows in a greater quantity, and with a greater force, through the arteries of the breasts, and forces a passage into their glands, which, being at first narrow, admits only of a thin water; but growing wider by degrees, as the womb grows bigger, the glands receive a thick serum, and, after birth, they run with a thick milk; because that blood, which before did flow to the foetus, and, for three or four days afterwards, by the uterus, beginning then to stop, does more dilate the mamillary glands. Quincy.

They pluck the fatherless from the breast. Job, xxiv. 9.

3. The part of a beast that is under the neck, between the fore-legs.

4. The heart; the conscience; the disposition of the mind.

Needless was written law, where none oppress;

The law of man was written in his breast. Dryden's Ovid.

5. The passions; the regard.

Margarita first possess'd,

If I remember well, my breast.

Cowley.

Lay madam Partlet basking in the sun,

Breasthigh in sand.

Dryden's Fables.

BRE'ASTHOOKS. n. f. [from breast and hook.] With shipwrights. The compassing timbers before, that help to strengthen the stem, and all the forepart of the ship.

Harris.

BRE'ASTKNOT. n. f. [from breast and knot.] A knot or bunch of ribbands worn by women on the breast.

Our ladies have still faces, and our men hearts, why may we not hope for the same achievements from the influence of this breastknot?

Addison. Freeholder, N° 11.

BRE'ASTPLATE. n. f. [from breast and plate.] Armour for the breast.

What stronger breastplate than a heart untainted?

Thrice is he arm'd, that hath his quarrel just.

Shakefp.

'Gainst shield, helm, breastplate, and, instead of those,

Five sharp smooth stones from the next brook he chose.

Cowley.

This venerable champion will come into the field, armed only with a pocket-pistol, before his old rusty breastplate could be scoured, and his cracked headpiece mended.

Swift.

BRE'ASTPLOUGH. n. f. [from breast and plough.] A plough used for paring turf, driven by the breast.

The breastplough, which a man shoves before him.

Mortim.

BRE'ASTROPES. n. f. [from breast and rope.] In a ship. Those ropes which fasten the yards to the parrels, and, with the parrels, hold the yards fast to the mast.

Harris.

BRE'ASTWORK. n. f. [from breast and work.] Works thrown up as high as the breast of the defendants; the same with parapet.

Sir John Astley cast up breastworks, and made a redoubt for the defence of his men.

Clarendon, b. viii.

BREATH. n. f. [bnaðe, Saxon.]

1. The air drawn in and ejected out of the body by living animals.

Whither are they vanish'd?

Into the air: and what seem'd corporal

Melted, as breath into the wind.

Shakefp. King Lear.

2. Life.

No man has more contempt than I of breath;

But whence hast thou the pow'r to give me death?

Dryden.

3. The state or power of breathing freely; opposed to the condition in which a man is breathless and spent.

At other times, he casts to sue the chace

Of swift wild beasts, or run on foot a race,

T' enlarge his breath, large breath in arms most needful,

Or else, by wrestling, to wax strong and heedful.

Spenser.

What is your difference? speak.—

—I am scarce in breath, my lord.

Shakefp. King Lear.

Spaniard, take breath; some respite I'll afford;

My cause is more advantage than your sword.

Dryden.

Our swords so wholly did the fates employ,

That they, at length, grew weary to destroy;

Refus'd the work we brought, and out of breath,

Made sorrow and despair attend for death.

Dryden's Aureng.

4. Respiration; the power of breathing.

VOL. I.

Rest, that gives all men life, gave him his death,

And too much breathing put him out of breath.

Milton.

5. Respite; pause; relaxation.

Give me some breath; some little pause, dear lord;

Before I positively speak.

Shakefp. Richard III.

6. Breeze; moving air.

Vent all thy passion, and I'll stand its shock,

Calm and unruffled as a summer's sea,

When not a breath of wind flies o'er its surface.

Addis. Catò.

7. A single act; an instant.

You menace me, and court me in a breath;

Your Cupid looks as dreadfully as death.

Dryden.

BRE'ATHABLE. adj. [from breath.] That may be breathed; as, breathable air.

To BREATHE. v. n. [from breath.]

1. To draw in and throw out the air by the lungs.

Safe return'd, the race of glory past,

New to his friends embrace, had breath'd his last.

Pope.

2. To live.

Let him breathe, between the heav'ns and earth;

A private man in Athens.

Shakefp. Antony and Cleopatra.

3. To take breath; to rest.

He presently followed the victory so hot upon the Scots, that he suffered them not to breathe, or gather themselves together again.

Spenser's State of Ireland.

Three times they breath'd, and three times did they drink;

Upon agreement.

Shakefp. Henry IV. p. i.

When France had breath'd, after intestine broils,

And peace and conquest crown'd her foreign toils.

Rescomin.

4. To pass by breathing.

Shall I not then be stifled in the vault;

To whose foul mouth no healthsome air breathes in;

And there be strangl'd ere my Romeo comes?

Shakefp.

To BREATHE. v. a.

1. To inspire, or inhale into one's own body, and eject or expire out of it.

They wish to live,

Their pains and poverty desire to bear,

To view the light of heav'n, and breathe the vital air.

Dryd.

They here began to breathe a most delicious kind of æther, and saw all the fields about them covered with a kind of purple light.

Tatler, N° 81.

2. To inject by breathing.

He breathed into us the breath of life, a vital active spirit; whose motions, he expects, should own the dignity of its original.

Decay of Piety.

I would be young, be handsome, be belov'd,

Could I but breathe myself into Adrastus.

Dryden.

3. To expire; to eject by breathing.

She is called, by ancient authours, the tenth muse; and, by Plutarch, is compared to Caius, the son of Vulcan, who breathed out nothing but flame.

Spectator, N° 223.

4. To exercise; to keep in breath.

Thy greyhounds are as swift as breathed stags.

Shakefp.

5. To inspire; to move or actuate by breath.

The artful youth proceed to form the quire;

They breathe the flute, or strike the vocal wire.

Prior.

6. To exhale; to send out as breath.

His altar breathes

Ambrosial odours, and ambrosial flow'rs.

Milton's Par. Lost.

7. To utter privately.

I have tow'rd heaven breath'd a secret vow,

To live in prayer and contemplation.

Shakefp. Mer. of Ven.

8. To give air or vent to.

The ready cure to cool the raging pain,

Is underneath the foot to breathe a vein.

Dryden's Virgil.

BRE'ATHER. n. f. [from breathe.]

1. One that breathes, or lives.

She shows a body rather than a life,

A statue than a breather.

Shakefp. Antony and Cleopatra.

I will chide no breather in the world but myself.

Shakefp.

2. One that utters any thing.

No particular scandal once can touch,

But it confounds the breather.

Shakefp. Meas. for Measure.

3. Inspirer; one that animates or infuses by inspiration.

The breather of all life does now expire:

His milder father summons him away.

Norris.

BRE'ATHING. n. f. [from breathe.]

1. Aspiration; secret prayer.

While to high heav'n his pious breathings turn'd,

Weeping he hop'd, and sacrificing mourn'd.

Prior.

2. Breathing place; vent.

The warmth distends the chinks, and makes

New breathings, whence new nourishment she takes.

Dryd.

BRE'ATHLESS. adj. [from breath.]

1. Out of breath; spent with labour.

Well knew

The prince, with patience and sufferance fly;

So hasty heat soon cooled to subdue;

Tho' when he breathless wax, that battle 'gan renew.

Fairy Q.

I remember when the fight was done,

When I was dry with rage, and extreme toil,

Breathless,

B R E

Breathless, and faint, leaning upon my sword, Came there a certain lord. Shakep. Henry IV. p. i.
Many so strained themselves in their race, that they fell down breathless and dead. Hayward.

Breathless and tir'd, is all my fury spent,
Or does my glutt'd spleen at length relent? Dryden's Æn.

2. Dead.

Kneeling before this ruin of sweet life,
And breathing to this breathless excellence,
The incense of a vow, a holy vow. Shakep. King John.
Yielding to the sentence, breathless thou
And pale shalt lie, as what thou buriest now. Prior.

BRED. particip. pass. [from to breed.]

Their malice was bred in them, and their cogitation would never be changed. Wisdom, xii. 10.

BREDE. n. f. See BRAID.

In a curious brede of needle-work, one colour falls away by such just degrees, and another rises so insensibly, that we see the variety, without being able to distinguish the total vanishing of the one, from the first appearance of the other. Addison.

BREECH. n. f. [supposed from bræcan, Sax.]

1. The lower part of the body; the back part.
When the king's pardon was offered by a herald, a lewd boy turned towards him his naked breech, and used words suitable to that gesture. Hayward.

The storks devour snakes and other serpents; which when they begin to creep out at their breeches, they will presently clap them close to a wall, to keep them in. Grew's Museum.

2. Breeches.

Ah! that thy father had been so resolv'd!—
—That you might still have worn the petticoat,
And ne'er have stoln the breech from Lancaster. Shakespeare.

3. The hinder part of a piece of ordnance.

So cannons, when they mount vast pitches,
Are tumbld back upon their breeches. Anonym.

To BREECH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into breeches.

2. To fit any thing with a breech; as, to breech a gun.

BREECHES. n. f. [bræc, Sax. from bracca, an old Gaulish word; so that Skinner imagines the name of the part covered with breeches, to be derived from that of the garment. In this sense it has no singular.]

1. The garment worn by men over the lower part of the body.

Petrachio is coming in a new hat and an old jerkin, and a pair of old breeches, thrice turned. Shakep. Taming the Shrew.
Rough fatires, fly remarks, ill-natur'd speeches,
Are always aim'd at poets that wear breeches. Prior.

Give him a single coat to make, he'd do't;
A vest, or breeches, singly; but the brute
Cou'd ne'er contrive all three to make a suit.

King's Art of Cookery.

2. To wear the breeches, is, to usurp the authority of the husbands.

The wife of Xanthus was proud and domineering, as if her fortune, and her extraction, had entitled her to the breeches.

L'Estrange.

To BREED. v. a. preter. I bred, I have bred. [bræban, Sax.]

1. To procreate; to generate; to produce more of the species.

None fiercer in Numidia bred,
With Carthage were in triumph led. Roscommon.

2. To occasion; to cause; to produce.

Thereat he roared for exceeding pain,
That, to have heard, great horror would have bred. F. 2.
Our own hearts we know, but we are not certain what hope the rites and orders of our church have bred in the hearts of others. Hooker, b. iv.

What hurt ill company, and overmuch liberty, breedeth in youth! Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Intemperance and lust breed infirmities and diseases, which,
being propagated, spoil the strain of a nation. Tillotson.

3. To contrive; to hatch; to plot.

My son Edgar! had he a hand to write this! a heart and brain to breed it in! Shakep. King Lear.

4. To produce from one's self.

Children would breed their teeth with much less danger.
Locke on Education.

5. To give birth to; to be the native place.

Mr. Harding, and the worthiest divine christendom hath bred for the space of some hundreds of years, were brought up together in the same university. Hooker.

Hail, foreign wonder!

Whom, certain, these rough shades did never breed. Milton.

6. To educate; to qualify by education.

Whoe'er thou art, whose forward years are bent
On state-affairs to guide the government;
Hear first what Socrates of old has said
To the lov'd youth, whom he at Athens bred. Dryden.
To breed up the son to common sense,
Is evermore the parent's least expence. Dryden's Juvenal.

And left the pillagers, to rapine bred,
Without controul, to strip and spoil the dead. Dryden.
His farm may not remove his children too far from him, or the trade he breeds them up in. Locke.

B R E

7. To bring up; to take care of from infancy.

Bred up in grief, can pleasure be our theme? }

Our endless anguish, does not nature claim? }

Reason and sorrow are to us the same. } Prior.

Ah, wretched me! by fates averse decreed

To bring thee forth with pain, with care to breed. Dryden.

To BREED. v. n.

1. To bring young.

Lucina, it seems, was breeding, and she did nothing but entertain the company with a discourse upon the difficulty of reckoning to a day. Spectator, N° 431.

2. To encrease by new production.

But could youth last, and love still breed,
Had joys no date, and age no need;
Then these delights my mind might move
To live with thee, and be thy love. Raleigh.

3. To be produced; to have birth.

Where they most breed and haunt, I have observ'd,
The air is delicate. Shakep. King Lear.

There is a worm that breedeth in old snow, and dieth soon after it cometh out of the snow. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 696.

The caterpillar is one of the most general of worms, and breedeth of dew and leaves. Bacon.

It hath been the general tradition and belief, that maggots and flies breed in putrefied carcases. Bentley.

4. To raise a breed.

In the choice of swine, choose such to breed of as are of long large bodies. Mortimer.

BREED. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A cast; a kind; a subdivision of species.

I bring you witness,

Twice fifteen thousand hearts of England's breed. Shakep.

The horses were young and handsome, and of the best breed in the north. Shakep. Henry VIII.

Walled towns, stored arsenals, and ordnance; all this is but a sheep in a lion's skin, except the breed and disposition of the people be stout and warlike. Bacon's Essays, N° 30.

Infectious streams of crowding sins began,
And through the spurious breed and guilty nation ran.

Roscommon.

Rode fair Ascanius on a fiery steed,
Queen Dido's gift, and of the Tyrian breed. Dryden.

A cousin of his last wife's was proposed; but John would have no more of the breed. Arbuthnot's Hist. of J. Bull.

2. Progeny; offspring.

If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not

As to thy friend; for when did friendship take

A breed of barren metal of his friend? Shakep. Mer. of Ven.

3. A number produced at once; a hatch.

She lays them in the sand, where they lie till they are hatched; sometimes above an hundred at a breed. Grew's Museum.

BREEDBATE. n. f. [from breed and bate.] One that breeds quarrels; an incendiary.

An honest, willing, kind fellow, as ever servant shall come in house withal; and, I warrant you, no teltale, nor no breed- bate. Shakep. Merry Wives of Windsor.

BREEDER. n. f. [from breed.]

1. That which produces any thing.

Time is the nurse and breeder of all good. Shakep.

2. The person which brings up another.

Time was, when Italy and Rome have been the best breeders and bringers up of the worthiest men. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

3. A female that is prolifick.

Get thee to a nunnery; why wouldst thou be a breeder of sinners? Shakep. Hamlet.

Here is the babe, as loathsome as a toad,

Amongst the fairest breeders of our time. Shakep. Tit. Andr.

Let there be an hundred persons in London, and as many in the country, we say, that if there be sixty of them breeders in London, there are more than sixty in the country. Graunt.

Yet if a friend a night or two should need her,

He'd recommend her as a special breeder. Pope.

4. One that takes care to raise a breed.

The breeders of English cattle turned much to dairy, or else kept their cattle to six or seven years old. Temple.

BREEDING. n. f. [from breed.]

1. Education; instruction; qualifications.

She had her breeding at my father's charge,
A poor physician's daughter. Shakep. All's well that ends well.
I am a gentleman of blood and breeding. Shakep. K. Lear.
I hope to see it a piece of none of the meanest breeding, to be acquainted with the laws of nature. Glanville's Scepssis, Pref.

2. Manners; knowledge of ceremony.

As men of breeding, sometimes men of wit,
T'avoid great errors, must the less commit. Pope.

The Graces from the court did next provide
Breeding, and wit, and air, and decent pride. Swift.

3. Nurture; care to bring up from the infant state.

Why was my breeding order'd and prescrib'd,
As of a person separate to God,
Design'd for great exploits. Milton's Agonistes, l. 30.

BREESE. n. f. [bræsa, Saxon.] A stinging fly; the gadfly. The

B R E

- The learned write, the insect breefe
Is but the mongrel prince of bees. Hudibras.
A fierce loud buzzing breefe, their stings draw blood,
And drive the cattle gadding through the wood;
Seiz'd with unusual pains, they loudly cry;
Tanagrus hastens thence, and leaves his channels dry. Dryd.
- BREEZE. n. f. [brezza, Ital.] A gentle gale; a soft wind.
We find, that these hottest regions of the world, seated under the equinoctial line, or near it, are so refreshed with a daily gale of easterly wind, which the Spaniards call breeze, that doth ever more blow strongest in the heat of the day. Raleigh.
From land a gentle breeze arose by night,
Serenely shone the stars, the moon was light,
And the sea trembled with her silver light. } Dryden.
Gradual sinks the breeze
Into a perfect calm: that not a breath
Is heard to quiver through the closing wood. Thomson.
- BREEZY. adj. [from breeze.] Fanned with gales.
The seer, while zephyrs curl the swelling deep,
Basks on the breezy shore, in grateful sleep,
His oozy limbs. Pope's Odyssey, b. iii. l. 545.
- BRE'HON. n. f. An Irish word.
In the case of murder, the brehon, that is, their judge, will compound between the murderer and the party murdered, which prosecute the action, that the malefactor shall give unto them, or to the child or wife of him that is slain, a recompence, which they call an eriach. Spenser's State of Ireland.
- BREME. adj. [from brēmman, Sax. to rage or fume.] Cruel; sharp; severe.
And when the shining sun laugheth once,
You deemen the spring come at once:
But erst, when you count, you freed from fear,
Comes the breme winter, with chamfred brows,
Full of wrinkles, and frosty furrows. Spenser's Pastorals.
- BRENT. adj. [from brēnnan, Sax. to burn.] Burnt.
What flames, quoth he, when I thee present see
In danger rather to be drent than brent? Fairy Queen, b. ii.

2. The book containing the daily service of the church of Rome.
- BRE'VIAT. n. f. [from brevis, brevio, Lat.] A short compendium.
It is obvious for the shallowest discourser to infer, that the whole counsel of God, as far as it is incumbent for man to know, is comprised in that one breviat of evangelical truth. Decay of Piety.
- BRE'VIATURE. n. f. [from brevio, Lat.] An abbreviation.
- BREVI'ER. n. f. A particular size of letter used in printing; so called, probably, from being originally used in printing a breviary; as,
Nor love thy life, nor hate, but what thou liv'st,
Live well, how long or short, permit to heav'n. Milton.
- BRE'VITY. n. f. [brevitas, Lat.] Conciseness; shortness; contraction into few words.
Virgil, studying brevity, and having the command of his own language, could bring those words into a narrow compass, which a translator cannot render without circumlocutions. Dryden.
- To BREW. v. a. [brouwen, Dutch; bräwen, German; brüan, Saxon.]
1. To make liquours by mixing several ingredients.
We have drinks also brewed with several herbs, and roots, and spices. Bacon.
Mercy guard me!
Hence with thy brew'd enchantments, foul deceiver. Milton.
2. To prepare by mixing things together.
Here's neither rush nor shrub to bear off any weather at all, and another storm brewing. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Take away these chalices; go, brew me a pottle of sack finely. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
• Or brew fierce tempests on the watry main,
Or o'er the globe distil the kindly rain. Pope's R. of the L.
3. To contrive; to plot.
I found it to be the most malicious and frantick surmise, and the most contrary to his nature, that, I think, had ever been brewed from the beginning of the world, howsoever countenanced by a libellous pamphlet of a fugitive physician, even in print. Wotton.

B R I

- To BREW. v. n. To perform the office of a brewer.
I keep his house, and wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat, and make the beds, and do all myself. Shakespeare.
- BREW. n. f. [from the verb.] Manner of brewing; or thing brewed.
Trial would be made of the like brew with potato roots, or burr roots, or the pith of artichokes, which are nourishing meats. Bacon's Natural History, N° 47.
- BRE'WAGE. n. f. [from brew.] Mixture of various things.
Go, brew me a pottle of sack finely.

BRIDAL. adj. [from bride.] Belonging to a wedding; nuptial; connubial.

Our wedding cheer to a sad fun'ral feast,
Our solemn hymns to fullen dirges change,
Our bridal flowers serve for a buried corse. Shakefp.
Come, I will bring thee to thy bridal chamber. Shakefp.

The amorous bird of night
Sung spousal, and bid haste the ev'ning star,
On his hill-top to light the bridal lamp. Parad. Lost, b. viii.

Your ill-meaning politician lords,
Under pretence of bridal friends and guests,
Appointed to await me thirty spies. Milton's Agonist. l. 1195.

When to my arms thou brought'st thy virgin love,
Fair angels sung our bridal hymn above. Dryden.

With all the pomp of woe, and sorrow's pride!
Oh, early lost! oh, fitter to be led

In cheerful splendour to the bridal bed! Walsh.

For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring,
For her white virgins hymenæals sing. Pope's Eloisa to Abel.

BRIDAL. n. f. The nuptial festival.

Nay, we must think, men are not gods;
Nor of them look for such observance always,
As fits the bridal. Shakefp. Othello.

Sweet day, so cool, so calm, so bright,
The bridal of the earth and sky,
Sweet dew shall weep thy fall to-night;

For thou must die. Herbert.

In death's dark bow'rs our bridals we will keep,
And his cold hand

Shall draw the curtain when we go to sleep. Dryden.

BRIDE. n. f. [bryð, Saxon; brudur, in Runick, signifies a beautiful woman.] A woman new married.

Help me mine own love's praises to resound,
Ne let the fame of any be envy'd;
So Orpheus did for his own bride. Spenser's Epithalamium.

The day approach'd, when fortune should decide
Th' important enterprize, and give the bride. Dryden's Fab.

These are tributes due from pious brides,
From a chaste matron, and a virtuous wife. Smith's Phædr.

BRIDEBED. n. f. [from bride and bed.] Marriage-bed.

Now until the break of day,
Through this house each fairy stray;

Which by us shall blessed be. Shakefp. Midsum. Night's Dr.

Would David's son, religious, just, and brave,
To the first bridebed of the world receive

A foreigner, a heathen, and a slave? Prior.

BRIDECAKE. n. f. [from bride and cake.] A cake distributed to the guests at the wedding.

With the phant'sies of hey-troll,
Troll about the bridal bowl,
And divide the broad bridecake

Round about the bride's stake. Ben. Johnson's Underwoods.

The writer, resolved to try his fortune, fasted all day, and, that he might be sure of dreaming upon something at night, procured an handsome slice of bridecake, which he placed very conveniently under his pillow. Spectator, N° 597.

BRIDEGROOM. n. f. [from bride and groom.] A new married man.

As are those dulcet sounds in break of day,
That creep into the dreaming bridegroom's ear,
And summon him to marriage. Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.

Why, happy bridegroom!

Why dost thou steal so soon away to bed? Dryden.

BRIDEMEN. } n. f. The attendants on the bride and bride-

BRIDEMAIDS. } groom.

BRIDESTAKE. n. f. [from bride and stake.] It seems to be a post set in the ground, to dance round, like a maypole.

And divide the broad bridecake,
Round about the bridestake. Ben. Johnson's Underwoods.

BRIDEWELL. n. f. [The palace built by St. Bride's, or Bridget's well, was turned into a workhouse.] A house of correction.

He would contribute more to reformation than all the work-houses and Bridewells in Europe. Spectator, N° 157.

BRIDGE. n. f. [bryc, Saxon.]

1. A building raised over water for the convenience of passage.

7. To attract; to draw along.

In distillation, the water ascends difficultly, and brings over with it some part of the oil of vitriol. Newton's Opticks.

8. To put into any particular state or circumstances, to make liable to any thing.

Having got the way of reasoning, which that study necessarily brings the mind to, they might be able to transfer it to other parts of knowledge, as they shall have occasion. Locke.

The question for bringing the king to justice was immediately put, and carried without any opposition, that I can find.

Swift's Presbyterian Plea.

9. To conduct.

A due consideration of the vanities of the world, will naturally bring us to the contempt of it; and the contempt of the world will as certainly bring us home to ourselves. L'Estrange.

The understanding should be brought to the difficult and knotty parts of knowledge, by insensible degrees. Locke.

10. To recal; to summons.

But those, and more than I to mind can bring,

Menalcas has not yet forgot to sing. Dryden.

11. To induce; to prevail upon.

The nature of the things, contained in those words, would not suffer him to think otherwise, how, or whensoever, he is brought to reflect on them. Locke.

It seems so preposterous a thing to men, to make themselves unhappy in order to happiness, that they do not easily bring themselves to it. Locke.

Profitable employments would be no less a diversion than any of the idle sports in fashion, if men could but be brought to delight in them. Locke.

12. To bring about. [See ABOUT.] To bring to pass; to effect.

This he conceives not hard to bring about,

If all of you would join to help him out. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

This turn of mind threw off the oppositions of envy and competition; it enabled him to gain the most vain and impracticable into his designs, and to bring about several great events, for the advantage of the publick. Addison's Freeholder.

13. To bring forth. To give birth to; to produce.

The good queen,

For she is good, hath brought you forth a daughter:

Here 'tis; commends it to your blessing. Shakefp.

More wonderful

Than that which, by creation, first brought forth

Light out of darkness! Paradise Lost, b. xii. l. 472.

Bewail thy falsehood, and the pious works

It hath brought forth, to make thee memorable

Among illustrious women, faithful wives. Milton's Agonist.

Bellona leads thee to thy lover's hand,

Another queen brings forth another brand,

To burn with foreign fires her native land!

Dryden, Æneid vii. l. 444.

Idleness and luxury bring forth poverty and want; and this tempts men to injustice; and that causeth enmity and animosity. Tillotson.

The value of land is raised, when it is fitted to bring forth a greater quantity of any valuable product. Locke.

14. To bring forth. To bring to light.

The thing that is hid, bringeth he forth to light.

Job, xxviii. 11.

16. To bring in. To afford gain.

The sole measure of all his courtesies is, what return they will make him, and what revenue they will bring him in. South.

Trade brought us in plenty and riches. Locke.

17. To bring in. To introduce.

Entertain no long discourse with any; but, if you can, bring in something to season it with religion. Taylor.

The fruitfulness of Italy and the like, are not brought in by force, but naturally rise out of the argument. Addison.

Quotations are best brought in, to confirm some opinion controverted. Swift.

18. To bring off. To clear; to procure to be acquitted; to cause to escape.

I trusted to my head, that has betrayed me; and I found fault with my legs, that would otherwise have brought me off. L'Estrange.

Set a kite upon the bench, and it is forty to one he'll bring off a crow at the bar. L'Estrange.

The best way to avoid this imputation, and to bring off the credit of our understanding, is to be truly religious. Tillotson.

19. To bring on. To engage in action.

If there be any that would reign, and take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on.

Bacon, Essay 36.

20. To bring over. To convert; to draw to a new party.

This liberty should be made use of upon few occasions, of small importance, and only with a view of bringing over his own side, another time, to something of greater and more publick moment. Swift on the Sentiments of a Ch. of Engl. man.

The protestant clergy will find it, perhaps, no difficult matter to bring great numbers over to the church. Swift.

21. To bring out. To exhibit; to shew.

If I make not this cheat bring out another, and the shearers prove sheep, let me be unrolled. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.

Which he could bring out, where he had,

And what he bought them for, and paid. Hudibras.

These shake his soul, and, as they boldly press,

Bring out his crimes, and force him to confess. Dryden.

Another way made use of, to find the weight of the denarii, was by the weight of Greek coins; but those experiments bring out the denarius heavier. Arbuthnot.

22. To bring under. To subdue; to repress.

That sharp course which you have set down, for the bringing under

B R I

under of those rebels of Ulster, and preparing a way for their perpetual reformation. Spenser's Ireland.

To say, that the more capable, or the better deserver, hath such right to govern, as he may compulsorily bring under the less worthy, is idle. Bacon's Holy War.

23. To bring up. To educate; to instruct; to form.

The well bringing up of the people, serves as a most sure bond to hold them. Sidney, b. i.

He that takes upon him the charge of bringing up young men, especially young gentlemen, should have something more in him than Latin. Locke.

They frequently conversed with this lovely virgin, who had been brought up by her father in the same course of knowledge. Addison. Guardian, N° 167.

24. To bring up. To bring into practice.

Several obliging deferences, condescensions, and submissions, with many outward forms and ceremonies, were first of all brought up among the politer part of mankind, who lived in courts and cities. Spectator, N° 119.

25. To bring up. To cause to advance.

Bring up your army; but, I think, you'll find,

They've not prepar'd for us. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

BRINGER. n. f. [from bring.] The person that brings any thing.

Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news

Hath but a losing office: and his tongue

Sounds ever after as a fullen bell,

Remember'd tolling a dead friend. Shakespeare. Henry IV. p. ii.

Best you see safe the bringer

Out of the host: I must attend mine office. Shakespeare.

BRINGER UP. Instructor; educator.

Italy and Rome have been breeders and bringers up of the worthiest men. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

BRINISH. adj. [from brine.] Having the taste of brine; salt.

Nero would be tainted with remorse

To hear and see her plaints, her brinish tears. Shakespeare.

For now I stand, as one upon a rock,

Environ'd with a wilderness of sea,

Who marks the waxing tide grow wave by wave;

Expecting ever when some envious surge

Will, in his brinish bowels, swallow him. Shakespeare. T. Andr.

BRINISHNESS. n. f. [from brinish.] Saltiness; tendency to saltiness.

BRINK. n. f. [brink, Danish.] The edge of any place, as of a precipice or a river.

Th' amazed flames stand gather'd in a heap,

And from the precipice's brink retire,

Afraid to venture on so large a leap. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.

We stand therefore on the brinks and confines of those states at the day of doom. Atterbury.

So have I seen, from Severn's brink,

A flock of geese jump down together;

Swim where the bird of Jove wou'd sink,

And, swimming, never wet a feather. Swift.

BRINY. adj. [from brine.] Salt.

He, who first the passage try'd,

In harden'd oak his heart did hide;

Or his, at least, in hollow wood,

Who tempted first the briny flood. Dryden.

Then, briny seas, and tasteful springs, farewell,

Where fountain nymphs, confus'd with Nereids, dwell. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

A muriatick or briny taste seems to be produced by a mixture of an acid and alkaline salt; for spirit of salt, and salt of tartar, mixed, produce a salt like sea salt. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

BR'ONY. See BRYONY.

BRISK. adj. [brusque, Fr.]

1. Lively; vivacious; gay; sprightly; applied to men.

Pr'ythee, die, and set me free,

Or else be

Kind and brisk, and gay like me. Sir J. Denham.

A creeping young fellow, that had committed matrimony with a brisk gamefome lass, was so altered in a few days, that he was liker a skeleton than a living man. L'Estrange.

Why shou'd all honour then be ta'en

From lower parts, to load the brain:

When other limbs we plainly see,

Each in his way, as brisk as he? Prior.

2. Powerful; spirituous.

Our nature here is not unlike our wine;

Some sorts, when old, continue brisk and fine. Denham.

Under ground, the rude Riphæan race

Mimick brisk cyder, with the brake's product wild,

Sloes pounded, hips, and servis' harshiest juice. Philips.

It must needs be some exterior cause, and the brisk acting of some objects without me, whose efficacy I cannot resist. Locke.

3. Vivid; bright.

Objects appeared much darker, because my instrument was overcharged; had it magnified thirty or twenty five times, it would have made the object appear more brisk and pleasant. Newton's Opticks.

And drip their fatness from the hazle broach. Dryden's Virgil.

2. A musical instrument, the sounds of which are made by turning round a handle. Diſt.
3. [With hunters.] A ſtart of the head of a young ſtag, growing ſharp like the end of a ſpit. Diſt.
- To BROACH. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To ſpit; to pierce as with a ſpit.
As by a low but loving likelihood,
Were now the general of our gracious empreſs,
As in good time he may, from Ireland coming,
Bringing rebellion broached on his ſword. Shakeſp. Henry V.
He felled men as one would mow hay, and ſometimes broached a great number of them upon his pike, as one would carry little birds ſpitted upon a ſtick. Hakewell on Providence.
2. To pierce a veſſel in order to draw the liquour; to tap.
3. To open any ſtore.
I will notably provide, that you ſhall want neither weapons, victuals, nor aid; I will open the old armouries, I will broach
my ſtore, and bring forth my ſtores. Knolles's Hiſtory.
4. To give out, or utter any thing.
This error, that Piſon was Ganges, was firſt broached by Joſephus. Raleigh.
Thoſe who were the chief inſtruments of raiſing the noiſe, made uſe of thoſe very opinions themſelves had broached, for arguments to prove, that the change of miniſters was dangerous. Swift's Examiner, N<sup>o</sup> 45.
5. To let out any thing.
And now the field of death, the liſts,
Were enter'd by antagoniſts,

Are pull'd up root and all by Bolingbroke. Shakeſp. R. II.
The top may be juſtly ſaid to grow broad, as the bottom narrower. Temple.
Of all your knowledge this vain fruit you have,
To walk with eyes broad open to your grave. Dryden.
So lofty was the pile, a Parthian bow,
With vigour drawn, muſt ſend the ſhaft below,
The bottom was full twenty fathom broad. Dryden's Fables.
He launch'd the fiery bolt from pole to pole,
Broad burſt the lightnings, deep the thunders roll. Pope.
As cloath'd in cloudy ſtorm,
Weak, wan, and broad, he ſkirts the ſouthern ſky. Thomſon.
2. Large.
To keep him at a diſtance from falſehood and cunning, which has always a broad mixture of falſehood; this is the fitteſt preparation of a child for wiſdom. Locke.
3. Clear; open.
In mean time he, with cunning to conceal
All thought of this from others, himſelf bore
In broad houſe, with the wooers us before. Chapman's Odyſſ.
It no longer ſeeks the ſhelter of night and darkneſs, but appears in the broad light. Decay of Piety.
If children were left alone in the dark, they would be no more afraid than in broad ſunſhine. Locke.
4. Groſs; coarſe.

as much as the lady prioreſs and the broad ſpeaking gap-toothed wife of Bath. Dryden's Fables, Pref.
Love made him doubt his broad barbarian ſound;
By love, his want of words and wit he found. Dryden.
If open vice be what you drive at,
A name ſo broad will ne'er connive at. Dryden's Albion.
The *broad*ſt mirth unfeeling folly wears,
Leſs pleaſing far than virtue's very tears. Pope.
Room for my lord! three jockeys in his train;
Six huntſmen with a ſhout precede his chair;
He grins, and looks broad nonſenſe with a ſtare. Pope.
5. Obſcene; fulſom; tending to obſcenity.
As chaſte and modeſt as he is eſteemed, it cannot be denied, but in ſome places he is broad and fulſome. Dryden's Juu. Ded.
Though, now arraign'd, he read with ſome delight;
Be cauſe he ſeems to chew the cud again,
When his broad comment makes the text too plain. Dryden.
6. Bold; not delicate; not reſerved.
Who can ſpeak *broad*er than he that has no houſe to put his head in? Such may rail againſt great buildings. Shakeſp.

- From broad words, and 'cauſe he fail'd
His preſence at the tyrant's feaſt, I hear, Macduff lives in diſgrace. Shakeſp. Macbeth.
- BROAD as long. Equal upon the whole.
The mobile are ſtill for levelling; that is to ſay, for advancing themſelves: for it is as broad as long, whether they riſe to others, or bring others down to them. L'Eſtrange.
- BROAD-CLOTH. n. ſ. [from broad and cloth.] A fine kind of cloth.
Thus, a wiſe taylor is not pinching;
But turns at ev'ry ſeam an inch in:
Or elſe, be ſure, your broad-cloth breeches
Will ne'er be ſmooth, nor hold their ſtitches. Swift.
- BROAD-EYED. adj. [from broad and eye.] Having a wide ſurvey.
In deſpite of broad-ey'd watchful day,

Forget her pray'rs, or miſs a maſquerade. Pope.
- BROCA'DED. adj. [from brocade.]
1. Dreſt in brocade.
  2. Woven in the manner of a brocade.
Should you the rich brocaded ſuit unfold,
Where riſing flow'rs grow ſtiff with froſted gold. Gay.
- BRO'CAGE. n. ſ. [from broke.]
1. The gain gotten by promoting bargains.
Yet ſure his honeſty
Got him ſmall gains, but ſhameleſs flattery,
And filthy brocage, and unſeemly ſhifts,
And borrow baſe, and ſome good ladies gifts. Spencer.
  2. The hire given for any unlawful office.
As for the politick and wholeſome laws, they were interpreted to be but brocage of an uſurer, thereby to woo and win the hearts of the people. Bacon's Henry VII.
  3. The trade of dealing in old things.
Poor poet ape, that would be thought our chief,
Whoſe works are e'en the frippery of wit,
From brocage is become ſo bold a thief,
As we, the rob'd, leave rage, and pity it: Ben. Johnson.
So much as the quantity of money is leſſened, ſo much muſt the ſhare of every one that has a right to this money be the leſs, whether he be landholder, for his goods, or labourer, for his hire, or merchant, for his brocage. Locke.
- BRO'CCOLI. n. ſ. [Ital.] See CABBAGE; of which it is a ſpecies.
Content with little, I can piddle here,
On broccoli and mutton round the year;
But ancient friends, tho' poor or out of play,
That touch my bell, I cannot turn away. Pope.
- To BROCHE. See To BROACH.

Long ere now all the planets and comets had been broiling in the sun, had the world lasted from all eternity. Cheyne.

To BROKE. v. n. [of uncertain etymology. Skinner seems inclined to derive it from to break, because broken men turn factors or brokers. Casanbon, from ωρεστω. Skinner thinks, again, that it may be contracted from procurer. Mr. Lye more probably deduces it from bruccan, Sax. to be busy.] To transact business for others, or by others. It is used generally in reproach.

He does, indeed,

And brokes with all that can, in such a suit,

Corrupt the tender honour of a maid. Shakesp.

The gains of bargains are of a more doubtful nature, when men should wait upon other's necessity; broke by servants and instruments to draw them on. Bacon.

BRO'KING. particip. adj. In the broker's hands.

Redeem from broking pawn the blemish'd crown,

Wipe off the dust that hides our sceptre's gilt. Shakesp.

BRO'KEN. [particip. pass. of break.]

Preserve men's wits from being broken with the very bent of so long attention. Hooker.

BRO'KEN MEAT. Fragments; meat that has been cut.

Get three or four chairwomen to attend you constantly in the kitchen, whom you pay at small charges; only with the broken meat, a few coals, and all the cinders. Swift.

BRO'KENHEARTED. adj. [from broken and heart.] Having the spirits crushed by grief or fear.

He hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted. Isa. lxi. 1.

Sir Richard Hopkins hath done somewhat of this kind, but brokenly and glancingly; intending chiefly a discourse of his own voyage. Hakewell on Providence.

BRO'KER. n. f. [from to broke.]

1. A factor; one that does business for another; one that makes bargains for another.

Brokers, who, having no stock of their own, set up and trade with that of other men; buying here, and selling there, and commonly abusing both sides, to make out a little poultry gain. Temple.

Some South-sea broker, from the city,

Will purchase me, the more's the pity;

Lay all my fine plantations waste,

To fit them to his vulgar taste. Swift.

2. One who deals in old household goods.

3. A pimp; a match-maker.

A goodly broker!

Dare you presume to harbour wanton lines?

To whisper and conspire against my youth? Shakesp.

In chusing for yourself, you shew'd your judgment;

Which being shallow, you shall give me leave

To play the broker in mine own behalf. Shakesp. Henry VI.

BRO'KERAGE. n. f. [from broker.] The pay or reward of a broker. See BROGAGE.

To BROOD. v. n. [brædan, Saxon.]

1. To sit on eggs; to hatch them.

Thou from the first

Wast present, and, with mighty wings outspread,

Dove-like sat'st brooding on the vast abyss,

And mad'st it pregnant. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i. l. 21.

Here nature spreads her fruitful sweetness round,

Breathes on the air, and broods upon the ground. Dryden.

2. To cover chickens under the wing.

Exalted hence, and drunk with secret joy,

Their young succession all their cares employ;

They breed, they brood, instruct and educate,

And make provision for the future state. Dryden's Virgil.

Find out some uncouth cell,

Where brooding darkness spreads his jealous wings,

And the night raven sings. Milton.

3. To watch, or consider any thing anxiously.

Defraud their clients, and, to lucre fold,

Sit brooding on unprofitable gold,

Who dare not give. Dryden's Æneid.

As rejoicing misers

Brood o'er their precious stores of secret gold. Smith's Phædr.

4. To mature any thing by care.

It was the opinion of Clitias, as if there were ever amongst nations a brooding of a war, and that there is no sure league but impuissance to do hurt. Bacon's War with Spain.

To BROOD. v. a. To cherish by care; to hatch.

Of clouds afraid, yet anxious when alone,

You'll sit and brood your sorrows on a throne. Dryden.

 The common hen, all the while she is broody, sits, and leads her chickens, and uses a voice which we call clocking. Ray.

BROOK. n. f. [bnoc, or bnoca, Saxon.] A running water, less than a river; a rivulet.
 A substitute shines brightly as a king,
 Until a king be by; and then his state
 Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
 Into the main of waters. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
 Or many grateful altars I would rear,
 Of grassy turf; and pile up every stone,
 Of lustre, from the brook; in memory,
 Of monument to ages. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi. l. 325.
 And to Cephissus' brook their way pursue:
 The stream was troubled, but the ford they knew. Dryden.
 Springs make little rivulets; those united, make brooks; and those coming together, make rivers, which empty themselves into the sea. Locke.

To BROOK. v. a. [bnucan, Sax.] To bear; to endure; to support.
 Even they, which brook it worst, that men should tell them of their duties, when they are told the same by a law, think very well and reasonably of it. Hooker, b. i.
 A thousand more mischances than this one,
 Have learn'd me to brook this patiently. Shakesp. T. G. of Ver.
 How use doth breed a habit in a man!
 This shadowy desert, unfrequented woods,
 I better brook than flourishing peopl'd towns. Shakesp.
 Heav'n, the seat of bliss,
 Brooks not the works of violence, and war. Par. Lost, b. vi.
 Most men can much rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools. South.
 Restraint thou wilt not brook; but think it hard,
 Your prudence is not trusted as your guard. Dryden.

To BROOK. v. n. To endure; to be content.
 He, in these wars, had flatly refused his aid; because he could not brook, that the worthy prince Plangus was, by his chosen Tiridates, preferred before him. Sidney's Arcadia.

 Ev'n humble broom, and osiers, have their use,
 And shade for sheep, and food for flocks, produce. Dryden.

2. A besom; so called from the matter of which it is made.
 Not a mouse
 Shall disturb this hallow'd house;
 I am sent with broom before,
 To sweep the dust behind the door. Sh. Midsum. Night's Dr.
 If they came into the best apartment, to set any thing in order, they were saluted with a broom. Arbutnot's John Bull.

BRO'OMLAND. n. f. [broom and land.] Land that bears broom.
 I have known sheep cured of the rot, when they have not been far gone with it, only by being put into broomlands. Mortimer's Husbandry.

BRO'OMSTAFF. n. f. [from broom and staff.] The staff to which the broom is bound; the handle of a besom.
 They fell on; I made good my place; at length they came to the broomstaff with me; I defied 'em still. Shakesp. H. VIII.
 From the age,
 That children tread this worldly stage,
 Broomstaff, or poker, they bestride,
 And round the parlour love to ride. Prior.
 Sir Roger pointed at something behind the door, which I found to be an old broomstaff. Spectator, N° 117.

BRO'OMY. adj. [from broom.] Full of broom.
 If it grow mossy or broomy, which these lands are inclined to, then break it up again, and order it as you did before, laying of it down again from the wheat-stubble. Mortimer.

Then courts of kings were held in high renown,
 Ere made the common brothels of the town:
 There, virgins honourable vows receiv'd,
 But chaste as maids in monasteries liv'd. Dryden's W. of B.
 From its old ruins brothelhouses rise,
 Scenes of lewd loves, and of polluted joys. Dryden's Mackfl.
 The libertine retires to the stewes, and to the brothel. Rogers.

BRO'THER. n. f. [broðer, broðor, Saxon.] Plural, brothers, or brethren.

1. One born of the same father and mother.
 Be sad, good brothers;
 Sorrow so royally in you appears,
 That I will deeply put the fashion on. Shakesp. Hen. IV.
 Whilst kin their kin, brother the brother foils,
 Like ensigns all, against like ensigns bend. Daniel.
 T' whom Michael! thus, he also mov'd, reply'd:
 These two are brethren, Adam, and to come Out of thy loins. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 454.
 Comparing two men, in reference to one common parent, it is very easy to form the ideas of brothers. Locke.

2. Any one closely united.
 We few, we happy few, we band of brothers;
 For he, to day that sheds his blood with me,
 Shall be my brother. Shakesp. Henry V.

3. Any one resembling another in manner, form, or profession.
 He also that is slothful in his work, is brother to him that is a great waster. Prov. xviii. 9.

4. Brother is used, in theological language, for man in general.

BRO'THERHOOD. n. f. [from brother and hood.]

1. The state or quality of being a brother.
 This deep disgrace of brotherhood
 Touches me deeper than you can imagine. Shakesp. R. II.
 Finds brotherhood in thee no sharper spur? Shakesp. R. II.
 So it be a right to govern, whether you call it supreme fatherhood, or supreme brotherhood, will be all one, provided we know who has it. Locke.

2. An association of men for any purpose; a fraternity.
 There was a fraternity of men at arms, called the brotherhood of St. George, erected by parliament, consisting of thirteen the most noble and worthy persons. Davies on Ireland.

3. A class of men of the same kind.
 He was sometimes so engaged among the wheels, that not above half the poet appeared; at other times, he became as conspicuous as any of the brotherhood. Addison's Guardian.

BRO'THERLY. adj. [from brother.] Natural; such as becomes or befits a brother.
 He was a priest, and looked for a priest's reward; which was our brotherly love, and the good of our souls and bodies. Bacon.
 Though more our money than our cause,
 Their brotherly assistance draws. Denham.
 They would not go before the laws, but follow them; obeying their superiours, and embracing one another in brotherly piety and concord. Addison's Freeholder, N° 33.

BRO'THERLY. adv. After the manner of a brother; with kindness and affection.
 I speak but brotherly of him; but should I anatomize him to thee as he is, I must blush and weep, and thou look pale and wonder. Shakesp. As you like it.

BROUGHT. [participle passive of bring.]
 The Turks, possessed with a needless fear, forsook the walls, and could not, by any persuasions or threats of the captains, be brought on again to the assault. Knolles's History.
 The instances brought by our authour are but slender proofs. Locke.

BROW. n. f. [bnopa, Saxon.]

1. The arch of hair over the eye.
 'Tis now the hour which all to rest allow,
 And sleep sits heavy upon every brow. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

2. The forehead.
 She could have run, and waddled about;
 For even the day before she broke her brow. Shakesp.
 So we some antique hero's strength,
 Learn by his lance's weight and length;
 As these vast beams express the beast,
 Whose shady brows alive they drest. Waller.

3. The general air of the countenance.
 Then call them to our presence, face to face,
 And frowning brow to brow. Shakesp. Richard II.
 Though all things foul would bear the brows of grace,
 Yet grace must look still so. Shakesp. Macbeth.

4. The edge of any high place.
 The earl, nothing dismayed, came forwards that day unto a little village, called Stoke, and there encamped that night, upon the brow or hanging of a hill. Bacon's Henry VII.
 On the brow of the hill beyond that city, they were somewhat perplexed by espying the French ambassador, with the king's coach, and others, attending him. Wotton.
 Them with fire, and hostile arms,
 Fearless assault; and, to the brow of heav'n Pursuing, drive them out from God and bliss. Par. L. b. vi.

To BROW. v. a. [from the noun.] To bound; to limit; to be at the edge of.

Plinlimmon, from afar the traveller kens,
Astonish'd, how the goats their shrubby browse
Gnaw pendent. Philips.

To BRUISE. v. a. [briser, Fr.] To crush or mangle with the heavy blow of something not edged or pointed; to crush by any weight; to beat into gross powder; to beat together coarsely.
Fellows in arms, and my most loving friends,
Bruis'd underneath the yoke of tyranny. Shakespeare. R. III.
And fix far deeper in his head their stings,
Than temporal death shall bruise the victor's heel,
Or theirs whom he redeems. Par. Lost, b. xii l. 433.

B R U

As in old chaos heav'n with earth confus'd,
And stars with rocks together crush'd and bruis'd. Waller.
They beat their breasts with many a bruising blow,
Till they turn'd livid, and corrupt the snow. Dryden's Fab.

BRUISE. n. f. [from the verb.] A hurt with something blunt and heavy.
One arm'd with metal, th' other with wood,
This fit for bruise, and that for blood. Hudibras.
I since have labour'd
To bind the bruises of a civil war,
And stop the issues of their wasting blood. Dryden.

BRUISEWORT. n. f. An herb; the same with COMFREY; which see.

BRUIT. n. f. [bruit, Fr.] Rumour; noise; report.

God, who caus'd a fountain, at thy pray'r,
From the dry ground to spring, thy thirst t' allay
After the brunt of battle. Milton's Agonistes, l. 581.
Faithful ministers are to stand and endure the brunt: a common soldier may fly, when it is the duty of him that holds the standard to die upon the place. South.

2. Blow; stroke.
A wicked ambush, which lay hidden long
In the close covert of her guileful eyen,
Thence breaking forth, did thick about me throng,
Too feeble I t' abide the brunt so strong. Spenser's Sonnets.
The friendly rug preserv'd the ground,
And headlong knight, from bruise or wound,
Like featherbed betwixt a wall,
An heavy brunt of cannon-ball. Hudibras.

BRUSH. n. f. [broffe, Fr. from bruscus, Lat.]
1. An instrument to clean any thing, by rubbing off the dirt or soil. It is generally made of bristles set in wood.
2. It is used for the larger and stronger pencils used by painters.

You have commissioned me to paint your shop, and I have done my best to brush you up like your neighbours. Pope.

4. To carry away, by an act like that of brushing.
And from the boughs brush off the evil dew,
And heal the harms of thwarting thunder blew. Milton.
The receptacle of waters, into which the mouths of all rivers must empty themselves, ought to have so spacious a surface, that as much water may be continually brushed off by the winds, and exhaled by the sun, as, besides what falls again, is brought into it by all the rivers. Bentley.

5. To move as the brush.
A thousand nights have brush'd their balmy wings
Over these eyes. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

TO BRUSH. v. n.

1. To move with haste: a ludicrous word, applied to men.
Nor wept his fate, nor cast a pitying eye,
Nor took him down, but brush'd regardless by. Dryden.
The French had gather'd all their force,
And William met them in their way;
Yet off they brush'd, both foot and horse. Prior.

2. To fly over; to skim lightly.
Nor love is always of a vicious kind,
But oft to virtuous acts inflames the mind,
Awakes the sleepy vigour of the soul,
And, brushing o'er, adds motion to the pool. Dryden's Fab.

BRU'SHER. n. f. [from brush.] He that uses a brush.
Sir Henry Wotton used to say, that criticks were like brush-
ers of noblemens cloaths. Bacon's Apophthegms.

BRU'SHWOOD. n. f. [from brush and wood.] I know not whether it may not be corrupted from browsewood.] Rough, low, close, shrubby thickets; small wood fit for fire.
It smokes, and then with trembling breath she blows,
Till in a cheerful blaze the flames arose.
With brushwood, and with chips, she strengthens these,
And adds at last the boughs of rotten trees. Dryden's Fab.

BRU'SHY. adj. [from brush.] Rough or shaggy, like a brush.
I suspected, that it might have proceeded from some small unheeded drop of blood, wiped off by the brushy substance of the nerve, from the knife wherewith it was cut. Boyle.

TO BRU'STLE. v. n. [brastlan, Saxon.] To crackle; to make a small noise. Skinner.

BRU'TAL. adj. [brutal, Fr. from brute.]

1. That which belongs to a brute; that which we have in common with brutes.
There is no opposing brutal force to the stratagems of human reason. L'Estrange.

2. Savage; cruel; inhuman.
The brutal bus'ness of the war
Is manag'd by thy dreadful servants' care. Dryden.

BRU'TALITY. n. f. [brutalité, Fr.] Savageness; churlishness;
inhumanity.
Courage, in an ill-bred man, has the air, and escapes not the opinion of brutality. Locke.

TO BRU'TALIZE. v. n. [brutaliser, Fr.] To grow brutal or savage.
Upon being carried to the Cape of Good Hope, he mixed, in a kind of transport, with his countrymen, brutalized with them in their habit and manners, and would never again return to his foreign acquaintance. Addison's Freeholder.

TO BRU'TALIZE. v. a. To make brutal or savage.

BRU'TALLY. adv. [from brutal.] Churlishly; inhumanly; cruelly.
Mrs. Bull aimed a knife at John, though John threw a bottle at her head, very brutally indeed. Arbuthnot.

BRUTE. adj. [brutus, Lat.]

1. Senseless; unconscious.
Nor yet are we so low and base as their atheism would depress us; not walking statues of clay, not the sons of brute earth, whose final inheritance is death and corruption. Bentl.

2. Savage; irrational; ferine.
Even brute animals make use of this artificial way of making divers motions, to have several significations to call, warn, chide, cherish, threaten. Holder's Elements of Speech.
In the promulgation of the Mosaic law, if so much as a brute beast touched the mountain, it was to be struck through with a dart. South.

3. Bestial; in common with beasts.
Then to subdue, and quell, through all the earth,
Brute violence, and proud tyrannick pow'r. Par. Regained.

4. Rough; ferocious; uncivilized.
The brute philosopher, who ne'er has prov'd
The joy of loving, or of being lov'd. Pope.

BRUTE. n. f. [from the adjective.] A brute creature; a creature without reason; a savage.
What may this mean? Language of man pronounce'd
By tongue of brute, and human sense express'd? Par. Lost.
To judgment he proceeded, on th' accurs'd
Serpent, tho' brute; unable to transfer

The guilt on him, who made him instrument
Of mischief. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 165.
Brutes may be considered as either, aerial, terrestrial, aquatick, or amphibious. I call those aerial, which have wings, wherewith they can support themselves in the air; terrestrial are those, whose only place of rest is upon the earth; aquatick are those, whose constant abode is upon the water. Locke.
To those three present impulses, of sense, memory, and instinct, most, if not all, the sagacities of brutes may be reduced.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of fate;
All but the page prescrib'd, this present state;
From brutes what men, from men what spirits know;
Or who could suffer being here below? Pope's Ess. on Man.

TO BRUTE. v. a. [written ill for bruit.] To report.
This, once bruted through the army, filled them all with heaviness. Knolles's History of the Turks.

BRU'TENESS. n. f. [from brute.] Brutality; a word not now used.
Thou dotard vile,
That with thy bruteness shend'st thy comely age. Fairy Q.

TO BRU'TIFY. v. a. [from brute.] To make a man a brute.
O thou falacious woman! am I then brutified? Ay; feel it here; I sprout, I bud, I blossom, I am ripe horn mad.

BRU'TISH. adj. [from brute.]

1. Bestial; resembling a beast.
Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monstrous shapes and forceries abus'd Fanatick Egypt, and her priests, to seek Their wand'ring gods disguis'd in brutish forms. Par. Lost.

2. Having the qualities of a brute; rough; savage; ferocious.
Brutes, and brutish men, are commonly more able to bear pain, than others. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra, b. ii. c. 6.

3. Gross; carnal.
For thou thyself hast been a libertine,
As sensual as the brutish sting itself. Shakesp. As you like it.
After he has slept himself into some use of himself, by much ado he staggers to his table again, and there acts over the same brutish scene. South.

4. Ignorant; untaught; uncivilized.
They were not so brutish, that they could be ignorant to call upon the name of God. Hooker, b. v. § 35.

BRU'TISHLY. adv. [from brutish.] In the manner of a brute;
of a savage and unnatural man.
I am not so diffident of myself, as brutishly to submit to any man's dictates. K. Charles.
For a man to found a confident practice upon a disputable principle, is brutishly to outrun his reason. South.

BRU'TISHNESS. n. f. [from brutish.] Brutality; savageness; insensibility.
All other courage, besides that, is not true valour, but bru- tishness. Sprat.

BRU'ONY. n. f. [bryonia, Lat.] A plant.
It has a climbing stalk, with spines; the leaves are like those of the vine; the flowers consist of one leaf, which is expanded at the top, and divided into five parts, and, in the female plants, succeeded by round berries, growing on footstalks; the flowers of the male plants have five apices in each, but are barren. The species are, 1. The common white bryony. 2. Smooth African bryony, with deep cut leaves, and yellow flowers, &c. The first sort grows upon dry banks, under hedges, in many parts of England; but may be cultivated in a garden for use, by sowing the berries in the spring of the year, in a dry poor soil. The roots of this plant have been formerly cut into a human shape, and carried about the country, and shewn as mandrakes. Mill.

BUB. n. f. [a cant word.] Strong malt liquor.
Or if it be his fate to meet
With folks who have more wealth than wit,
He loves cheap port, and double bub,
And settles in the humdrum club. Prior.

BU'BBLE. n. f. [bobbel, Dutch.]

1. A small bladder of water; a film of water filled with wind.
Bubbles are in the form of a hemisphere; air within, and a little skin of water without: and it seemeth somewhat strange, that the air should rise so swiftly, while it is in the water, and, when it cometh to the top, should be stayed by so weak a cover as that of the bubble is. Bacon's Natural History, N° 24.
The colours of bubbles, with which children play, are various, and change their situation variously, without any respect to confine or shadow. Newton's Opticks.

2. Any thing which wants solidity and firmness; any thing that is more specious than real.
The earl of Lincoln was induced to participate, not lightly upon the strength of the proceedings there, which was but a bubble, but upon letters from the lady Margaret. Bacon.
Then a foldier,
Seeking the bubble, reputation,
Even in the cannon's mouth. Shakesp. As you like it.
War, he sung, is toil and trouble,
Honour but an empty bubble,
Fighting still, and still destroying. Dryden.

3. A cheat; a false show.
The nation then too late will find,
Directors promises but wind,
South-sea at best a mighty bubble. Swift.
4. The person cheated.
Cease, dearest mother, cease to chide;
Gany's a cheat, and I'm a bubble;
Yet why this great excess of trouble. Prior:
He has been my bubble these twenty years, and, to my certain knowledge, understands no more of his own affairs, than a child in swaddling clothes. Arbuthnot's Hist. of J. Bull.
- To BU'BBLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To rise in bubbles.
Alas! a crimson river of warm blood,
Like to a bubbling fountain stirr'd with wind,
Doth rise and fall. Shakespeare. Titus Andronicus.
Adder's fork, and blindworm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owlet's wing:
For a charm of pow'rful trouble,
Like a hellbroth boil and bubble. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Still bubble on, and pour forth blood and tears. Dryden.
2. To run with a gentle noise.
For thee the bubbling springs appear'd to mourn,
And whispering pines made vows for thy return. Dryden.
The same spring suffers at some times a very manifest remission of its heat: at others, as manifest an increase of it; yea, sometimes to that excess, as to make it boil and bubble with extreme heat. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
Not bubbling fountains to the thirsty swain,
Not show'rs to larks, or sunshine to the bee,
Are half so charming as thy sight to me. Pope.
- To BU'BBLE. v. a. To cheat: a cant word.
He tells me, with great passion, that she has bubbled him out of his youth; and that she has drilled him on to five and fifty. Addison. Spectator, N° 89.
Charles Mather could not bubble a young beau better with a toy. Arbuthnot's Hist. of J. Bull.
- BU'BBLER. n. f. [from bubble.] A cheat.
What words can suffice to express, how infinitely I esteem you, above all the great ones in this part of the world; above all the Jews, jobbers, and bubblers. Digby to Pope.
- BU'BBY. n. f. A woman's breast.
Foh! say they, to see a handsome, brisk, genteel, young fellow, so much governed by a doating old woman; why don't you go and suck the bubby? Arbuthnot's John Bull.
- BU'BO. n. f. [Lat. from βουβων, the groin.] That part of the groin from the bending of the thigh to the scrotum; and therefore all tumours in that part are called buboes. Quincy.
I suppurated it after the manner of a bubo, opened it, and endeavoured detersion. Wise man's Surgery.
- BUBONOCE'LE. n. f. [Lat. from βουβων, the groin, and κόλον, a rupture.] A particular kind of rupture, when the intestines break down into the groin. Quincy.
When the intestine, or omentum, falls through the rings of the abdominal muscles into the groin, it is called hernia inguinalis, or, if into the scrotum, scrotalis: these two, though the first only is properly so called, are known by the name of bubonocoele. Sharp's Surgery.
- BUCANI'ERS. n. f. A cant word for the privateers, or pirates, of America.
- BUCCELLA'TION. n. f. [buccella, a mouthful, Lat.] In some chymical authours, signifies a dividing into large pieces. Harris.
- BUCK. n. f. [bauche, Germ. fuds, or lye.]
1. The liquor in which cloaths are washed.
Buck? I would I could wash myself of the buck: I warrant you, buck, and of the season too it shall appear. Shakespeare.
2. The cloaths washed in the liquor.
Of late, not able to travel with her furred pack, she washes bucks here at home. Shakespeare. Henry VI. p. ii.
- BUCK. n. f. [buoch, Welch; bock, Dutch; bouc, Fr.] The male of the fallow deer; the male of rabbits, and other animals.
Bucks, goats, and the like, are said to be tripping or saliant, that is, going or leaping. Peacham.
- To BUCK. v. a. [from the noun.] To wash clothes.
Here is a basket; he may creep in heré, and throw foul linen upon him, as if it were going to bucketing. Shakespeare.
- To BUCK. v. n. [from the noun.] To copulate as bucks and does.
The chief time of setting traps, is in their bucketing time. Mortimer.
- BU'CKBASKET. n. f. The basket in which cloaths are carried to the wash.
They conveyed me into a buckbasket; rammed me in with foul shirts, foul stockings, and greasy napkins. Shakespeare.
- BU'CKBEAN. n. f. [bocksboonen, Dutch.] A plant; a sort of trefoil.
The bitter nauseous plants, as centaury, buckbane, gentian, of which tea may be made, or wines by infusion. Floyer.
- BU'CKET. n. f. [baquet, Fr.]
1. The vessel in which water is drawn out of a well.
Now is this golden crown like a deep well,
That owes two buckets, filling one another;
The emptier ever dancing in the air,
The other down unseen, and full of water. Shakespeare. R. II.

- Is the sea ever likely to be evaporated by the sun, or to be emptied with buckets? Bentley.
2. The vessels in which water is carried, particularly to quench a fire.
Now streets grow throng'd, and, busy as by day;
Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire;
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play;
And some, more bold, mount ladders to the fire. Dryden.
The porringers, that in a row
Hung high, and made a glitt'ring show,
To a less noble substance chang'd,
Were now but leathern buckets rang'd. Swift.
- BUCKLE. n. f. [buccl, Welch, and the same in the Armorick; boucle, Fr.]
1. A link of metal, with a tongue or catch made to fasten one thing to another.
Fair lined slippers for the cold,
With buckles of the purest gold. Shakespeare:
The chlamys was a sort of short cloak tied with a buckle, commonly to the right shoulder. Arbuthnot on Coins.
Three seal-rings; which after, melted down,
Form'd a vast buckle for his widow's gown. Pope.
2. The state of the hair crisped and curled, by being kept long in the same state.
The greatest beau was dressed in a flaxen periwig; the wearer of it goes in his own hair at home, and lets his wig lie in buckle for a whole half year. Spectator, N° 129.
That live-long wig, which Gorgon's self might own,
Eternal buckle takes in Parian stone. Pope.
- To BU'CKLE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fasten with a buckle.
Like saphire, pearl, in rich embroidery,
Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knee. Shakespeare:
France, whose armour conscience buckl'd on,
Whom zeal and charity brought to the field. Shakespeare:
Thus, ever, when I buckle on my helmet,
Thy fears afflict thee. Philips.
When you carry your master's riding-coat, wrap your own in it, and buckle them up close with a strap. Swift.
2. To prepare to do any thing: the metaphor is taken from buckling on the armour.
The Saracen, this hearing, rose amain,
And catching up in haste his three square shield,
And shining helmet, soon him buckled to the field. Fairy 2.
3. To join in battle.
The Lord Gray, captain of the men at arms, was forbidden to charge, until the foot of the avantguard were buckled with them in front. Hayward.
4. To confine.
How brief the life of man
Runs his erring pilgrimage!
That the stretching of a span
Buckles in his sum of age. Shakespeare. As you like it.
- To BU'CKLE. v. n. [bucken, Germ.]
1. To bend; to bow.
As the wretch, whose fever-weaken'd joints,
Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life,
Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fire
Out of his keeper's arms. Shakespeare. Henry IV. p. ii.
Now a covetous old crafty knave,
At dead of night, shall raise his son, and cry,
Turn out, you rogue! how like a beast you lie;
Go buckle to the law. Dryden.
2. To buckle to. To apply to; to attend. See active, second sense.
This is to be done in children, by trying them, when they are by laziness unbent, or by avocation bent another way, and endeavouring to make them buckle to the thing proposed. Locke.
3. To buckle with. To engage with; to encounter.
For single combat, thou shalt buckle with me. Shakespeare.
Yet thou, they say, for marriage dost provide;
Is this an age to buckle with a bride? Dryden's Juv. sat. vi.
- BUCKLER. n. f. [buccler, Welch; bouclier, Fr.] A shield; a defensive weapon buckled on the arm.
He took my arms, and, while I forc'd my way,
Through troops of foes, which did our passage stay;
My buckler o'er my aged father cast,
Still fighting, still defending as I past. Dryden's Aurengzebe.
This medal compliments the emperour in the same sense as the old Romans did their dictator Fabius, when they called him the buckler of Rome. Addison on ancient Medals.
- To BU'CKLER. v. a. [from the noun.] To support; to defend.
Fear not, sweet wench, they shall not touch thee, Kate;
I'll buckler thee against a million. Shakespeare. Tam. the Shrew.
Can Oxford, that did ever fence the right,
Now buckler fallhood with a pedigree? Shakespeare. Henry VI.
- BU'CKLER-THORN. n. f. Christ's-thorn.
- BU'CKMAST. n. f. The fruit or mast of the beech tree.
- BU'CKRAM. n. f. [bougran, Fr.] A sort of strong linen cloth, stiffened with gum, used by taylors and staymakers.
I have peppered two of them; two, I am sure, I have paid, two rogues in buckram suits. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
- BU'CKRAMS. n. f. The same with wild garlick. See GARLICK.

Bu'CKSHORN PLANTAIN. n. f. [coronopus, Lat. from the form of the leaf.] A plant.

It agrees in flower and fruit with the plantain; but its leaves are deeply cut in on the edges; whereas the leaves of the plantain are either entire, or but slightly indented. The species are four; 1. Garden buckshorn plantain, or hartshorn, &c. The first species, though entitled a garden plant, yet is found wild upon most commons, and barren heaths; where, from the poorness of the soil, it appears to be very different from the garden kind, as being little more than a fourth part so large. This species was formerly cultivated in gardens as a salad herb, but, at present, is little regarded, and wholly disused. Miller.

Bu'CKTHORN. n. f. [rhamnus, Lat. supposed to be so called from bucc, Sax. the belly.]

It hath a funnel-shaped flower, consisting of one leaf, divided toward the top into four or five segments; out of the flower-cup rises the pointal, which becomes a soft roundish berry, very full of juice, inclosing four hard seeds. The species are, Common purging buckthorn. 2. Lesser purging buckthorn. 3. Buckthorn, with long spines, and a white bark of Montpellier. The first of these trees is very common in hedges; the berries of which are used in medicine, particularly for making a syrup, which was formerly in great use; though, of late, other sorts of berries have either been mixed with those of the buckthorn, or wholly substituted in their place; which mixture hath spoiled the syrup, and rendered it less esteemed. The buckthorn berries may be distinguished whether they are right or not, by opening them, and observing the number of seeds in each; for these have commonly four. The second sort is less common in England. Both these sorts may be propagated, by laying down their tender branches in autumn. The first sort will grow to the height of eighteen or twenty feet; the second sort seldom rises above eight feet high. They may also be propagated by seeds. Miller.

Bu'CKWHEAT. n. f. [buckweitz, Germ. fagopyrum, Lat.]

The flowers grow in a spike, or branched from the wings of the leaves; the cup of the flower is divided into five parts, and resembles the petals of a flower; the seeds are black, and three cornered. The species are, 1. Common upright buckwheat. 2. Common creeping buckwheat. The first is cultivated in England, and is a great improvement to dry barren lands. The second grows wild, and is seldom cultivated. Miller.

BUCOLICK. adj. [βουκολικα, from βουκολος, a cowherd.] Pastoral.

BUD. n. f. [bouton, Fr.] The first shoot of a plant; a gem.

Be as thou wast wont to be;

See as thou wast wont to see:

Dian's bud o'er Cupid's flower

Hath such force and blessed power. Shakesp. Midf. N. Dr.

Writers say, as the most forward bud

Is eaten by the canker ere it blow,

Even so by love the young and tender wit

Is turn'd to folly, blasting in the bud,

Losing his verdure even in the prime. Shakesp. T. G. of Ver.

When you the flow'rs for Chloe twine,

Why do you to her garland join,

The meanest bud that falls from mine?

} Prior.

Insects wound the tender buds, with a long hollow trunk, and deposit an egg in the hole, with a sharp corroding liquor, that causeth a swelling in the leaf, and closeth the orifice. Bentley.

To BUD. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To put forth young shoots, or gems.

Bud forth as a rose growing by the brook of the field.

Ecclus. xxxix. 13.

There the fruit, that was to be gathered from such a conflux, quickly budded out. Clarendon, b. ii.

Heav'n gave him all at once, then snatch'd away,

Ere mortals all his beauties could survey;

Just like the flow'r that buds and withers in a day. } Dryd.

Tho' lab'ring yokes on their own necks they fear'd,

And felt for budding horns on their smooth foreheads rear'd.

Dryden's Silenus.

2. To be in the bloom, or growing.

Young budding virgin, fair and fresh and sweet,

Whither away, or where is thy abode?

Shakesp.

To BUD. v. a. To inoculate; to graff by inserting a bud into the rind of another tree.

Of apricocks, the largest masculine is much improved by budding upon a peach stock. Temple.

To BUDGE. v. n. [bouger, Fr.] To stir; to move off the place: a low word.

All your prisoners

In the lime grove, which weatherfends your cell,

They cannot budge till your release. Shakesp. Tempest.

The mouse ne'er shun'd the cat, as they did budge

From rascals worse than they. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

I thought th' hadst scorn'd to budge

For fear.

Hudibras, cant. ii.

BUDGE. adj. [of uncertain etymology.] Surly; stiff; formal.

O foolishness of men! that lend their ears

To those budge doctors of the stoicks.

Milton.

BUDGE. n. f. The dressed skin or fur of lambs.

Diſt.

Bu'DGER. n. f. [from the verb.] One that moves or stirs from his place.

B U F

Let the first budger die the other's slave,

And the gods doom him after.

Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Bu'DGET. n. f. [bogette, Fr.]

1. A bag, such as may be easily carried.

If tinkers may have leave to live,

And bear the sowskin budget;

Then my account I well may give,

And in the stocks avouch it.

Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Sir Robert Clifford, in whose bosom, or budget, most of Perkin's secrets were laid up, was come into England. Bacon.

His budget with corruptions cramm'd,

The contributions of the damn'd.

Swift.

2. It is used for a store, or stock.

It was nature, in fine, that brought off the cat, when the fox's whole budget of inventions failed him. L'Estrange.

BUFF. n. f. [from buffalo.]

1. A sort of leather prepared from the skin of the buffalo; used for waist belts, pouches, &c.

A ropy chain of rheums, a visage rough,

Deform'd, unfeatur'd, and a skin of buff. Dryden's Juvenal.

2. The skins of elks and oxen dressed in oil, and prepared after the same manner as that of the buffalo.

3. A military coat made of thick leather, so that a blow cannot easily pierce it.

A fiend, a fury, pitiless and rough,

A wolf, nay worse, a fellow all in buff.

Shakesp.

To BUFF. v. a. [buffe, Fr.] To strike: it is a word not in use.

There was a shock,

To have buff'd out the blood

From ought but a block.

Ben. Johnson's Underwoods.

BU'FFALO. n. f. [Ital.] A kind of wild ox.

Become th' unworthy browbe

Of buffaloes, salt goats, and hungry cows. Dryden's Virgil.

BU'FFET. n. f. [buffetto, Ital.] A blow with the fist; a box on the ear.

O, I could divide myself, and go to buffets, for moving such a dish of skimmed milk with so honourable an action. Shakesp.

A man that fortune's buffets and rewards

Hast ta'en with equal thanks.

Shakesp. Hamlet.

Go, baffl'd coward, lest I run upon thee,

And with one buffet lay thy structure low. Milton's Agonist.

Round his hollow temples, and his ears,

His buckler beats; the son of Neptune, stunn'd

With these repeated buffets, quits the ground.

Dryden.

BUFFE'T. n. f. [buffette, Fr.] A kind of cupboard; or set of shelves, where plate is set out to shew, in a room of entertainment.

The rich buffet well-colour'd serpents grace,

And gaping Triton's spew to wash your face.

Pope.

To BU'FFET. v. n. [from the noun.] To strike with the hand; to box; to beat.

Why, woman, your husband is in his old lunes again; he so buffets himself on the forehead, crying, peer out, peer out! that any madness I ever yet beheld, seemed but tameness. Shakesp.

Our ears are cudgell'd; not a word of his

But buffets better than a fist of France.

Shakesp. K. John.

The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it

With lusty sinews; throwing it aside. Shakesp. Jul. Caesar.

Instantly I plung'd into the sea,

And, buffeting the billows to her rescue,

Redeem'd her life with half the loss of mine.

Otway.

To BU'FFET. v. n. To play a boxing-match.

If I might buffet for my love, I could lay on like a butcher.

Shakesp. Henry V.

BU'FFETER. n. f. [from buffet.] A boxer; one that buffets.

BU'FFLE. n. f. [beuffle, Fr.] The same with buffalo; a wild ox.

To BU'FFLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To puzzle; to be at a loss.

This was the utter ruin of that poor, angry, buffling, well-meaning mortal, Pistorides, who lies equally under the contempt of both parties. Swift.

BU'FFLEHEADED. adj. [from buffle and head.] A man with a large head, like a buffalo; dull; stupid; foolish.

BUFFO'ON. n. f. [buffon, Fr.]

1. A man whose profession is to make sport, by low jests and antick postures; a jackpudding.

No prince would think himself greatly honoured, to have his proclamation canvassed on a publick stage, and become the sport of buffoons. Watts.

2. A man that practises indecent raillery.

It is the nature of drolls and buffoons, to be insolent to those that will bear it, and slavish to others. L'Estrange.

The bold buffoon, whene'er they trade the green,

Their motion mimicks, but with geſt obscene.

Garth.

BUFFO'ONERY. n. f. [from buffoon.]

1. The practice or art of a buffoon.

Courage, in an ill-bred man, has the air, and escapes not the opinion of brutality; learning becomes pedantry, and wit buffoonery. Lock on Education.

2. Low jests; ridiculous pranks; scurrile mirth. Dryden places the accent, improperly, on the first syllable.

Where publick ministers encourage buffoonery, it is no wonder der if buffoons fet up for publick minifters. L'Eſtrange.

 And whiſt it laſts, let buffoonery ſucceed,
 To make us laugh; for never was more need. Dryden.
BUG. n. f. A ſtinking inſect bred in old houſhold ſtuff. In the following paſſage, wings are erroneouſly aſcribed to it.
 Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
 This painted child of dirt, which ſtinks and ſtings. Pope.
BUG. n. f. [It is derived by ſome from big, by others from BU'GBEAR. } pug; bug, in Welch, has the ſame meaning.] A frightful object; a walking ſpectre, imagined to be ſeen; generally now uſed for a falſe terrour to frighten babes.
 Each trembling leaf and whiſtling wind they hear,
 As ghaffly bug their hair on end does rear,
 Yet both do ſtrive their fearfulneſs to feign. Fairy Q. b. ii.
 Sir, ſpare your threats;
 The bug which you would fright me with, I ſeek. Shakeſp.
 Haſt not ſlept to-night? would he not, naughty man, let it ſleep? a bugbear take him. Shakeſp. Troilus and Creſſida.
 We have a horror for uncouth monſters; but, upon cuſtom and experience, all theſe lugs grow familiar and eaſy to us.
L'Eſtrange.
 Such bugbear thoughts, once got into the tender minds of children, ſink deep, ſo as not eaſily, if ever, to be got out again. Locke.
 To the world, no bugbear is ſo great,
 As want of figure, and a ſmall eſtate. Pope.
BU'GGINESS. n. f. [from buggy.] Being infected with bugs.
BUGGY. adj. [from bug.] Abounding with bugs.
BUGLE. n. f. [from bugen, Sax. to bend, Skinner; from BU'GLEHORN. } bucala, Lat. a heifer, Junius; from bugle, the bonafus. Lye.] A hunting horn.
 Then took that ſquire a horny bugle ſmall,
 Which hung adown his ſide in twiſted gold,
 And taſſels gay. Fairy Queen, b. i. c. viii. ſtan. 3.
 That I will have a recheate winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an inviſible baldrick, all women ſhall pardon me.
Shakeſp. Much ado about Nothing.
 He gave his buglehorn a blaſt,
 That through the woodland echo'd far and wide. Tickell.
BU'GLE. n. f. A ſhining bead of black glaſs.
Bugle bracelets, necklace amber,
 Perfume for a lady's chamber. Shakeſp. Winter's Tale.
 'Tis not your inky brows, your black ſilk hair,
 Your bugle eyeballs, nor your cheek of cream,
 That can entame my ſpirits to your worſhip. Shakeſp.
BU'GLE. n. f. [from bugula, Lat.] A plant.
 It hath a flower conſiſting of one leaf, divided into three parts; out of the flower-cup ariſes the pointal, fixed like a nail, attended by four embryos, which become ſo many oblong ſeeds, ſhut up in a huſk; the flowers are placed in whorles round the ſtalk. The ſpecies are, 1. Common bugle. 2. The greateſt bugle of the Alps. 3. Hairy eaſtern bugle, with an inverted blue flower, ſpotted with white. 4. Eaſtern bugle, with a purpliſh violet coloured flower, &c. The firſt and ſecond forts grow wild in moiſt woods and meadows, and continue in flower from May to September. The bugle is greatly eſteemed as a vulnerary herb, and is uſed both externally and internally.
 They are very hardy plants, and propagate greatly by their trailing ſtalks. Miller.
BU'GLE. n. f. A ſort of wild ox. Philips's World of Words.
BU'GLOSS. [from bugloſſum, Lat.] The herb ox-tongue.
 The flowers are ſmall and tubulous, divided at the top into five obtuſe ſegments, and are expanded in a round form; the ſeeds are like the head of a viper. They may be cultivated by ſowing their ſeeds in the ſpring; its flowers are uſed in medicinal cordials. Miller.
 To BUILD. v. a. preter. I built, I have built. [bilden, Dutch.]
 1. To raiſe from the ground; to make a fabrick, or an edifice.
 Thus ſaith the Lord, thou ſhalt not build me an houſe to dwell in. Hooker, b. ii. § 6.
 When uſurers tell their gold in the field,
 And whores and bawds do churches build. Shakeſp.
 When the head-dreſs was built up in a couple of cones and ſpires, which ſtood ſo exceſſively high on the ſide of the head, that a woman, who was but a pigmy without her head-dreſs, appeared like a colofſus upon putting it on. Spectator, N° 98.
 To build, to plant, whatever you intend,
 To rear the column, or the arch to bend. Pope.
 2. To raiſe any thing on a ſupport or foundation.
 Love built on beauty, ſoon as beauty, dies;
 Choofe this face, chang'd by no deformities. Donne.
 I would endeavour to deſtroy thoſe curious, but groundleſs ſtructures, that men have built up of opinions alone. Boyle.
 To BUILD. v. n. To depend on; to reſt on.
 By a man's authority, we here underſtand the force which his word hath for the aſſurance of another's mind, that buildeth upon it. Hooker.
 Some build rather upon the abuſing of others, and putting tricks upon them, than upon ſoundneſs of their own proceedings. Bacon's Eſſays, N° 23.
 Even thoſe who had not taſted of your favours, yet built ſo much on the fame of your beneficence, that they bemoaned the loſs of their expectations. Dryden's Fables, Dedication.

 This is certainly a much ſurer way, than to build on the interpretations of an authour, who does not conſider how the ancients uſed to think. Addiſon on ancient Medals.
BUI'LDER. n. f. [from build.] He that builds; an architect.
 But fore-accounting oft makes builders miſs;
 They found, they felt, they had no leaſe of bliſs. Sidney.
 When they, which had ſeen the beauty of the firſt temple built by Solomon, beheld how far it excelled the ſecond, which had not builders of like abilities, the tears of their grieved eyes the prophets endeavour'd, with comforts, to wipe away.
Hooker, b. v. § 14.
 Mark'd out for ſuch an uſe, as if 'twere meant
 T' invite the builder, and his choice prevent. Denham.
 Her wings with lengthen'd honour let her ſpread,
 And, by her greatneſs, ſhew her builder's fame. Prior.
BUI'LDING. n. f. [from build.] A fabrick; an edifice.
 Thy ſumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
 Have coſt a maſs of publick treaſury. Shakeſp. Henry VI.
 View not this ſpire by meaſure giv'n
 To buildings rais'd by common hands:
 That fabrick riſes high as heav'n,
 Whoſe baſis on devotion ſtands. Prior.
 Among the great variety of ancient coins which I ſaw at Rome, I could not but take particular notice of ſuch as relate to any of the buildings or ſtatues that are ſtill extant. Addiſon.
BUILT. n. f. [from build.] The form; the ſtructure.
 As is the built, ſo different is the fight;
 Their mounting ſhot is on our ſails deſign'd;
 Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
 And through the yielding planks a paſſage find. Dryden.
 There is hardly any country, which has ſo little ſhipping as Ireland; the reaſon muſt be, the ſcarcity of timber proper for this built. Temple.
BULB. n. f. [bulbus, Lat.] A round body, or root.
 Take up your early autumnal tulips, and bulbs, if you will remove them. Evelyn's Kalend.
 If we conſider the bulb, or ball of the eye, the exterior membrane, or coat thereof, is made thick, tough, or ſtrong, that it is a very hard matter to make a rupture in it. Ray.
BULBA'CEOUS. adj. [bulbaceus, Lat.] The ſame with bulbous. D.
BU'LEOUS. adj. [from bulb.] Containing bulbs; conſiſting of bulbs.
 There are of roots, bulbous roots, fibrous roots, and hirsute roots. And I take it, in the bulbous, the ſap haſteneth moſt to the air and ſun. Bacon's Nat. Hiſtory, N° 616.
 Set up your traps for vermin, eſpecially amongſt your bulbous roots. Evelyn's Kalendar.
 There leaves, after they are ſwelled out, like a bulbous root, to make the bottle, bend inward, or come again cloſe to the ſtalk. Ray on the Creation.
 The beginning of the internal jugulars have a bulbous cavity.
Ray on the Creation.
 To BULGE. v. n. [It was originally written bilge; bilge was the lower part of the ſhip, where it ſwelled out; from bilg, Sax. a bladder.]
 1. To take in water; to founde.
 Thrice round the ſhip was toſt,
 Then bulg'd at once, and in the deep was loſt. Dryden.
 2. To jut out.
 The ſide, or part of the ſide of a wall, or any timber that bulges from its bottom or foundation, is ſaid to batter, or hang over the foundation. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.
BU'LIMY. n. f. [βελιμία, from βέσ, an ox, and λιμός, hunger.]
 An enormous appetite, attended with fainting, and coldneſs of the extremities. Diſt.
BULK. n. f. [bulke, Dutch, the breaſt, or largeſt part of a man.]
 1. Magnitude; ſize; quantity.
 Againſt theſe forces there were prepared near one hundred ſhips; not ſo great of bulk indeed, but of a more nimble motion, and more ſerviceable. Bacon's War with Spain.
 The Spaniards and Portugueſe have ſhips of great bulk, but fitter for the merchant than the man of war; for burden than for battle. Raleigh's Eſſays.
 Though an animal arrives at its full growth, at a certain age, perhaps it never comes to its full bulk till the laſt period of life. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
 2. Greatneſs; largeneſs.
 Things, or objects, cannot enter into the mind, as they ſubſiſt in themſelves, and, by their own natural bulk, paſs into the apprehenſion; but they are taken in by their ideas. South.
 3. The groſs; the majority.
 Thoſe very points, in which theſe wiſe men diſagreed from the bulk of the people, are points in which they agreed with the received doctrines of our nature. Addiſon. Freeholder, N° 51.
 Change in property, through the bulk of a nation, makes ſlow marches, and its due power always attends it. Swift.
 The bulk of the debt muſt be leſſened gradually. Swift.
 4. Main fabrick.
 He rais'd a ſigh, ſo piteous and profound,
 That it did ſeem to ſhatter all his bulk,
 And end his being. Shakeſp. King Lear
 5. The

BULL

5. The main part of a ship's cargo; as, to break bulk, is to open the cargo.
- BULK. n. f. [from bielcke, Dan. a beam.] A part of a building jutting out.
- Here stand behind this bulk. Straight will he come:
Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home. Shakesp. Othello.
The keeper coming up, found Jack with no life in him; he took down the body, and laid it on a bulk, and brought out the rope to the company. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.
- BULKHEAD. n. f. A partition made across a ship, with boards, whereby one part is divided from another. Harris.
- BULKINESS. n. f. [from bulky.] Greatness of stature, or size.
Wheat, or any other grain, cannot serve instead of money, because of its bulkiness, and too quick change of its quantity. Locke.
- BULKY. adj. [from bulk.] Of great size or stature.
Latreus, the bulkiest of the double race,
Whom the spoil'd arms of slain Hæfusus grace. Dryden.
Huge Telephus, a formidable page,
Cries vengeance; and Orestes' bulky rage,
Unsatisfy'd with margins closely writ,
Foams o'er the covers. Dryden's Juvenal, sat. i.
The manner of sea engagements, which was to bore and sink the enemy's ships with the rostra, gave bulky and high ships a great advantage. Arbuthnot on Coins.
- BULL. n. f. [bulle, Dutch.]
- The male of black cattle; the male to a cow.
A proper gentlewoman, Sir, and a kinswoman of my master's.—Even such kin as the parish heifers are to the town bull.
Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.
Bulls are more crisp upon the forehead than cows. Bacon.
Best age to go to bull, or calve, we hold,
Begins at four, and ends at ten years old. May's Virgil.
The nobler herds,
Where round the lordly bull, in rural ease,
They ruminating lie. Thomson's Summer, l. 920.
  - In the scriptural sense, an enemy powerful, fierce, and violent.
Many bulls have compassed me: strong bulls of Bashan have beset me round. Psalms xxii. 12.
  - One of the twelve signs of the zodiack.
At last from Aries rolls the bounteous sun,
And the bright Bull receives him. Thomson's Spring.
  - A letter published by the pope.
A bull is letters called apostolick by the canonists, strengthened with a leaden seal, and containing in them the decrees and commandments of the pope or bishop of Rome. Ayliffe.
There was another sort of ornament wore by the young nobility, called bullæ; round, or of the figure of a heart, hung about their necks like diamond crosses. Those bullæ came afterwards to be hung to the diplomas of the emperours and popes, from whence they had the name of bulls. Arbuthnot.
It was not till after a fresh bull of Leo's had declared how inflexible the court of Rome was in the point of abuses. Atterb.
5. A blunder; a contradiction.
I confess it is what the English call a bull, in the expression, though the sense be manifest enough. Pope's Letters.
- BULL, in composition, generally notes the large size of any thing, as bull-head, bulrush, bull-trout; and is therefore only an inclusive particle, without much reference to its original signification.
- BULL-BAITING. n. f. [from bull and bait.] The sport of baiting bulls with doogs.
What am I the wiser for knowing that Trajan was in the fifth year of his tribuneship, when he entertained the people with a horse-race or bull-baiting? Addison on ancient Medals.
- BULL-BEEF. n. f. [from bull and beef.] Coarse beef; the flesh of bulls.
They want their porridge and their fat bull-beeves. Shakesp.
- BULL-BEGGAR. n. f. [This word probably came from the influence of those who begged, or raised money by the pope's bull.] Something terrible; something to fright children with.
These fulminations from the Vatican were turned into ridicule; and, as they were called bull-beggars, they were used as words of scorn and contempt. Ayliffe's Parergon.
- BULL-CALF. n. f. [from bull and calf.] A he-calf; used for a stupid fellow: a term of reproach.
And, Falstaff, you carried your guts away as nimbly, and roared for mercy, and still ran and roared, as ever I heard bull-calf. Shakesp. Henry IV.
- BULL-DOG. n. f. [from bull and dog.] A dog of a particular form, remarkable for his courage. He is used in baiting the bull; and this species is so peculiar to Britain, that they are said to degenerate when they are carried to other countries.
All the harmless part of him is no more than that of a bull-dog; they are tame no longer than they are not offended. Addison. Spectator, N° 438.
- BULL-FINCH. n. f. A small bird, that has neither song nor whistle of its own, yet is very apt to learn, if taught by the mouth.
The blackbird whistles from the thorny brake,
The mellow bull-finch answers from the groves. Thomson.
- BULL-FLY. } n. f. An insect. Philips's World of Words.
BULL-BEE. }

BULL

- BULL-HEAD. n. f. [from bull and head.]
- A stupid fellow; a blockhead.
  - The name of a fish.
The miller's thumb, or bull-head, is a fish of no pleasing shape; it has a head big and flat, much greater than suitable to its body; a mouth very wide, and usually gaping; he is without teeth, but his lips are very rough, much like a file; he hath two fins near to his gills, which are roundish or crested; two fins under his belly, two on the back, one below the vent, and the fin of his tail is round. Nature hath painted the body of this fish with whitish, blackish, brownish spots. They are usually full of spawn all the summer, which swells their vents in the form of a dug. The bull-head begins to spawn in April; in winter we know no more what becomes of them than of eels or swallows. Walton's Angler.
  - A little black water vermin. Philips's World of Words.
- BULL-TROUT. n. f. A kind of trout.
There is, in Northumberland, a trout called a bull-trout, of a much greater length and bigness than any in these southern parts. Walton's Angler.
- BULL-WEED. n. f. The same with knapweed; which see.
- BULL-WORT, or BISHOPS-WEED. n. f. [ammi, Lat.] An umbelliferous plant with small striated seeds; the petals of the flowers are unequal, and shaped like a heart. Its seeds are used in medicine. Milcr.
- BULLACE. n. f. A wild four plum. See PLUM.
In October, and the beginning of November, come services, medlars, bullaces; roses cut or removed, to come late; holly-oaks, and such like. Bacon's Essays, N° 47.
- BULLET. n. f. [boulet, Fr.] A round ball of metal, usually shot out of guns.
As when the devilish ironengine wrought
In deepest hell, and fram'd by furies skill,
With windy nitre and quick sulphur fraught,
And ramm'd with bullet round, ordain'd to kill. Fairy Q. b. i.
Giaffer, their leader, desperately fighting amongst the foremost of the janizaries, was at once shot with two bullets, and slain. Knolles's History of the Turks.
And as the built, so different is the fight;
Their mounting shot is on our sails design'd:
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryden.
- BULLION. n. f. [billon, Fr.] Gold or silver in the lump; unwrought; uncoined.
The balance of trade must of necessity be returned in coin or bullion. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
A second multitude,
With wond'rous art, found out the massy ore,
Severing each kind, and scumm'd the bullion dross. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Bullion is silver, whose workmanship has no value. And thus foreign coin hath no value here for its stamp, and our coin is bullion in foreign dominions. Locke.
In every vessel there is stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure bullion. Addison on the State of the War.
- BULLI'TION. n. f. [from bullio, Lat.] The act or state of boiling.
There is to be observed in these dissolutions, which will not easily incorporate, what the effects are, as the bullition; the precipitation to the bottom; the ejaculation towards the top; the suspension in the midst; and the like. Bacon's Physical Rem.
- BULLOCK. n. f. [from bull.] A young bull.
Why, that's spoken like an honest drover: so they sell bullocks. Shakesp. Much ado about Nothing.
Some drive the herds; here the fierce bullock scorns
Th' appointed way, and runs with threat'ning horns. Cowley.
Until the transportation of cattle into England was prohibited, the quickest trade of ready money here was driven by the sale of young bullocks. Temple.
- BULLY. n. f. [Skinner derives this word from bully, as a corruption in the pronunciation; which is very probably right: or from bulky, or bull-eyed; which are less probable. May it not come from bull, the pope's letter, implying the insolence of those who came invested with authority from the papal court?] A noisy, blustering, quarrelling fellow: it is generally taken for a man that has only the appearance of courage.
Mine host of the garter.—What says my bully rock? Speak scholarly and wisely. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
All on a sudden the doors flew open, and in comes a crew of roaring bullies, with their wenches, their dogs, and their bottles. L'Estrange's Fables.
'Tis so ridiculous, but so true withal,
A bully cannot sleep without a brawl. Dryden's Juv. sat. iii.
A scolding hero is, at the worst, a more tolerable character than a bully in petticoats. Addison's Freeholder, N° 38.
The little man is a bully in his nature, but, when he grows choleric, I confine him till his wrath is over. Addison. Spect.
- TO BULLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To overbear with noise or menaces.
Prentices, parish clerks, and hectors meet,
He that is drunk, or bully'd, pays the treat. King's Cookery.
- TO BULLY. v. n. To be noisy and quarrelsome.
- BULLRUSH. n. f. [from bul and rush.] A large rush, such as grows grows in rivers, without knots; though Dryden has given it the epithet knotty, confounding it, probably, with the reed.

To make fine cages for the nightingale,
And baskets of bulrushes, was my wont. Spenser.
All my praises are as but a bulrush cast upon a stream; they are born up by the strength of the current. Dryden.

The edges were with bending osiers crown'd;
The knotty bulrush next in order stood,
And all within of reeds a trembling wood. Dryden's Fables.
BULWARK. n. f. [bolwercke, Dutch; probably only from its strength and largeness.]

1. A fortification; a citadel.
But him the squire made quickly to retreat,
Encountering fierce with single sword in hand,
And 'twixt him and his lord did like a bulwark stand.
Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. viii. stanza. 12.

Who oft repair
Their earthen bulwarks 'gainst the ocean flood. Fairfax, b. i.
Taking away needless bulwarks, divers were demolished upon the sea coasts. Hayward.

We have bulwarks round us;
Within our walls are troops enur'd to toil. Addison's Cato.
Our naval strength is a general bulwark to the British nation.
Addison's Freeholder, N° 42.

2. A security.
Some making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored
the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Shakesp.
To BULWARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To fortify; to strengthen with bulwarks.

And yet no bulwark'd town, or distant coast,
Preserves the beauteous youth from being seen. Addison.
BUM. n. f. [bomme, Dutch.]

1. The buttocks; the part on which we sit.
The wisest aunt telling the saddest tale,
Sometime for threefoot stool mistaketh me,
Then slip I from her bum, down topples she. Shakesp.
This said, he gently rais'd the knight,
And set him on his bum upright. Hudibras.
From dusty shops neglected authours come,
Martyrs of pies, and relics of the bum. Dryden's Mackst.
The learned Sydenham does not doubt,
But profound thought will bring the gout;
And that with bum on couch we lie,
Because our reason's soar'd too high. W—n.

2. It is used, in composition, for any thing mean or low, as bumbailiff.
BUMBAILIFF. n. f. [from bum and bailiff.] A bailiff of the meanest kind; one that is employed in arrests.

Go, Sir Andrew, scout me for him at the corner of the orchard, like a bumbailiff. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

BUMBARD. n. f. [wrong written for bombard; which see.] A great gun; a great barrel.
Yond same black cloud, yond huge one looks Like a foul bumbard, that would shed his liquor. Shakesp. Tempest.

BU'MBAST. n. f. [falsely written for bombast; the etymology of which I am now very doubtful of; bombast and bombastine being mentioned, with great probability, by Junius, as coming from boom, a tree, and sein, filk; the filk or cotton of a tree.]

1. A cloth made by sewing one stuff upon another; patchwork.
The usual bumbast of black bits sewed into ermine, our English women are made to think very fine. Grew.

2. Linen stuffed with cotton; stuffing.
We have received your letters full of love,
And, in our maiden council, rated them
As courtship, pleasant jest, and courtesy,
As bumbast, and as lining to the time. Shakesp.

BUMP. n. f. [perhaps from bum, as being prominent.] A swelling; a protuberance.

It had upon its brow a bump as big as a young cockrel's stone;
a perilous knock, and it cried bitterly. Shakesp. Rom. and Jul.

Not though his teeth are beaten out, his eyes
Hang by a string, in bumps his forehead rise. Dryden's Juv.

To BUMP. v. a. [from bombus, Lat.] To make a loud noise, or bomb. [See BOMB.] It is applied, I think, only to the bittern.

Then to the water's brink she laid her head,
And as a bittour bumps within a reed,
To thee alone, O lake, she said—— Dryden.

BU'MPER. n. f. [from bump.] A cup filled till the liquor swells over the brims.

Places his delight
All day in plying bumpers, and at night
Reels to the bawds. Dryden's Juv. sat. viii.

BU'MPKIN. n. f. [This word is of uncertain etymology; Henshaw derives it from pumpkin, a kind of worthless gourd, or melon. This seems harsh. Bump is used amongst us for a knob, or lump; may not bumpkin be much the same with clodpate, loggerhead, block, and blockhead.] An awkward heavy rus-tick; a country lout.

The poor bumpkin, that had never seen nor heard of such delights before, blessed herself at the change of her condition.

L'Estrange's Fables.

A heavy bumpkin, taught with daily care;
Can never dance three steps with a becoming air. Dryden.

In his white cloak the magistrate appears,
The country bumpkin the same liv'ry wears. Dryden.

It was a favour to admit them to breeding; they might be ignorant bumpkins and clowns, if they pleased. Locke.

BUMPKINLY. adj. [from bumpkin.] Having the manners or appearance of a clown; clownish.

He is a simple, blundering, and yet conceited fellow, who, aiming at description, and the rustick wonderful, gives an air of bumpkinly romance to all he tells. Clarissa.

BUNCH. n. f. [bunker, Danish, the crags of the mountains.]

1. A hard lump; a knob.
They will carry their treasures upon the bunches of camels, to a people that shall not profit them. Josh. xxx. 6.

He felt the ground, which he had wont to find even and soft, to be grown hard with little round balls or bunches, like hard boiled eggs. Boyle.

2. A cluster; many of the same kind growing together.
Vines, with clust'ring bunches growing. Shakesp. Tempest.

Titian said, that he knew no better rule for the distribution of the lights and shadows, than his observations drawn from a bunch of grapes. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

For thee, large bunches load the bending vine,
And the last blessings of the year are thine. Dryden.

3. A number of things tied together.
And on his arms a bunch of keys he bore. Fairy Q. b. i.

All? I know not what ye call all; but if I fought not with fifty of them, I am a bunch of radish. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. i.

Ancient Janus, with his double face,
And bunch of keys, the porter of the place. Dryden.

The mother's bunch of keys, or any thing they cannot hurt themselves with, serves to divert little children. Locke.

4. Any thing bound into a knot.
Upon the top of all his lofty crest;
A bunch of hairs discolour'd diversly,
With sprinkled pearl and gold full richly drest. Fairy Q. b. i.

To BUNCH. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell out in a bunch;
to grow out in protuberances.

It has the resemblance of a large champignon before it is opened, bunching out into a large round knob at one end.

Woodward on Fossils.

BUNCHBACKED. adj. [from bunch and back.] Having bunches on the back.

The day shall come, that thou shalt wish for me,
To help thee curse this pois'nous bunchback'd toad. Shakesp.

BU'NCHINESS. n. f. [from bunchy.] The quality of being bunchy, or growing in bunches.

BU'NCHY. adj. [from bunch.] Growing into bunches; knotty.
He is more especially distinguished from other birds, by his bunchy tail, and the shortness of his legs. Grew's Museum.

BUNDLE. n. f. [byñble, Sax. from byñb.]

1. A number of things bound together.
As to the bundles of petitions in parliament, they were, for the most part, petitions of private persons. Hale's Law of Engl.

Try, lads, can you this bundle break;
Then bids the youngest of the six
Take up a well-bound heap of sticks. Swift.

In the north, they bind them up in small bundles, and make small ricks of them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. A roll; any thing rolled up cylindrically.
She carried a great bundle of Flanders lace under her arm;
but finding herself overladen, she dropped the good man, and brought away the bundle. Spectator, N° 499.

To BUNDLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To tie in a bundle; to tie together; with up.

We ought to put things together, as well as we can, doctrinæ causâ; but, after all, several things will not be bundled up together, under our terms and ways of speaking. Locke.

See how the double nation lies,
Like a rich coat with skirts of frize;
As if a man, in making posies,
Should bundle thistles up with roses. Swift.

BUNG. n. f. [bing, Welch.] A stopple for a barrel.
After three nights are expired, the next morning pull out the bung stick, or plug. Mortimer.

To BUNG. v. a. [from the noun.] To stop; to close up.

BU'NGHOLE. n. f. [from bung and hole.] The hole at which the barrel is filled, and which is afterward stopped up.

Why may not imagination trace the noble dust of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bunghole. Shakesp.

To BUNGLE. v. n. [See BUNGLER.] To perform clumsily.

When men want light,
They make but bungling work. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

Letters to me are not seldom opened, and then sealed in a bungling manner before they come to my hands. Swift to Pope.

To BU'NGLE. v. a. To botch; to manage clumsily; to conduct awkwardly.

Other devils, that suggest by-treasons
Do botch and bungle up damnation,
With patches, colours, and with forms being fetcht
From glitt'ring semblances of piety. Shakesp. Henry V.

BUR

They make lame mischief, though they mean it well :

Their int'rest is not finely drawn, and hid,

But seams are coarsely bungled up, and seen. Dryden's D. Seb.

BU'NGLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A botch; an awkwardness; an inaccuracy; a clumsy performance.

Errours and bungles are committed, when the matter is inapt or contumacious. Ray on the Creation.

BU'NGLER. n. f. [bwngler, Welch; q. bôn y glêr, i. e. the last or lowest of the profession. Davies.] A bad workman; a clumsy performer; a man without skill.

Painters, at the first, were such bunglers, and so rude, that, when they drew a cow or a hog, they were fain to write over the head what it was; otherwise the beholder knew not what to make of it. Peacham on Drawing.

Hard features every bungler can command;

To draw true beauty shews a master's hand. Dryden.

A bungler thus, who scarce the nail can hit,

With driving wrong will make the pannel split. Swift.

BU'NGLINGLY. adv. [from bungling.] Clumsily; awkwardly.

To denominate them monsters, they must have had some system of parts, compounded of solids and fluids, that executed, though but bunglingly, their peculiar functions. Bentley.

BUNN. n. f. [bunelo, Span.] A kind of sweet bread.

Thy songs are sweeter to mine ear,

Than to the thirsty cattle rivers clear;

Or winter porridge to the lab'ring youth,

Or bunns and fugar to the damsel's tooth. Gay's Pastorals.

BUNT. n. f. [corrupted, as Skinner thinks, from bent.] A swelling part; an increasing cavity.

The Wear is a frith, reaching fopewise through the ooze, from the land to low water mark, and having in it a bunt or cod, with an eye-hook, where the fish entering, upon the coming back with the ebb, are stopped from issuing out again, forsaken by the water, and left dry on the ooze. Carew.

To BUNT. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell out, as the sail bunts out.

BU'NTER. n. f. A cant word for a woman who picks up rags about the street; and used, by way of contempt, for any low vulgar woman.

BU'NTING. n. f. The name of a bird.

Then my dial goes not true; I took this lark for a bunting.

Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

BUOY. n. f. [bouë, or boye, Fr. boya, Span.] A piece of cork or wood floating on the water, tied to a weight at the bottom.

The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,

Appear like mice; and yond tall anchoring bark

Diminish'd to her cock; her cock a buoy,

Almost too small for fight. Shakesp. King Lear.

Like buoys, that never sink into the flood,

On learning's surface we but lie and nod. Pope's Dunciad.

To BUOY. v. a. [from the noun. The u is mute in both.] To keep afloat; to bear up by specifick lightness.

All art is used to sink episcopacy, and launch presbytery in England; which was lately buoyed up in Scotland, by the like artifice of a covenant. K. Charles.

The water which rises out of the abyfs, for the supply of springs and rivers, would not have stopped at the surface of the earth, but marched directly up into the atmosphere, wherever there was heat enough in the air to continue its ascent, and buoy it up. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

To BUOY. v. n. To float.

Rising merit will buoy up at last. Pope's Essay on Crit.

BUO'YANCY. n. f. [from buoyant.] The quality of floating.

All the winged tribes owe their flight and buoyancy to it.

Derham's Physico-Theology.

BUO'YANT. adj. [from buoy.] Floating; light; that which will not sink.

I swom with the tide, and the water under me was buoyant.

Dryden.

His once so vivid nerves,

So full of buoyant spirit, now no more

Inspire the course.

BUR, BOUR, BOR, come from the Sax. bun, an inner-chamber, or place of shade and retirement. Gibson's Camden.

BUR. n. f. [bourre, Fr. is down; the bur being filled with a soft tomentum, or down.] A rough head of a plant, which sticks to the hair or cloaths.

Nothing teems,

But hateful docks, rough thistles, keckfies, burs,

Losing both beauty and utility.

Shakesp. Henry V.

Hang off, thou cat, thou bur; vile thing, let loose;

Or I will shake thee from me like a serpent.

Shakesp.

Dependents and suitors are always the burs, and sometimes the briars of favourites. Wotton.

Whither betake her

From the chill dew, amongst rude burs and thistles. Milton.

And where the vales with violets once were crown'd,

Now knotty burs and thorns disgrace the ground. Dryden.

A fellow stuck like a bur, that there was no shaking him off.

Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.

BU'RBOT. n. f. A fish full of prickles.

Dict.

BU'RDELAIS. n. f. A sort of grape. See VINE.

BUR

BURDEN. n. f. [býrðen, Sax. and therefore properly written burthen. It is supposed to come from burdo, Lat. a male, as onus from ovis, an afs.]

1. A load; something to be carried.

Camels have their provender

Only for bearing burdens, and sore blows

For sinking under them.

Shakesp. Coriolanus.

It is of use in lading of ships, and may help to shew what burden in the several kinds they will bear. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

2. Something grievous or wearisome.

Couldst thou support

That burden, heavier than the earth to bear? Par. Lost, b. x.

None of the things they are to learn, should ever be made a burden to them, or imposed on them as a task.

Locke.

Deaf, giddy, helpless, left alone,

To all my friends a burden grown.

Swift.

3. A birth: now obsolete.

Thou hadst a wife once, called Æmilia,

That bore thee at a burden two fair sons.

Shakesp.

4. The verse repeated in a song.

At ev'ry close she made, th' attending throng

Reply'd, and bore the burden of the song. Dryden's Fab.

5. The quantity that a ship will carry; or the capacity of a ship.

To BURDEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To load; to incumber.

Burden not thyself above thy power.

I mean not that other men be eased, and you burdened.

Cor. viii. 13.

BURDENER. n. f. [from burden.] A loader; an oppressor.

BURDENOUS. adj. [from burden.]

1. Grievous; oppressive; wearisome.

Make no jest of that which hath so earnestly pierced me through, nor let that be light to thee, which to me is so burdenous.

Sidney, b. i.

2. Useless.

To what can I be useful, wherein serve,

But to sit idle on the household hearth,

A burd'nous drone; to visitants a gaze. Milton's Agonistes.

BURDENSOME. adj. [from burden.] Grievous; troublesome to be born.

His leisure told him, that his time was come,

And lack of load made his life burdensome.

Milton.

Could I but live till burdensome they prove,

My life would be immortal as my love. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

Assistances always attending us, upon the easy condition of our prayers, and by which the most burdensome duty will become light and easy.

Rogers.

BURDENSOMENESS. n. f. [from burdensome.] Weight; heaviness; uneasiness to be born.

BURDOCK. n. f. See DOCK.

BUREAU. n. f. [bureau, Fr.] A chest of drawers. It is pronounced as if it were spelt buro.

For not the desk with silver nails,

Nor bureau of expence,

Nor standish well japan'd, avails

To writing of good sense.

Swift.

BURG. n. f. See BURROW.

BUR'GAGE. n. f. [from burg, or burrow.] A tenure proper to cities and towns, whereby men of cities or burrows hold their lands or tenements of the king, or other lord, for a certain yearly rent.

Cowel.

The gross of the borough is surveyed together in the beginning of the county; but there are some other particular burgages thereof, mentioned under the titles of particular mens possessions.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

BUR'GAMOT. n. f. [bergamotte, Fr.] A species of pear.

BUR'GANET. } n. f. [from bourginote, Fr.] A kind of hel-

BUR'GONET. } met.

Upon his head his glistering burganet,

The which was wrought by wonderous device,

And curiously engraven, he did fit. Spenser's Muirpotmos.

This day I'll wear aloft my burgonet,

Ev'n to affright thee with the view thereof. Shakesp. H. VI.

The demy Atlas of this earth, the arm

And burgonet of man. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

I was page to a footman, carrying after him his pike and burganet. Hakewell on Providence.

BURGEO'IS. n. f. [bourgeois, Fr.]

1. A citizen; a burges.

It is a republick itself, under the protection of the eight ancient cantons. There are in it an hundred bourgeois, and about a thousand souls.

Addison on Italy.

2. A type of a particular fort, probably so called from him who first used it; as,

Laugh where we must, be candid where we can,

But vindicate the ways of God to man.

Pope.

BUR'GESS. n. f. [bourgeois, Fr.]

1. A citizen; a freeman of a city, or corporate town.

2. A representative of a town corporate.

The whole case was dispersed by the knights of shires, and burgesses of towns, through all the veins of the land. Wotton.

BURGH. n. f. [See BURROW.] A corporate town or burrow.

Many towns in Cornwall, when they were first allowed to send

send burgesſes to the parliament, bore another proportion to London than now; for ſeveral of theſe burghs ſend two burgesſes, whereas London itſelf ſends but four. Graunt.
BURGER. n. ſ. [from burgh.] One who has a right to certain privileges in this or that place. Locke.

It irks me, the poor dappled fools,
 Being native burghers of this deſart city,
 Should in their own confines, with forked heads,
 Have their round haunches gor'd. Shakeſp. As you like it.
 After the multitude of the common people was diſmiſſed, and the chief of the burghers ſent for, the imperious letter was read before the knights of the order, and the better ſort of citizens. Knolles's Hiſtory of the Turks.

BURGHERSHIP. n. ſ. [from burgher.] The privilege of a burgher.

BURGHMASTER. See BURGOMASTER.

BURGLAR. n. ſ. [See BURGLARY.] The crime of houſebreaking.

BURGLARY. n. ſ. [from burg, a houſe, and larron, a thief.]
 In the natural ſignification of the word, is nothing but the robbing of a houſe: but as it is a term of art, our common lawyers reſtrain it to robbing a houſe by night, or breaking in with an intent to rob, or do ſome other felony. The like offence committed by day, they call houſe-robbing, by a peculiar name.
Cowel.

What ſay you, father? Burglary is but a venial fin among ſoldiers. Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

BURGOMASTER. n. ſ. [from burg and maſter.] One employed in the government of a city.

They chuſe their councils and burgomaſters out of the bur-geois, as in the other governments of Switzerland. Addiſon.
BURH, is a tower; and from that, a defence or protection; ſo
Cwenburh is a woman ready to aſſiſt; Cuthbur, eminent for aſſiſtance. Gibſon's Camæen.

BURIAL. n. ſ. [from to bury.]

1. The act of burying; ſepulture; interment.
 Nor would we deign him burial of his men. Shakeſp.
 See my wealthy Andrew dock'd in ſand,
 Vailing her high top lower than her ribs,
 To kiſs her burial. Shakeſp. Merchant of Venice.
 Your body I fought, and had I found
 Deſign'd for burial in your native ground. Dryden's Æneid.

2. The act of placing any thing under earth or water.
 We have great lakes, both ſalt and freſh; we uſe them for burials of ſome natural bodies: for we find a difference of things buried in earth, and things buried in water. Bacon.

3. The church ſervice for funerals.
 The office of the church is performed by the pariſh prieſt, at the time of his interment, if not prohibited unto perſons excommunicated, and laying violent hands on themſelves, by a rubrick of the burial ſervice. Ayliffe's Parergon.

BURIER. n. ſ. [from bury.] He that buries; he that performs the act of interment.

Let one ſpirit of the firſtborn Cain
 Reign in all boſoms, that, each heart being ſet
 On bloody courſes, the rude ſcene may end,
 And darkneſs be the burier of the dead. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

BURINE. n. ſ. [French.] A graving tool; a graver.
 Wit is like the graver's burine upon copper, or the corroding of aquafortis, which engrave and indent the characters, that they can never be defaced. Government of the Tongue.

BURLACE. n. ſ. [corruptly written for burdelais.] A ſort of grape. See VINE.

TO BURL. v. a. To dreſs cloth as fullers do. Diſt.

BURLESCUE. adj. [Fr. from burlare, Ital. to jeſt.] Jocular; tending to raiſe laughter, by unnatural or unfuitable language or images.

Homer, in his character of Vulcan and Therſites, in his ſtory of Mars and Venus, in his behaviour of Irus, and in other paſſages, has been obſerved to have lapſed into the bur-leſque character, and to have departed from that ſerious air, which ſeems eſſential to the magnificence of an epick poem.
Addiſon. Spectator, N° 279.

BURLESCUE. n. ſ. Ludicrous language, or ideas; ridicule.
 When a man lays out a twelvemonth on the ſpots in the fun, however noble his ſpeculations may be, they are very apt to fall into burleſque. Addiſon on ancient Medals.

TO BURLESCUE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To turn to ridicule.

Would Homer apply the epithet divine to a modern ſwineherd? if not, it is an evidence, that Eumeus was a man of conſequence; otherwiſe Homer would burleſque his own poetry.
Broome's Notes on the Odyſſey.

BURLINESS. n. ſ. [from burly.] Bulk; bluffer.

BURLY. adj. [Junius has no etymology; Skinner imagines it to come from boorlike, clowniſh.] Great of ſtature; great of ſize; bulky; tumid.

Steel, if thou turn thine edge, or cut not out the burly boned clown in chines of beef, ere thou ſleep in thy ſheath, I beſeech
 Jove on my knees, thou may'ſt be turned into hobnails.
Shakeſp. Henry VI. p. ii.
 It was the orator's own burly way of nonſenſe. Cowley.

Away with all your Carthaginian ſtate,
 Let vanquiſh'd Hannibal without doors wait, } Dryden.
 Too burly and too big to paſs my narrow gate.
 Her husband, it ſeems, being a very burly man, ſhe thought it would be leſs trouble for her to bring away little Cupid.
Addiſon. Spectator, N° 499.

TO BURN. v. a. [beſnan, Saxon.]

1. To conſume with fire.
 That where ſhe fed his amorous deſires
 With ſoft complaints, and felt his hotteſt fires,
 There other flames might waſte his earthly part,
 And burn his limbs, where love had burn'd his heart. Dryden.
 O that I could but weep, to vent my paſſion!
 But this dry ſorrow burns up all my tears. Dryden's Sp. Fr.
 A fleſhy excreſcence, becoming exceeding hard, is ſuppoſed to demand extirpation, by burning away the induration, or amputating. Sharp's Surgery.

2. To wound or hurt with fire or heat.
 Hand for hand, foot for foot, burning for burning, wound for wound, ſtripe for ſtripe. Exodus, xxi. 25.

TO BURN. v. n.

1. To be on fire; to be kindled.
 The barge ſhe ſat in, like a burniſh'd throne,
 Burnt on the water. Shakeſp. Antony and Cleopatra.
 O coward conſcience! how doſt thou afflict me?
 The light burns blue—Is it not dead midnight?
 Cold trembling drops ſtand on my trembling fleſh. Shakeſp.
 Oh! prince, oh! wherefore burn your eyes? and why
 Is your ſweet temper turn'd to fury? Rowe's Royal Convert.

2. To be inflamed with paſſion.
 When I burnt in deſire to queſtion them further, they made themſelves air, into which they vaniſhed. Shakeſp. Macbeth.
 Tranio, I burn, I pine, I periſh Tranio,
 If I atchieve not this young modeſt girl. Shakeſp.

3. To act as fire.
 Theſe things ſting him
 So venomouſly, that burning ſhame detains him
 From his Cordelia. Shakeſp. King Lear.
 In Raleigh mark their every glory mix'd;
 Raleigh, the ſcourge of Spain! whoſe breſt with all
 The ſage, the patriot, and the hero burn'd. Thomſon.

4. To be hot.
 I had a glimpſe of him; but he ſhot by me
 Like a young hound upon a burning ſcent. Dryden's Sp. Fr.

BURN. n. ſ. [from the verb.] A hurt cauſed by fire.
 We ſee the phlegm of vitriol is a very effectual remedy
 againſt burns. Boyle.

BURNER. n. ſ. [from burn.] A perſon that burns any thing.

BURNET. n. ſ. [pimpinella, Lat.] The name of a plant.
 The common burnet is found wild in great plenty upon dry chalky hills; yet is often cultivated in gardens for medicinal

It cannot be but nature hath some director, of infinite power, to guide her in all her ways. Hooker, b. i. § 3.

Who shall believe,

But you misuse the reverence of your place? Shakesp.

8. Not otherwise than.

A genius so elevated and unconfined as Mr. Cowley's, was but necessary to make Pindar speak English. Dryden.

9. By any other means means than.

Out of that will I cause those of Cyprus to mutiny: whose qualification shall come into no true taste again, but by trans-planting of Cassio. Shakesp. Othello.

10. If it were not for this; if this were not.

Believe me, I had rather have lost my purse
Full of cruozades. And but my noble Moor
Is true of mind, and made of no such baseness,
As jealous creatures are, it were enough
To put him to ill-thinking. Shakesp. Othello.

I here do give thee that with all my heart,

Which, but thou hast already, with all my heart

I would keep from thee. Shakesp. Othello.

11. However; howbeit.

I do not doubt but I have been to blame;
But, to pursue the end for which I came,
Unite your subjects first, then let us go,
And pour their common rage upon the foe. Dryden.

12. It is used after no doubt, no question, and such words, and signifies the same with that. It sometimes is joined with that.

They made no account, but that the navy should be absolutely master of the seas. Bacon's War with Spain.

I fancied to myself a kind of ease in the change of the paroxysm; never suspecting but that the humour would have waited itself. Dryden.

There is no question but the king of Spain will reform most of the abuses. Addison on Italy.

13. That. This seems no proper sense in this place.

It is not therefore impossible, but I may alter the complexion of my play, to restore myself into the good graces of my fair criticks. Dryden's Aurengzebe, Preface.

14. Otherwise than.

I should sin

To think but nobly of my grandmother. Shakesp. Tempest.

15. Even; not longer ago than.

Beroe but now I left; whom, pin'd with pain,
Her age and anguish from these rites detain. Dryden.
It is evident, in the instance I gave but now, the consciof-ness went along. Locke.

16. A particle by which the meaning of the foregoing sentence is bounded or restrained.

Thus fights Ulysses, thus his fame extends,
A formidable man, but to his friends. Dryden.

17. An objective particle; yet it may be objected.

But yet, madam——

I do not like but yet; it does allay
The good precedence; fie upon but yet!
But yet is as a jaylour, to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

Must the heart then have been formed and constituted, before the blood was in being? But here again, the substance of the heart itself is most certainly made and nourished by the blood, which is conveyed to it by the coronary arteries. Bentl.

18. But for; without; had not this been.

Rash man! forbear, but for some unbelief,
My joy had been as fatal as my grief. Waller.

Her head was bare,

But for her native ornament of hair,
Which in a simple knot was ty'd above. Dryden's Fables.

When the fair boy receiv'd the gift of right,
And, but for mischief, you had dy'd for spight. Dryden.

BUT. n. f. [bout, French.] A boundary.

But, if I ask you what I mean by that word, you will answer,
I mean this or that thing, you cannot tell which; but if I join it with the words in construction and sense, as, but I will not,

BUT

a but of wine, but and boundary, the ram will but, shoot at but, the meaning of it will be as ready to you as any other word.

Holder's Elements of Speech.

BUT. n. f. [In sea language.] The end of any plank which joins to another on the outside of a ship, under water. Harris.

BUT-END. n. f. [from but and end.] The blunt end of any thing; the end upon which it rests.

The reserve of foot galled their foot with several volleys, and then fell on them with the but-ends of their muskets. Clarendon.

Thy weapon was a good one when I wielded it, but the but-end remains in my hands. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

Some of the soldiers accordingly pushed them forwards with the but-ends of their pikes, into my reach. Gulliver's Travels.

BU'TCHER. n. f. [boucher, Fr.]

1. One that kills animals to sell their flesh.

The shepherd and the butcher both may look upon one sheep with pleasing conceits. Sidney.

Hence he learnt the butcher's guile,

How to cut your throat, and smile;

Like a butcher doom'd for life,

In his mouth to wear his knife. Swift.

2. One that is delighted with blood.

Honour and renown are bestowed on conquerors, who, for the most part, are but the great butchers of mankind. Locke.

TO BU'TCHER. v. a. [from the noun.] To kill; to murder.

In suff'ring thus thy brother to be slaughter'd,

Thou shewest the naked pathway to thy life,

Teaching stern murder how to butcher thee. Shakesp. R. II.

Uncharitably with me have you dealt,

And shamefully by you my hopes are butcher'd. Shakesp.

The poison and the dagger are at hand to butcher a hero, when the poet wants brains to save him. Dryden's Don Sebast.

BUTCHERS-BROOM, or KNEEHOLLY. n. f. [rufcus, Lat.]

The flower-cup consists of one leaf, cut into several divisions, out of which is produced a globular bell-shaped flower, consisting also of one leaf, in the center of which rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a soft roundish fruit, in which are inclosed one or two hard seeds. It is very common in the woods, in divers parts of England, and is rarely cultivated in gardens. The roots are sometimes used in medicine, and the green shoots are cut and bound into bundles, and sold to the butchers, who use it as besoms to sweep their blocks; from whence it had the name of butchers-broom. Millar.

BU'TCHERLINESS. n. f. [from butcherly.] In a butcherly manner.

BU'TCHERLY. adj. [from butcher.] Cruel; bloody; barbarous.

There is a way, which, brought into schools, would take away this butcherly fear in making of Latin. Ascham's Schoolm.

What stratagems, how fell, how butcherly,

This deadly quarrel daily doth beget! Shakesp. Henry VI.

BU'TCHERY. n. f. [from butcher.]

1. The trade of a butcher.

Yet this man, so ignorant in modern butchery, has cut up half an hundred heroes, and quartered five or six miserable lovers, in every tragedy he has written. Pope.

2. Murder; cruelty; slaughter.

If thou delight to view thy heinous deeds,

Behold this pattern of thy butcheries. Shakesp. Rich. III.

The butchery, and the breach of hospitality, is represented in this fable under the mask of friendship. L'Estrange.

Can he a son to soft remorse incite,

Whom goals, and blood, and butchery delight? Dryden.

3. The place where blood is shed.

This is no place, this house is but a butchery;

Abhor it, fear it, do not enter it. Shakesp. As you like it.

BU'TLER. n. f. [bouteiller, Fr. boteler, or botiller, old English, from bottle; he that is employed in the care of bottling liquours.] A servant in a family employed in furnishing the table.

Butlers forget to bring up their beer time enough. Swift.

BU'TLERAGE. n. f. [from butler.] The duty upon wines imported, claimed by the king's butler.

Those ordinary finances are casual or uncertain, as be the escheats, the customs, butlerage, and impost. Bacon.

BU'TLERSHIP. n. f. [from butler.] The office of a butler.

BU'TMENT. n. f. [aboutement, Fr.] That part of the arch which joins it to the upright pier.

The supporters or butments of the said arch cannot suffer so much violence, as in the precedent flat posture. Wotton.

BUTT. n. f. [but, Fr.]

1. The place on which the mark to be shot at is placed.

He calls on Bacchus, and propounds the prize;

The groom his fellow groom at butts defies,

And bends his bow, and levels with his eyes. } Dryd.

2. The point at which the endeavour is directed.

Be not afraid though you do see me weapon'd;

Here is my journey's end; here is my butt,

The very sea-mark of my journey's end. Shakesp. Othello.

3. The object of aim; the thing against which any attack is directed.

The papists were the most common-place, and the butt against whom all the arrows were directed. Clarendon.

4. A man upon whom the company break their jests.

BUT

I played a sentence or two at my butt, which I thought very smart, when my ill genius suggested to him such a reply as got all the laughter on his side. Spectator, N° 175.

5. A stroke given in fencing.

If disputes arise

Among the champions for the prize;

To prove who gave the fairer butt,

John shews the chalk on Robert's coat. Prior.

BUTT. n. f. [butz, Saxon.] A vessel; a barrel containing one hundred and twenty six gallons of wine; a butt contains one hundred and eight gallons of beer; and from fifteen to twenty two hundred weight, is a butt of currans.

I escaped upon a butt of sack, which the sailors heaved over-board. Shakesp. Tempest.

TO BUTT. v. a. [botten, Dutch.] To strike with the head.

Come, leave your tears: a brief farewell: the beast

With many heads butts me away. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Nor wars are seen,

Unless, upon the green,

Two harmless lambs are butting one the other. Wotton.

A snow-white steer, before thy altar led,

Butts with his threat'ning brows, and bellowing stands. Dryden's Aeneid.

A ram will butt with his head, though he be brought up tame, and never saw that manner of fighting. Ray on the Cr.

BU'TTER. n. f. [buttere, Sax. butyrum, Lat.]

1. An unctuous substance made by agitating the cream of milk, till the oil separates from the whey.

And he took butter and milk, and the calf which he had dressed, and set before them. Gen. xviii. 8.

2. Butter of antimony. A chymical preparation, made by uniting the acid spirits of sublimate corrosive with regulus of antimony. It is a great caustick. Harris.

3. Butter of tin, is made with tin and sublimate corrosive. This preparation continually emits fumes. Harris.

TO BU'TTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To smear, or oil with butter.

'Twas her brother, that, in pure kindness to his horse, buttered his hay. Shakesp. King Lear.

Words butter no parsnips. L'Estrange.

2. To encrease the stakes every throw, or every game: a cant term among gamesters.

It is a fine simile in one of Mr. Congreve's prologues, which compares a writer to a buttering gamester, that stakes all his winning upon one cast; so that if he loses the last throw, he is sure to be undone. Addison. Freeholder, N° 40.

BU'TTERBUMP. n. f. A fowl; the same with bittourn.

BU'TTERBUR. n. f. [petasites, Lat.]

It is a plant with a flosculous flower, consisting of many florets, divided into many parts, fitting on the embryo, and continued in a cylindrical empalement, divided also into many parts; the embryo becomes afterwards a seed furnished with down, and the flowers appear before the leaves. It is used in medicine, and grows wild in great plenty by the sides of ditches. Millar.

BU'TTERFLOWER. n. f. A yellow flower, with which the fields abound in the month of May.

Let weeds, instead of butterflow'rs, appear,

And meads, instead of daisies, hemlock bear. Gay.

BU'TTERFLY. n. f. [buttepplege, Saxon.] A beautiful insect, so named because it first appears at the beginning of the season for butter.

Eftsoons that damsel, by her heav'nly might,

She turned into a winged butterfly,

In the wide air to make her wand'ring flight. Spenser.

Tell old tales, and laugh

At gilded butterflies; and hear poor rogues

Talk of court news. Shakesp. King Lear.

And so besel, that as he cast his eye

Among the colworts on a butterfly,

He saw false Reynard. Dryden's Fables.

That which seems to be a powder upon the wings of a butterfly, is an innumerable company of extreme small feathers, not to be discerned without a microscope. Grew.

BU'TTERIS. n. f. An instrument of steel set in a wooden handle, used in paring the foot, or cutting the hoof of a horse. Farr. D.

BU'TTERMILK. n. f. [from butter and milk.] The whey that is separated from the cream when butter is made.

A young man, who was fallen into an ulcerous consumption, devoted himself to buttermilk, by which sole diet he recovered. Harvey on Consumptions.

The scurvy of mariners is cured by acids; as ripe fruits, lemons, oranges, buttermilk; and alkaline spirits hurt them. Arbuthnot on Diet.

BU'TTERPRINT. n. f. [from butter and print.] A piece of carved wood, used to mark butter.

A butterprint, in which were engraven figures of all sorts and sizes, applied to the lump of butter, left on it the figure. Locke.

BU'TTERTOOTH. n. f. [from butter and tooth.] The great broad foreteeth.

BU'TTERWOMAN. n. f. [from butter and woman.] A woman that sells butter.

Tongue,

Tongue, I must put you into a butterwoman's mouth, and buy myself another of Bajazet's mute, if you prattle me into these perils. Shakefp. All's well that ends well.

BU'TTERWORT. n. f. A plant; the same with sanicle.

BU'TTERY. adj. [from butter.] Having the appearance or qualities of butter.

Nothing more convertible into hot cholerick humours, than its buttery parts. Harvey on Consumptions.

The best oils, thickened by cold, have a white colour; and milk itself has its whiteness from the caseous fibres, and its buttery oil. Floyer on the Humours.

BU'TTERY. n. f. [from butter; or, according to Skinner, from bouter, Fr. to place or lay up.] The room where provisions are laid up.

Go, firrah, take them to the buttery,

And give them friendly welcome every one. Shakefp.

All that need a cool and fresh temper, as cellars, pantries, and butteries, to the north. Wotton.

My guts ne'er suffer'd from a college-cook,

My name ne'er enter'd in a buttery book.

Brampton's Man of Taste.

BU'TTOCK. n. f. [supposed, by Skinner, to come from aboutir, Fr. inserted by Junius without etymology.] The rump; the part near the tail.

It is like a barber's chair that fits all the buttocks. Shakefp.

Such as were not able to stay themselves, should be holden up by others of more strength, riding behind them upon the buttocks of the horse. Knolles's History of the Turks.

The tail of a fox was never made for the buttocks of an ape.

L'Estrange's Fables.

BU'TTON. n. f. [bottwn, Welch; bouton, Fr.]

1. A catch, or small ball, by which the dress of man is fastened.

Pray you, undo this button. Shakefp. King Lear.

I mention those ornaments, because, of the simplicity of the shape, want of ornaments, buttons, loops, gold and silver lace, they must have been cheaper than ours. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. Any knob or ball fastened to a smaller body.

We fastened to the upper marble certain wires, and a button. Boyle.

Fair from its humble bed I rear'd this flow'r,

Suckled and chear'd, with air, and sun and show'r;

Soft on the paper ruff its leaves I spread,

Bright with the gilded button tipt its head. Pope's Dunciad.

3. The bud of a plant.

The canker galls the infants of the spring,

Too oft before their buttons be disclos'd. Shakefp. Hamlet.

BU'TTON. n. f. The sea urchin, which is a kind of crabfish that has prickles instead of feet. Ainsworth.

TO BU'TTON. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress; to cloath.

One whose hard heart is button'd up with steel. Shakefp.

He gave his legs, arm, and breast, to his ordinary servant, to button and dress him. Wotton.

2. To fasten with buttons.

BU'TTONHOLE. n. f. [from button and hole.] The loop in which the button of the cloaths is caught.

Let me take you a buttonhole lower. Shakefp. Love's Lab. L.

I'll please the maids of honour, if I can:

Without black velvet breeches, what is man?

I will my skill in buttonholes display,

And brag, how oft I shift me ev'ry day. Bramst. M. of Taste.

BU'TTRESS. n. f. [from aboutir, Fr.]

1. A prop; a wall built to support another wall.

No jutting frize,

Buttress, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird,

Hath made his pendant bed, and procreant cradle. Shakefp.

Fruit trees, set upon a wall against the sun, between elbows or buttresses of stone, ripen more than upon a plain wall. Bacon.

But we inhabit a weak city here,

Which buttresses and props but scarcely bear. Dryden's Juv.

2. A prop; a support.

It will concern us to examine the force of this plea, which our adversaries are still setting up against us, as the ground pillar and buttress of the good old cause of nonconformity. South.

TO BU'TTRESS. v. a. [from the noun.] To prop; to support.

BU'TWINK. n. f. The name of a bird. Dict.

BUTYRACEOUS. adj. [butyrum, Lat. butter.] Having the qualities of butter.

Chyle has the same principles as milk; a viscosity from the caseous parts, and an oiliness from the butyraceous parts.

Floyer on the Humours.

BU'TYROUS. adj. [butyrum, Lat.] Having the properties of butter.

Its oily red part is from the butyrous parts of chyle. Floyer.

BUXOM. adj. [bucrum, Sax. from buzan, to bend. It originally signified obedient, as John de Trevisa, a clergyman, tells his patron, that he is obedient and buxom to all his commands.

In an old form of marriage used before the Reformation, the bride promised to be obedient and buxom in bed and at board; from which expression, not well understood, its present meaning seems to be derived.]

1. Obedient; obsequious.

He did tread down, and disgrace all the English, and set up and countenance the Irish; thinking thereby to make them more tractable and buxom to his government. Spenser's Ireland.

He, with broad sails,

Winnow'd the buxom air.

Milton.

2. Gay; lively; brisk.

I'm born

Again a fresh child of the buxom morn,

Heir of the sun's first beams.

Crashaw.

Zephyr, with Aurora playing,

As he met her once a maying,

Fill'd her with thee, a daughter fair,

So buxom, blithe, and debonnaire.

Milton.

Sturdy swains,

In clean array, for rustick dance prepare,

Mixt with the buxom damsels, hand in hand,

They frisk and bound.

Philips.

3. Wanton; jolly.

Almighty Jove descends, and pours

Into his buxom bride his fruitful show'rs.

Dryden's Virgil.

She feign'd the rites of Bacchus! cry'd aloud,

And to the buxom god the virgin vow'd. Dryden's Æneid.

BU'XOMLY. adv. [from buxom.] Wantonly; amorously.

BU'XOMNESS. n. f. [from buxom.] Wantonnefs; amorousness.

TO BUY. v. a. preter. I bought; I have bought. [bicgean, Sax.]

1. To purchase; to acquire by paying a price; to obtain for money, or something equivalent; to gain by sale, not gift or theft.

They must buy up no corn growing within twelve miles of Geneva, that so the filling of their magazines may not prejudice their market. Addison on Italy.

2. To procure some advantage by something that deserves it, or at some price.

I have bought

Golden opinions from all sorts of people. Shakefp. Macbeth.

Pent to linger

But with a grain a day, I would not buy

Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shakefp. Coriol.

Pleasure with praise, and danger they would buy,

And with a foe that would not only fly. Denham.

3. To manage by money.

You, and all the kings of christendom,

Are led so grossly by this meddling priest,

Dreading the curse that money may buy out. Shakefp. K. J.

What pitiful things are power, rhetorick, or riches, when they would terrify, dissuade, or buy off conscience? South.

TO BUY. v. n. To treat about a purchase.

I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following. Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.

BU'YER. n. f. [from to buy.] He that buys; a purchaser.

When a piece of art is set before us, let the first caution be, not to ask who made it, lest the fame of the authour do captivate the fancy of the buyer. Wotton's Architecture.

TO BUZZ. v. n. [bizzen, Teut. to growl. Junius.]

1. To hum; to make a noise like bees, flies, or wasps.

And all the chamber filled was with flies,

Which buzzed all about, and made such sound,

That they encumber'd all men's ears and eyes,

Like many swarms of bees assembled round. Fairy 2. b. ii.

There be more wasps, that buzz about his nose,

Will make this sting the sooner. Shakefp. Henry VIII.

Herewith arose a buzzing noise among them, as if it had been the rustling sound of the sea afar off. Hayward.

For still the flowers ready stand,

One buzzes round about,

One lights, one tastes, gets in, gets out.

Suckling.

What though no bees around your cradle flew,

Nor on your lips distill'd their golden dew;

Yet have we oft' discover'd, in their stead,

A swarm of drones that buzz'd about your head. Pope.

We join, like flies and wasps, in buzzing about wit. Swift.

2. To whisper; to prate.

There is such confusion in my pow'rs,

As after some oration fairly spoke

By a beloved prince, there doth appear

Among the buzzing multitude. Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.

TO BUZZ. v. a. To whisper; to spread secretly.

Where doth the world thrust forth a vanity,

That is not quickly buzz'd into his ears? Shakefp. Rich. II.

I will buzz abroad such prophecies,

That Edward shall be fearful of his life. Shakefp. Hen. VI.

Did you not hear

A buzzing of a separation

Between the king and Catherine? Shakefp. Henry VIII.

They might buzz and whisper it one to another, and, tacitely withdrawing from the presence of the apostles, they then lift their voices, and noise it about the city. Bentley.

Buzz. n. f. [from the verb.] A hum; a whisper; a talk.

The hive of a city or kingdom, is in best condition, when there is least noise or buzz in it. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Where I found the whole outward room in a buzz of politics. Addison. Spectator, N° 403.

BU'ZZARD.

BU'ZZARD. n. f. [buzard, Fr.]

1. A degenerate or mean species of hawk.
More pity that the eagle should be maw'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Shakefp. R. III.
The noble buzzard ever pleas'd me best;
Of small renown, 'tis true: for, not to lie,
We call him but a hawk by courtesy. Dryden's Hind and P.
2. A blockhead; a dunce.
Those blind buzzards, who, in late years, of wilful maliciousness, would neither learn themselves, nor could teach others any thing at all. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

BU'ZZER. n. f. [from buzz.] A secret whisperer.

- Her brother is in secret come from France,
And wants not buzzers to infest his ear
With petulant speeches of his father's death. Shak. Hamlet.

BY. prep. [bi, big, Saxon.]

1. It notes the agent.
The Moor is with child by you, Launcelot. Shak. Hen. VI.
The grammar of a language is sometimes to be carefully studied by a grown man. Locke.
2. It notes the instrument, and is always used after a verb neuter, where with would be put after an active; as, he was killed with a sword; he died by a sword.
But by Pelides' arms when Hector fell,
He chose Æneas, and he chose as well. Dryden, Æn. vi.
3. It notes the cause of any event.
This sight had the more weight with him, as by good luck not above two of that venerable body were fallen asleep.
Addison. Freeholder.
4. It notes the means by which any thing is performed.
You must think, if we give you any thing, we hope to gain
by you. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Happier! had it suffic'd him to have known
Good by itself, and evil not at all. Parad. Lost, b. xi. l. 89.
The heart knows that by itself, which nothing in the world
besides can give it any knowledge of. South.
We obtain the knowledge of a multitude of propositions by sensation and reflection. Watts's Logick.
5. It shews the manner of an action.
I have not patience; she consumes the time
In idle talk, and owns her false belief:
Seize her by force, and bear her hence unheard.
Dryden's Don Sebastian.
By chance, within a neighbouring brook,
He saw his branching horns, and alter'd look. Addison.

6. It has a signification, noting the method in which any successive action is performed, with regard to time or quantity.
The best for you, is to re-examine the cause, and to try it even point by point, argument by argument, with all the exact-ness you can. Hooker, Preface.
We are not to stay all together, but to come by him where he stands, by ones, by twos, and by threes. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
He calleth them forth by one, and by one, by the name, as he pleaseth, though seldom the order be inverted. Bacon.
The captains were obliged to break that piece of ordnance, and so by pieces to carry it away, that the enemy should not get so great a spoil. Knolles's History of the Turks.
Common prudence would direct me to take them all out,
and examine them one by one. Boyle.
Others will soon take pattern and encouragement by your building; and so house by house, street by street, there will at last be finished a magnificent city. Sprat.
Explor'd her, limb by limb, and fear'd to find
So rude a gripe had left a livid mark behind. Dryden's Fab.
Thus year by year they pass, and day by day,
Till once, 'twas on the morn of chearful May,
The young Æmilia—— Dryden's Fab.
I'll gaze for ever on thy god like father,
Transplanting one by one into my life,
His bright perfections, till I shine like him. Addison's Cato.
Let the blows be by pauses laid on. Locke.

7. It notes the quantity had at one time.
Bullion will sell by the ounce for six shillings and fivepence unclipped money. Locke.
What we take daily by pounds, is at least of as much importance as of what we take seldom, and only by grains and spoonfuls. Arbuthnot on Aliments, Preface.
The North, by myriads, pours her mighty sons;
Great nurse of Goths, of Alans, and of Huns. Pope.
8. At, or in; noting place.
We see the great effects of battles by sea; the battle of Ac-tium decided the empire of the world. Bacon's Essays.
Arms, and the man, I sing, who, forc'd by fate,
Expell'd, and exil'd, left the Trojan shore;
Long labours both by sea and land he bore. Dryden's Æn.
I would have fought by land, where I was stronger:
You hinder'd it; yet, when I fought at sea,
Forsook me fighting. Dryden's All for Love.
9. According to; noting permission.
It is lawful, both by the laws of nature and nations, and by the law divine, which is the perfection of the other two.
Bacon's Holy War.

10. According to; noting proof.

The present, or like, system of the world cannot possibly have been eternal, by the first proposition; and, without God, it could not naturally, nor fortuitously, emerge out of a chaos,
by the third proposition. Bentley.

The faculty, or desire, being infinite, by the preceding proposition, may contain, or receive both these. Cheyne.

11. After; according to; noting imitation or conformity.
The gospel gives us such laws, as every man, that understands himself, would chuse to live by. Tillotson.

In the divisions I have made, I have endeavoured, the best I could, to govern myself by the diversity of matter. Locke.

This ship, by good luck, fell into their hands at last, and served as a model to build others by. Arbuthnot on Coins.

12. From; noting judgment or token.

Thus, by the musick, we may know,
When noble wits a hunting go, } Waller.
Through groves that on Parnassus grow.

By what he has done, before the war in which he was engaged, we may expect what he will do after a peace. Dryden.

The son of Hercules he justly seems,
By his broad shoulders and gigantick limbs. Dryden.

Who's that stranger? By his warlike port,
His fierce demeanour, and erected look,
He's of no vulgar note. Dryden's All for Love.

Judge the event
By what has pass'd. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

The punishment is not to be measured by the greatness or smallness of the matter, but by the opposition it carries, and stands in, to that respect and submission that is due to the father. Locke.

By your description of the town, I imagine it to lie under some great enchantment. Pope's Letters.

By what I have always heard and read, I take the strength of a nation— Swift.

13. It notes the sum of the difference between two things compared.

More young and vigorous too by twenty springs. Dryden.

Ere this, lies shorter by the head at Pomfret.
Rowe's Jane Shore.

By giving the denomination to less quantities of silver by one twentieth, you take from them their due. Locke.

14. It notes co-operation, or cohabitation.
By her he had two children at one birth. Shakefp. Hen. VI.

15. For; noting continuance of time. This sense is not now in use.

Ferdinand and Isabella recovered the kingdom of Granada from the Moors; having been in possession thereof by the space of seven hundred years. Bacon's Henry VII.

16. As soon as; not later than; noting time.

By this, the sons of Constantine which fled,
Ambrose and Uther, did ripe years attain. Fairy Q. b. ii.

Hector, by the fifth hour of the sun,
Will, with a trumpet, 'twixt our tents and Troy,
Tomorrow morning call some knight to arms.

Shakefp. Troilus and Cressida.

He err'd not; for, by this, the heav'nly bands
Down from a sky of jasper lighted now
In paradise. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 208.

These have their course to finish round the earth
By morrow ev'ning. Paradise Lost, b. iv. l. 662.

The angelick guards ascended, mute and sad
For man: for, of his state by this they knew. Par. L. b. x.

By that time a siege is carried on two or three days, I am altogether lost and bewildered in it. Addison. Spect. N° 165.

By this time, the very foundation was removed. Swift.

By the beginning of the fourth century from the building of Rome, the tribunes proceeded so far, as to accuse and fine the consuls. Swift.

Many beautiful places standing along the sea-shore, make the town appear much longer than it is, to those that sail by it.
Addison on Italy.

18. Beside; near to; in presence; noting proximity of place.

So thou may'st say, the king lies by a beggar, if a beggar dwell near him; or the church stands by thy tabour, if thy tabour stand by the church. Shakefp. Twelfth Night.

Here he comes himself;
If he be worth any man's good voice,
That good man sit down by him. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

A spacious plain, whereon
Were tents of various hue: by some, were herds
Of cattle grazing. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 557.

Stay by me; thou art resolute and faithful;
I have employment worthy of thy arm. Dryden's D. Sebast.

19. Before himself, herself, or themselves, it notes the absence of all others.

Sitting in some place, by himself, let him translate into English his former lesson. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Solyman resolved to assault the breach, after he had, by himself

Self, in a melancholy mood, walked up and down in his tent.

Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

I know not whether he will annex his discourse to his appendix, or publish it by itself, or at all. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

He will imagine, that the king, and his ministers, sat down, and made them by themselves, and then sent them to their allies, to sign. Swift.

More pleas'd to keep it, till their friends could come,

Then eat the sweetest by themselves at home. Pope.

20. It is the solemn form of swearing.

His godhead I invoke, by him I swear. Dryden's Fab.

The merchant is not forced to keep so much money by him, as in other places, where they have not such a supply. Locke.

22. It is used in forms of adjuring, or obtesting.

Which, O! avert by yon ethereal light,

Which I have lost for this eternal night;

Or if, by dearer ties, you may be won,

By your dead fire, and by your living son. Dryden's Æn.

Now by your joys on earth, your hopes in heav'n,

O spare this great, this good, this aged king! Dryden.

O, cruel youth!

By all the pain that wrings my tortur'd soul!

By all the dear deceitful hopes you gave me,

O, cease! at least, once more delude my sorrows.

Smith's Phædrus and Hippolita.

23. It signifies specification and particularity.

Upbraiding heav'n, from whence his lineage came,

And cruel calls the gods, and cruel thee, by name. Dryden.

24. By proxy of; noting substitution.

The gods were said to feast with Ethiopians; that is, they were present with them by their statues. Broome, notes on Odyss.

25. In the same direction with.

They are also striated, or furrowed, by the length, and the sides curiously punched, or pricked. Grew.

By. adv.

1. Near; at a small distance.

And in it lies, the god of sleep;

And, snorting by,

We may descry

The monsters of the deep. Dryden's Albion.

2. Beside; passing.

I did hear

The galloping of horse. Who was't came by?

Shakefp. Macbeth.

3. In presence.

The same words in my lady Philoclea's mouth, as from one woman to another, so as there was no other body by, might have had a better grace. Sidney.

I'll not be by, the while, my lieges, farewell:

What will become hereof, there's none can tell.

Shakefp. Richard III.

There while I sing, if gentle youth be by,

That tunes my lute, and winds the strings so high. Waller.

Pris'ners and witnesses were waiting by;

These had been taught to swear, and those to die.

Roscommon.

You have put a principle into him, which will influence his actions, when you are not by. Locke.

By and by. In a short time.

He overtook Amphialus, who had been staid here, and by and by called him to fight with him. Sidney.

The noble knight alighted by and by,

From lofty steed, and bad the lady stay,

To see what end of fight should him befall that day.

Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. viii. stanza. 2.

In the temple, by and by, with us,

These couples shall eternally be knit.

Shakefp. Midsummer's Night's Dream.

O how this spring of love resembleth

Th' uncertain glory of an April day;

Which now shews all the beauty of the sun,

And by and by a cloud takes all away.

Shakefp. Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Now a sensible man, by and by a fool, and presently a beast.

Shakefp. Othello.

By. n. f. [from the preposition.] Something not the direct and immediate object of regard.

In this instance, there is, upon the by, to be noted, the percolation of the verjuice through the wood. Bacon's Natural History, N° 79.

This wolf was forced to make bold, ever and anon, with a sheep in private, by the by. L'Estrange.

Hence we may understand, to add that upon the by, that it is not necessary. Boyle.

So, while my lov'd revenge is full and high,

I'll give you back your kingdom by the by.

Dryden's Conquest of Granada.

By, in composition, implies something out of the direct way; and, consequently, some obscurity, as a by-road; something irregular, as a by-end; or something collateral, as a by-concernment; or private, as a by-law. This composition is used at pleasure, and will be understood by the examples following.

BY-COFFEEHOUSE. n. f. A coffeehouse in an obscure place.

I afterwards entered a by-coffeehouse, that stood at the upper end of a narrow lane, where I met with a nonjuror.

Addison. Spectator, N° 403.

BY-CONCERNMENT. n. f. An affair which is not the main business.

Our plays, besides the main design, have under-plots, or by-concernments, or less considerable persons and intrigues, which are carried on with the motion of the main plot.

Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.

BY-DEPENDENCE. n. f. An appendage; something accidentally depending on another.

These,

And your three motives to the battle, with

I know not how much more, should be demanded;

And all the other by-dependences,

From chance to chance.

Shakefp. Cymbeline.

BY-DESIGN. n. f. An incidental purpose.

And if she miss the mouse-trap lines,

They'll serve for other by-designs,

And make an artist understand,

To copy out her seal or hand;

Or find void places in the paper,

To steal in something to entrap her. Hudibras, p. iii. c. iii.

BY-END. n. f. Private interest; secret advantage.

All people that worship for fear, profit, or some other by-end, fall within the intendment of this fable. L'Estrange.

BY-GONE. adj. [a Scotch word.] Past.

Tell him, you're sure

All in Bohemia's well: this satisfaction

The by-gone day proclaim'd. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.

As we have a conceit of motion coming, as well as bygone; so have we of time, which dependeth thereupon.

Grew's Cosmologia Sacra, b. ii. c. iii.

BY-INTEREST. n. f. Interest distinct from that of the publick. Various factions and parties, all aiming at by-interest, without any sincere regard to the publick good. Atterbury.

BY-LAW. n. f.

By-laws are orders made in court-leets, or court-barons, by common assent, for the good of those that make them, farther than the publick law binds. Cowel.

There was also a law, to restrain the by-laws and ordinances of corporations. Bacon's Henry VII.

In the beginning of this record is inserted the law or institution; to which are added two by-laws, as a comment upon the general law. Addison. Spectator, N° 608.

BY-MATTER. n. f. Something incidental.

I knew one, that, when he wrote a letter, he would put that which was most material into the postscript, as if it had been a by-matter. Bacon's Essays, N° 23.

BY-NAME. n. f. A nickname; name of reproach, or accidental appellation.

Robert, eldest son to the Conquerour, used short hose, and thereupon was by-named Court-hose, and shewed first the use of them to the English. Camden's Remains.

BY-PAST. adj. Past; a term of the Scotch dialect.

Wars, pestilences, and diseases, have not been fewer for these three hundred years by-past, than ever they have been since we have had records. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

BY-PATH. n. f. A private or obscure path.

Heav'n knows, my son,

By what by-paths, and indirect crooked ways,

I got this crown.

Shakefp. Henry IV. p. ii.

BY-RESPECT. n. f. Private end or view.

It may be, that some, upon by-respects, find somewhat friendly usage in usance, at some of their hands.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

The archbishops and bishops, next under the king, have the government of the church: be not you the mean to prefer any to those places, for any by-respects, but only for their learning, gravity, and worth. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

Augustus, who was not altogether so good as he was wise, had some by-respects in the enacting of this law; for to do any thing for nothing, was not his maxim.

Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

BY-ROAD. n. f. An obscure unfrequented path.

Through slipp'ry by-roads, dark and deep,

They often climb, and often creep.

Swift.

BY-ROOM. n. f. A private room within another.

I pr'ythee, do thou stand in some by-room, while I question my puny drawer to what end he gave the sugar.

Shakefp. Henry IV. p. i.

BY-SPEECH. n. f. An incidental or casual speech, not directly relating to the point.

When they come to allege what word and what law they meant, their common ordinary practice is to quote by-speeches in some historical narration or other, and to use them as if they were written in most exact form of law. Hooker, b. iii. § 4.

BY-STANDER. n. f. A looker one; one unconcerned.

She

BYW

She broke her feathers against the frame of the picture, and, falling to the ground upon it, was taken up by the by-standers.

L'Estrange's Fables.

The by-standers asked him, why he ran away, his bread being weight? That was more than I knew, says he. Locke.

BY-STREET. n. f. An obscure street.

The broker here his spacious beaver wears,
Upon his brow sit jealousies and cares;
Bent on some mortgage, to avoid reproach,
He seeks by-streets, and saves th' expensive coach.

Gay's Trivia.

BY-VIEW. n. f. Private self-interested purpose.

No by-views of his own shall mislead him. Atterbury.

BY-WALK. n. f. A private walk; not the main road.

All which he moves afterwards in by-walks, or under-plots, as diversions to the main design, lest it should grow tedious; though they are, still naturally joined. Dryden.

The chief avenue ought to be the most ample and noble; but there should be by-walks, to retire into sometimes, for ease and refreshment. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

BY-WAY. n. f. A private and obscure way.

Night stealths are commonly driven in by-ways, and by blind fords, unused of any but such like. Spenser on Ireland.

Other by-ways he himself betook,
Where never foot of living wight did tread.

Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. vii. stanz. 50.

Wholly abstain, or wed: thy beauteous Lord
Allows thee choice of paths; take no by-ways,
But gladly welcome what he doth afford;
Not grudging that thy lust hath bounds and stays. Herbert.

BYZ

A servant, or a favourite, if he be in want, and no other apparent cause of esteem, is commonly thought but a by-way to close corruption. Bacon's Essays, N° 11.

This is wonderfully diverting to the understanding, thus to receive a precept, that enters, as it were, through a by-way, and to apprehend an idea that draws a whole train after it.

Addison's Essay on the Georgicks.

BY-WEST. Westward; to the west of.

Whereupon grew that by-word, used by the Irish, that they dwelt by-west the law, which dwelt beyond the river of the Barrow. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

BY-WORD. n. f. A saying; a proverb.

Duke of York, be king;

And bashful Henry be deposed; whose cowardice
Hath made us by-words to our enemies.

Shakesp. Henry VI. p. iii.

I knew a wise man, that had it for a by-word, when he saw men hasten to a conclusion, Stay a little, that we may make an end the sooner. Bacon's Essays, N° 26.

We are become a by-word among the nations for our ridiculous feuds and animosities. Addison's Freeholder, N° 50.

It will be his lot often, to look singular, in loose and licentious times, and to become a by-word and a reproach, on that account, among the men of wit and pleasure. Atterbury.

BY'ASS. n. f. See BIAS.

Every inordinate lust is a false byass upon men's understandings, which naturally draws towards atheism. Tillotson.

BYE, BEE, come immediately from the Saxon, bý, býing, i. e. a dwelling. Gibson's Camden.

BY'ZANTINE. See BIZANTINE.

C A B

C The third letter of the alphabet, has two sounds; one like k, as, call, clock, craft, coal, companion, cuneiform; the other as s, as, Cæsar, cessation, cinder. It sounds like k before a, o, u, or a consonant; and like s, before e, i, and y.

CAB. n. f. [כַּב.] A Hebrew measure, containing about three pints English, or the eighteenth part of the ephah.

CABA'L. n. f. [cabale, Fr. אַבְרָהָם, tradition.]

1. The secret science of the Hebrew rabbins.
2. A body of men united in some close design. A cabal differs from a party, as few from many.

She often interposed her royal authority, to break the cabals which were forming against her first ministers. Addison.

3. Intrigue.

When each, by curs'd cabals of women, strove,
To draw th' indulgent king to partial love. Dryden's Aureng.
TO CABA'L. v. n. [cabaler, Fr.] To form close intrigues; to intrigue; to unite in small parties.

His mournful friends, summon'd to take their leaves,
Are throng'd about his couch, and sit in council:
What those caballing captains may design,
I must prevent, by being first in action. Dryden's D. Sebast.

CA'BALIST. n. f. [from cabal.] One skilled in the traditions of the Hebrews.

Then Jove thus spake: With care and pain
We form'd this name, renown'd in rhyme,
Not thine, immortal Neufgermain!
Cost studious cabalists more time. Swift.

CABALLI'STICAL. } adj. [from cabal.] Something that has an
CABALLI'STICK. } occult meaning.

The letters are caballistical, and carry more in them than it is proper for the world to be acquainted with. Addison. Spect.

He taught him to repeat two caballistick words, in pronouncing of which the whole secret consisted. Spectator, N° 578.

CABA'LLER. n. f. [from cabal.] He that engages in close designs; an intriguer.

Factionous and rich, bold at the council board,
But cautious in the field, he shun'd the sword; }
A close caballer, and tongue-valiant lord. } Dryden.

CABA'LLINE. adj. [caballinus, Lat.] Belonging to a horse; as, caballine aloes, or horse aloes.

CA'BARET. n. f. [French.] A tavern.

Suppose this servant passing by some cabaret, or tennis-court, where his comrades were drinking or playing, should stay with them, and drink or play away his money.

CA'BBAGE. n. f. [cabus, Fr. brassica, Lat.] A plant.

The leaves are large, fleshy, and of a glaucous colour; the flowers consist of four leaves, which are succeeded by long taper pods, containing several round acrid seeds. The species are, 1. The common white cabbage. 2. The red cabbage. 3. The Russian cabbage. 4. The flat-sided cabbage. 5. The sugar loaf cabbage. 6. The early Battersea cabbage. 7. The white Savoy cabbage. 8. The green Savoy cabbage. 9. The boorcole. 10. The green broccoli. 11. The Italian broccoli. 12. The turnep-rooted cabbage. 13. The cauliflower. 14. The turnep cabbage. 15. Curled colewort. 16. The musk cabbage. 17. Branching tree cabbage, from the sea coast. 18. Brown broccoli. 19. Common colewort. 20. Perennial Alpine colewort. 21. Perfoliated wild cabbage, with a white flower. 22. Perfoliated cabbage, with a purple flower. The common white, red, flat, and long-sided cabbages, are chiefly cultivated for winter use; the seeds of which must be sown in the middle of March, in beds of good fresh earth. The Russian cabbage was formerly in much greater esteem than at present, and is rarely brought to the market. The early Battersea and sugar-loaf cabbages, are called Michaelmas cabbages; the season for sowing them is in the middle of July, in an open spot of ground. The Savoy cabbages are propagated for winter use, as being generally esteemed the better, when pinched by frost. The boorcole is never eaten till the frost has rendered it tender. The turnep cabbage was formerly more cultivated in England than at present; and some esteem this kind for soups, but it is generally too strong, and seldom good, except in hard winters. The curled colewort is more generally esteemed, and is fit for use after Christmas, and continues good until April. The musk cabbage has, through negligence, been almost lost in England, though, for eating, it is one of the best kinds we have; for it is always looser, and the leaves more crisp and tender, and has a most agreeable musky scent when cut. It will be fit for use in October, November, and December. The branching sea cabbage is found wild in England, and on the sea coast, and is sometimes gathered by the poor inhabitants in the spring, and eaten; but it is apt to be strong and bitter. The brown broccoli is by many esteemed, though it does not deserve a place in the kitchen garden, where the Roman broccoli can be obtained, which is much sweeter, and will continue longer in season. The Roman broccoli has large heads, which appear in the center of the plants like clusters of buds. The heads should be cut before they run up to seed, with about four or five inches of the stems; the skin of these stems should be stripped off, before they are boiled; they will eat very tender, and little inferior to asparagus. The common colewort is now almost lost near London, where their markets are usually supplied with cabbage or Savoy plants instead of them; which, being tenderer and more delicate, are better worth cultivating. The perennial Alpine colewort is also little cultivated at present. The other two sorts of wild cabbage are varieties fit for a botanick garden, but are plants of no use. The cauliflowers have, of late years, been so far improved in England, as to exceed, in goodness and magnitude, what are produced in most parts of Europe; and, by the skill of the gardeners, are continued for several months together; but the most common season for them is in May, June, and July. Miller.

C A B

Cole, cabbage, and coleworts, which are soft and demulcent, without any acidity; the jelly, or juice, of red cabbage, baked in an oven, and mixed with honey, is an excellent pectoral.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

TO CA'BBAGE. v. a. [a cant word among taylors.] To steal in cutting clothes.

Your taylor, instead of shreads, cabbages whole yards of cloth. Arbuthnot's History of J. Bull.

CA'BBAGE TREE. n. f. A species of palm-tree; which see.

It is very common in the Caribee islands, where it grows to a prodigious height. The leaves of this tree envelope each other, so that those which are inclosed, being deprived of the air, are blanched; which is the part the inhabitants cut for plaits for hats, &c. and the genuine, or young shoots, are pickled, and sent into England by the name of cabbage; but whenever this part is cut out, the trees are destroyed; nor do they rise again from the old roots; so that there are very few trees left remaining near plantations, except for ornament; for their stems being exceeding straight, and their leaves being produced very regularly at top, will afford a most beautiful prospect; for which reason, the planters generally spare two or three of them near their habitations. Miller.

CA'BBAGE-WORM. n. f. An insect.

CA'BIN. n. f. [cabane, Fr. chabin, Welch, a cottage.]

1. A small room.

So long in secret cabin there he held
Her captive to his sensual desire,
Till that with timely fruit her belly swell'd,
And bore a boy unto a savage fire. Fairy Queen, b. i. c. vi.

2. A small chamber in a ship.

Give thanks you have lived so long, and make yourself ready, in your cabin, for the mischance of the hour, if it so happen. Shakesp. Tempest.

Men may not expect the use of many cabins, and safety at once, in the sea service. Raleigh's Essays.

The chessboard, we say, is in the same place it was, if it remain in the same part of the cabin, though, perhaps, the ship it is in, sails all the while. Locke.

3. A cottage, or small house.

Come from marble bow'rs, many times the gay harbour of anguish,
Unto a silly cabin, though weak, yet stronger against woes. Sidney, b. i.

Neither should that odious custom be allowed, of flaying off the green surface of the ground, to cover their cabins, or make up their ditches. Swift.

4. A

4. A tent.

Some of green boughs their slender cabins frame,
Some lodged were Tortosa's streets about. Fairfax, b. i.

TO CA'BIN. v. n. [from the noun.] To live in a cabin.

I'll make you feed on berries and on roots,
And feed on curds and whey, and suck the goat,
And cabin in a cave. Shakefp. Titus Andronicus.

TO CA'BIN. v. a. To confine in a cabin.

Fleance is 'scap'd :

Then comes my fit again ; I had else been perfect ;
Whole as the marble, founded as the rock ;
As broad and gen'ral as the casing air ;
But now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in,
To saucy doubts and fear. Shakefp. Macbeth.

CA'BINED. adj. [from cabin.] Belonging to a cabin.

The nice morn, on the Indian steep,
From her cabin'd loophole peep. Milton.

CA'BINET. n. f. [cabinet, Fr.]

1. A set of boxes or drawers for curiosities ; a private box.

At both corners of the farther side, by way of return, let there be two delicate or rich cabinets, daintily paved, richly hanged, glazed with crystalline glass, and a rich cupola in the midst, and all other elegancy that may be thought on. Bacon's Essays.

Who sees a soul in such a body set,
Might love the treasure for the cabinet. Ben. Johnson.

In vain the workman shew'd his wit,

With rings and hinges counterfeit,

To make it seem, in this disguise,

A cabinet to vulgar eyes. Swift.

2. Any place in which things of value are hidden.

Thy breast hath ever been the cabinet,
Where I have lock'd my secrets. Denham's Sophy.

We cannot discourse of the secret, but by describing our duty ; but so much duty must needs open a cabinet of mysteries.
Taylor's Worthly Communicant.

3. A private room in which consultations are held.

You began in the cabinet what you afterwards practised in the camp. Dryden.

4. In Spenser it seems to signify a hut, or house.

Hearken awhile in thy green cabinet,
The lawrel song of careful Colinet. Spenser's Pastorals.

CA'BINET-COUNCIL. n. f. A council held in a private manner, with unusual privacy and confidence.

The doctrine of Italy, and practice of France, in some kings times, hath introduced cabinet-councils. Bacon's Essays.

From the highest to the lowest it is universally read ; from the cabinet-council to the nursery. Gay to Swift.

CA'BINET-MAKER. n. f. [from cabinet and make.] One that makes small nice work in wood.

The root of an old white thorn will make very fine boxes and combs ; so that they would be of great use for the cabinet- makers, as well as the turners, and others. Mortimer.

CA'BLE. n. f. [cabl, Welch ; cabel, Dutch.] The great rope of a ship to which the anchor is fastened.

What though the mast be now blown overboard,
The cable broke, the holding anchor lost,
And half our sailors swallow'd in the flood,
Yet lives our pilot still ? Shakefp. Henry VI. p. iii.

True it is, that the length of the cable is the life of the ship in all extremities ; and the reason is, because it makes so many bendings and waves, as the ship, riding at that length, is not able to stretch it ; and nothing breaks that is not stretched.

Raleigh's Essays.

The cables crack, the sailors fearful cries
Ascend ; and sable night involves the skies. Dryden's Virg.

CA'BURNS. n. f. Small ropes used in ships. Diſt.

CA'CAO. See CHOCOLATENUT.

CACHE'CTICAL. } adj. [from cachexy.] Having an ill habit of CACHE'CTICK. } body ; shewing an ill habit.

Young and florid blood, rather than vapid and cachectical.

Arbuthnot on Air.

The crude chyle swims in the blood, and appears as milk in the blood, let out of some persons who are generally cachectick.

Floyer on the Humours.

CACHE'XY. n. f. [καχεξία.] A general word to express a great variety of symptoms ; most commonly it denotes such a dis-temperature of the humours, as hinders nutrition, and weakens the vital and animal functions, proceeding from weakness of the fibres, and an abuse of the non-naturals, and often from severe acute distempers. Arbuthnot on Diet.

CACHINNA'TION. n. f. [cachinnatio, Lat.] A loud laughter. D.

CA'CKEREL. n. f. A fish, said to make those who eat it laxative.

TO CACKLE. v. n. [kaeckelen, Dutch.]

1. To make a noise as a goose.

The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought

No better a musician than the wren. Shakefp. M. of Venice.

Goose, if I had you upon Sarum plain,

I'd drive thee cackling home to Camelot. Shakefp. K. Lear.

Or rob the Roman geese of all their glories,

And save the state, by cackling to the tories. Pope.

2. Sometimes it is used for the noise of a hen.

VOL. I.

Now to my story I return again :

The trembling widow, and her daughters twain,

This woful cackling cry, with horror heard,

Of those distracted damsels in the yard. Dryden's Fab.

3. To laugh ; to giggle.

Then Nic. grinned, cackled, and laughed, till he was like to kill himself, and seemed to be so pleased, that he fell a frisking and dancing about the room. Arbuthnot's J. Bull.

CA'CKLE. n. f. [from the verb.] The voice of a goose or fowl.

The silver goose before the shining gate

There flew, and, by her cackle, sav'd the state. Dryden.

CAC'KLER. n. f. [from cackle.]

1. A fowl that cackles.

2. A tattler ; a tatler.

CACOCY'MICAL. } adj. [from cacochymy.] Having the humours

CACOCY'MICK. } corrupted.

It will prove very advantageous, if only cacochymick, to clarify his blood with a laxative. Harvey on Consumptions.

If the body be cacochymical, the tumours are apt to degenerate into very venomous and malignant abscesses. Wiseman.

The ancient writers distinguished putrid fevers, by putrefac-tion of blood, choler, melancholy, and phlegm ; and this is to be explained by an effervescence happening in a particular caco- chymical blood. Floyer on the Humours.

CACOCY'MY. n. f. [κακοχυμία.] A depravation of the humours from a sound state, to what the physicians call by a general name of a cacochymy. Spots, and discolourations of the skin, are signs of weak fibres ; for the lateral vessels, which lie out of the road of circulation, let gross humours pass, which could not, if the vessels had their due degree of stricture.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Strong beer, a liquor that attributes the better half of its ill qualities to the hops, consisting of an acrimonious fiery nature, sets the blood, upon the least cacochymy, into an orgasmus, by an ill ferment. Harvey on Consumptions.

CACO'PHONY. n. f. [κακοφωνία.] A bad sound of words.

TO CACU'MINATE. v. a. [cacumino, Lat.] To make sharp or pyramidal. Diſt.

CADA'VEROUS. adj. [cadaver, Lat.] Having the appearance of a dead carcass ; having the qualities of a dead carcass.

In vain do they scruple to approach the dead, who livingly are cadaverous, for fear of any outward pollution, whose temper pollutes themselves. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ix. c. 10.

The urine, long detained in the bladder, as well as glass, will grow red, foetid, cadaverous, and alkaline. The case is the same with the stagnant waters of hydropical persons.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CA'DDIS. n. f.

1. A kind of tape or ribbon.

He hath ribbons of all the colours of the rainbow ; inkles, caddises, cambricks, lawns ; why, he fings them over as if they were gods and goddesses. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.

2. A kind of worm or grub found in a case of straw.

He especially loves the mayfly, which is bred of the cod-worm, or caddis ; and these make the trout bold and lusty.

Walton's Angler.

CADE. n. f. [It is deduced, by Skinner, from cadeler, Fr. an old word, which signifies to breed up tenderly.] Tame ; soft ; delicate ; as a cade lamb, a lamb bred at home.

TO CADE. v. a. [from the noun.] To breed up in softness.

CADE. n. f. [cadus, Lat.] A barrel.

We John Cade, so termed of our supposed father.—Or rather of stealing a cade of herrings. Shakefp. Henry VI. p. ii.

Soon as thy liquor from the narrow cells
Of close press'd husks is freed, thou must refrain

Thy thirsty soul ; let none persuade to broach

Thy thick, unwholsome, undigested ca des. Philips.

CADE-WORM. n. f. The same with caddis.

CA'DENCE. } n. f. [cadence, Fr.]

CA'DENCY. } n. f. [cadence, Fr.]

1. Fall ; state of sinking ; decline.

Now was the sun in western cadence low
From noon ; and gentle airs, due at their hours,
To fan the earth, now wak'd. Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 92.

2. The fall of the voice.

The sliding, in the close or cadence, hath an agreement with the figure in rhetoric, which they call præter expectatum ; for there is a pleasure even in being deceived. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

There be words not made with lungs,

Sententious show'rs ! O ! let them fall,

Their cadence is rhetorical. Craſhaw.

3. The flow of verses, or periods.

The words, the versification, and all the other elegancies of sound, as cadences, and turns of words upon the thought, perform exactly the same office both in dramatick and epick poetry. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The cadency of one line must be a rule to that of the next ;
as the sound of the former must slide gently into that which follows. Dryden.

4. The tone or sound.

Hollow rocks retain
The sound of bluff'ring winds, which all night long

C A I

Had rous'd the sea, now with horse cadence lull
Sea-faring men, o'erwatch'd. Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 287.
He hath a confused remembrance of words since he left the university; he hath lost half their meaning, and puts them together with no regard, except to their cadence. Swift.

5. In horsemanship.

Cadence is an equal measure or proportion, which a horse observes in all his motions, when he is thoroughly managed.

Farrier's Dict.

CA'DENT. adj. [cadens, Lat.] Falling down.

CADE'T. n. f. [cadet, Fr. pronounced cadè.]

1. The younger brother.

2. The youngest brother.

Joseph was the youngest of the twelve, and David the eleventh son, and the cadet of Jesse. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. A volunteer in the army, who serves in expectation of a commission.

CA'DEW. n. f. A straw worm. See CADDIS. Dict.

CA'DGER. n. f. A huckster; one who brings butter, eggs, and poultry, from the country to market.

CA'DI. n. f. A magistrate among the Turks, whose office seems to answer to that of a justice of peace.

CADILLACK. n. f. A sort of pear; which see.

CAECIAS. n. f. [Lat.] A wind from the north.

Now, from the north,

Boreas and Cæcias and Argestes loud

And Thracias rend the woods, and seas upturn.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 699.

CÆSAREAN. See CESARIAN.

CÆSURA. n. f. [Lat.] A figure in poetry, by which a short syllable after a complete foot is made long.

CAFTAN. n. f. [Persick.] A Persian vest or garment.

CAG. n. f. A barrel or wooden vessel, containing four or five gallons.

CAGE. n. f. [cage, Fr. from cavea, Lat.]

1. An inclosure of twigs or wire, in which birds are kept.

See whether a cage can please a bird? or whether a dog grow not fiercer with tying? Sidney.

He taught me how to know a man in love; in which cage of rushes, I am sure, you are not a prisoner.

Shakespeare. As you like it.

Though slaves, like birds that sing not in a cage,

They lost their genius, and poetick rage;

Homers again and Pindars may be found,

And his great actions with their numbers crown'd. Waller.

And parrots, imitating human tongue,

And singing birds in silver cages hung;

And ev'ry fragrant flow'r, and od'rous green,

Were fort'd well, with lumps of amber laid between.

Dryden's Fables.

A man recurs to our fancy, by remembering his garment, a beast, bird, or fish, by the cage, or court-yard, or cistern, wherein it was kept. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

The reason why so few marriages are happy, is, because young ladies spend their time in making nets, not in making cages. Swift's Thoughts on various Subjects.

2. A place for wild beasts, inclosed with palisadoes.

3. A prison for petty malefactors.

To CAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose in a cage.

He swoln, and pamp'rd with high fare,

Sits down, and snorts, cag'd in his basket-chair. Donne.

CAIMAN. n. f. The American name of a crocodile.

To CAJO'LE. v. a. [cageoller, Fr.] To flatter; to sooth; to coax: a low word.

Thought he, 'tis no mean part of civil

State-prudence, to cajole the devil. Hudibras, cant. ii. p. iii.

The one affronts him, while the other cajoles and pities him; takes up his quarrel, shakes his head at it, clasps his hand upon his breast, and then protests and protests. L'Estrange.

CAJO'LER. n. f. [from cajole.] A flatterer; a wheedler.

CAJO'LERY. n. f. [cajolerie, Fr.] Flattery.

CAISSON. n. f. [French.] A chest of bombs or powder, laid in the enemy's way, to be fired at their approach.

CA'ITIFF. n. f. [cattivo, Ital. a slave; whence it came to signify a bad man, with some implication of meanness; as knave in English, and fur in Latin; so certainly does slavery destroy virtue.

Ἡμισυ τῆς ἀρετῆς ἀποάνωται δόλον ἡμᾶς. Homer.

A slave and a scoundrel are signified by the same words in many languages.] A mean villain; a despicable knave.

Vile caitiff, vassal of dread and despair,

Unworthy of the common breathed air;

Why livest thou, dead dog, a longer day,

And dost not unto death thyself prepare? Fairy Queen, b. ii.

'Tis not impossible

But one, the wicked 'st caitiff on the ground,

May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute,

As Angelo.

Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.

The wretched caitiff, all alone,

As he believ'd, began to moan,

And tell his story to himself.

Hudibras, p. iii. c. iii.

CAKE. n. f. [cuch, Teutonic.]

1. A kind of delicate bread.

You must be seeing christnings? do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude rascals? Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

My cake is dough, but I'll in among the rest,

Out of hope of all, but my share of the feast.

Shakespeare. Taming of the Shrew.

The dismal day was come, the priests prepare

Their heaven'd cakes, and fillets for my hair. Dryden's Æn.

2. Any thing of a form rather flat than high; by which it is sometimes distinguished from a loaf.

There is a cake that groweth upon the side of a dead tree, that hath gotten no name, but it is large and of a chestnut colour, and hard and pithy. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 552.

Then when the fleecy skies new cloath the wood,

And cakes of rustling ice come rolling down the flood.

Dryden's Virgil, Georg. i. l. 418.

To CAKE. v. n. [from the noun.] To harden, as dough in the oven.

This burning matter, as it sunk very leisurely, had time to cake together, and form the bottom, which covers the mouth of that dreadful vault that lies underneath it. Addison on Italy.

This is that very Mab,

That plats the manes of horses in the night,

And cakes the elflocks in foul fluttish hairs,

Which, once entangl'd, much misfortune bodes. Shakespeare.

He rins'd the wound,

And wash'd away the strings and clotted blood,

That cak'd within.

Addison.

CALABA'SH Tree.

It hath a flower consisting of one leaf, divided at the brim into several parts; from whose cup rises the pointal, in the hinder part of the flower; which afterwards becomes a fleshy fruit, having an hard shell. They rise to the height of twenty-five or thirty feet in the West Indies, where they grow naturally in woods, and the savannas. The shells are used by the negroes for cups, as also for making instruments of musick, by making a hole in the shell, and putting in small stones, with which they make a sort of rattle. Miller.

CALAMA'NCO. n. f. [a word derived, probably by some accident, from calamancus, Lat. which, in the middle ages, signified a hat.] A kind of woollen stuff.

He was of a bulk and stature larger than ordinary, had a red coat, flung open to shew a calamanco waistcoat. Tatler, N° 96.

CA'LAMINE, or Lapis Calaminaris. n. f. A kind of fossile bituminous earth, which, being mixed with copper, changes it into brass; it is dug in barren rocky ground, and is often found in lead mines, or has lead mixed with it. It is used as an abso-rrent and drier, in outward medicinal applications, but is seldom given inwardly.

We must not omit those, which, though not of so much beauty, yet are of greater use, viz. loadstones, whetstones of all kinds, limestones, calamine, or lapis calaminaris. Locke.

CA'LAMINT. n. f. [calamintha, Lat.] The name of a plant.

It hath a long tubulous flower, which opens at the top into two lips; the upper lip is roundish, and divided into two segments: these flowers are produced from the joints of the stalks, at the footstalks of the leaves, in bunches, upon pretty long pedicles, or footstalks. This plant grows wild, and is used in medicine. Miller.

CALA'MITOUS. adj. [calamitosus, Lat.]

1. Miserable; involved in distress; oppressed with infelicity; unhappy; wretched; applied to men.

This is a gracious provision God Almighty hath made in favour of the necessitous and calamitous; the state of some, in this life, being so extremely wretched and deplorable, if compared with others. Calamy.

2. Full of misery; distressful; applied to external circumstances.

What calamitous effects the air of this city wrought upon us the last year, you may read in my discourse of the plague.

Harvey on Consumptions.

Strict necessity

Subdues me, and calamitous constraint!

Left on my head both sin and punishment,

However insupportable, be all

Devolv'd.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 132.

Much rather I shall chuse

To live the poorest in my tribe, than richest,

And be in that calamitous prison left. Milton's Agonistes.

In this sad and calamitous condition, deliverance from an op-pressour would have even revived them. South.

CALA'MITOUSNESS. n. f. [from calamitous.] Misery; distress.

CALA'MITY. n. f. [calamitas, Lat.] Misfortune; cause of misery; distress.

Another ill accident is drought, and the spindling of the corn, which with us is rare, but in hotter countries common; insomuch as the word calamity was first derived from calamus, when the corn could not get out of the stalk. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Which infinite calamity shall cause

To human life, and household peace confound. Par. L. b. x.

From

From adverse shores in safety let her hear
Foreign calamity, and distant war;
Of which, great heav'n, let her no portion bear. Prior.
CALAMUS. n. f. [Lat.] A sort of reed or sweet scented wood, mentioned in scripture with the other ingredients of the sacred perfumes. It is a knotty root, reddish without, and white within, which puts forth long and narrow leaves, and brought from the Indies. The prophets speak of it as a foreign commodity of great value. These sweet reeds have no smell when they are green, but when they are dry only. Their form differs not from other reeds, and their smell is perceived upon entering the marshes. Calmet.

Take thou also unto thee principal spices of pure myrrh, of sweet cinnamon, and of sweet calamus. Exodus, xxx. 23.
CALA'SH. n. f. [caleche, Fr.] A small carriage of pleasure.
Daniel, a sprightly swain, that us'd to flash
The vigorous steeds, that drew his lord's calash.
King's Mully of Mountown.

The ancients used calashes, the figures of several of them being to be seen on ancient monuments. They are very simple, light, and drove by the traveller himself. Arbuthnot on Coins.

CALCEATED. adj. [calceatus, Lat.] Shod; fitted with shoes.
CALCEDONIVS. n. f. [Lat.] A kind of precious stone.
Calcedonius is of the agat kind, and of a misty grey, clouded with blue, or with purple. Woodward on Fossils.

TO CALCINATE. See TO CALCINE.
CALCINATION. n. f. [from calcine; calcination, Fr.] Such a management of bodies by fire, as renders them reducible to powder; wherefore it is called chymical pulverization. This is the next degree of the power of fire beyond that of fusion; for when fusion is longer continued, not only the more subtile particles of the body itself fly off, but the particles of fire likewise insinuate themselves in such multitudes, and are so blended through its whole substance, that the fluidity, first caused by the fire, can no longer subsist. From this union arises a third kind of body, which, being very porous and brittle, is easily reduced to powder; for, the fire having penetrated everywhere into the pores of the body, the particles are both hindered from mutual contact, and divided into minute atoms. Quincy.

Divers residences of bodies are wont to be thrown away, as soon as the distillation or calcination of the body that yielded them is ended. Boyle.

This may be effected, but not without a calcination, or reducing it by art into a subtile powder. Brown's Vulgar Err.
CALCINATORY. n. f. [from calcinate.] A vessel used in calcination.

TO CALCINE. v. a. [calciner, Fr. from calx, Lat.]
1. To burn in the fire to a calx, or friable substance. See CAL-
CINATION.

In hardening, by baking without melting, the heat hath these degrees; first, it induratheth, then maketh fragile, and, lastly, it doth calcinate. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 87.

The solids seem to be earth, bound together with some oil;
for if a bone be calcined, so as the least force will crumble it, being immerfed in oil, it will grow firm again.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To burn up.
Firy disputes that union have calcin'd,
Almost as many minds as men we find. Denham.

TO CALCINE. v. n. To become a calx by heat.
This crystal is a pellucid fissile stone, clear as water, and without colour, enduring a red heat without losing its transparency, and, in a very strong heat, calcining without fusion.
Newton's Opticks.

TO CALCULATE. v. a. [calculus, Fr. from calculus, Lat. a little stone or bead, used in operations of numbers.]

1. To compute; to reckon.
2. To compute the situation of the planets at any certain time.
A cunning man did calculate my birth,
And told me, that by water I should die. Shakesp. Hen. VI.
Why all these fires, why all these gliding ghosts,
Why old men fools, and children calculate,
Why all those things change from their ordinance?

Who were there then in the world, to observe the births of those first men, and calculate their nativities, as they sprawled out of ditches? Bentley.

3. To adjust; to project for any certain end.
The reasonableness of religion clearly appears, as it tends so directly to the happiness of men, and is, upon all accounts, calculated for our benefit. Tillotson.

CALCULATION. n. f. [from calculate.]
1. A practice, or manner of reckoning; the art of numbering.
Cypher, that great friend to calculation; or rather, which changeth calculation, into easy computation. Holder on Time.

2. A reckoning; the result of arithmetical operation.
If then their calculation be true; for so they reckon. Hooker.

Being different from calculations of the ancients, their observations confirm not ours. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CALCULATOR. n. f. [from calculate.] A computer; a reckoner.

CALCULATORY. adj. [from calculate.] Belonging to calculation.

CALCULE. n. f. [calculus, Lat.] Reckoning; compute.
The general calcule, which was made in the last perambulation, exceeded eight millions. Howel's Vocal Forest.

CALCULOSE. } adj. [from calculus, Lat.] Stony; gritty.
CALCULOUS. }

The volatile salt of urine will coagulate spirits of wine; and thus, perhaps, the stones, or calculose concretions in the kidney or bladder, may be produced. Brown's Vulgar Err.

I have found, by opening the kidneys of a calculous person, that the stone is formed earlier than I have suggested. Shakesp.
CALCULUS. n. f. [Latin.] The stone in the bladder.

CALDRON. n. f. [chauldron, Fr. from calidus, Lat.] A pot;
boiler; a kettle.

In the midst of all
There placed was a caldron wide and tall,
Upon a mighty furnace, burning hot. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Some strip the skin, some portion out the spoil;
The limbs, yet trembling, in the caldrons boil;
Some on the fire the reeking entrails broil. Dryden's Æn.
In the late eruptions, this great hollow was like a vast caldron, filled with glowing and melted matter, which, as it boiled over in any part, ran down the sides of the mountain.
Addison's Remarks on Italy.

CALECHE. See CALASH.
CALEFACTION. n. f. [from calefacio, Lat.]

1. The act of heating any thing.
2. The state of being heated.

CALEFACTIVE. adj. [from calefacio, Lat.] That which makes any thing hot; heating.

CALEFACTORY. adj. [from calefacio, Lat.] That which heats.

TO CALEFY. v. n. [calefio, Latin.] To grow hot; to be heated.

Crystal will calefy unto electricity; that is, a power to attract straws, or light bodies, and convert the needle, freely placed. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 1.

CALNDAR. n. f. [calendarium, Lat.] A register of the year, in which the months, and stated times, are marked, as festivals and holidays.

What hath this day deserv'd? what hath it done,
That it in golden letter should be set
Among the high tides, in the calendar? Shakesp. K. John.
We compute from calendars differing from one another; the compute of the one anticipating that of the other.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 12.

Curs'd be the day when first I did appear;
Let it be blotted from the calendar,
Lest it pollute the month. Dryden's Fab.

TO CALENDER. v. a. [calendrer, Fr. Skinner.] To dress cloth; to lay the nap of cloth smooth.

CALENDER. n. f. [from the verb.] A hot press; a press in

CALENDS. n. f. [calendæ, Lat. It has no singular.] The first day of every month among the Romans.

CALENTURE. n. f. [from caleo, Lat.] A distemper peculiar to sailors, in hot climates; wherein they imagine the sea to be green fields, and will throw themselves into it, if not restrained.
Quincy.

And for that lethargy was there no cure,
But to be cast into a calenture. Denham.

So, by a calenture misled,
The mariner with rapture sees,
On the smooth ocean's azure bed,
Enamell'd fields, and verdant trees;
With eager haste, he longs to rove
In that fantastick scene, and thinks
It must be some enchanted grove;
And in he leaps, and down he sinks. Swift.

CALF. n. f. calves in the plural. [cealf, Saxon; kalf, Dutch.]

1. The young of a cow.
The colt hath about four years of growth; and so the fawn, and so the calf. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 759.
Acofta tells us of a fowl in Peru, called condores, which will, of themselves, kill and eat up a whole calf at a time.
Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

Ah! Blouzelind, I love thee more by half,
Than does their fawns, or cows the new-fall'n calf. Gay.

2. Calves of the lips, mentioned by Hosea, signify sacrifices of praise and prayers, which the captives of Babylon address'd to God, being no longer in a condition to offer sacrifices in his temple. Calmet.

Take with you words, and turn to the Lord, and say unto him, Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously: so will we render the calves of our lips. Hosea, xiv. 2.

3. The thick, plump, bulbous part of the leg. [kalf, Dutch.]
Into her legs I'd have love's issues fall,
And all her calf into a gouty small.

And calls forth all his spots on every side. Cowley.

See Dionysius Homer's thoughts refine,
And call new beauties forth from ev'ry line. Pope.

11. To stigmatize with some opprobrious denomination.
Deafness unqualifies men for all company, except friends; whom I can call names, if they do not speak loud enough. Swift to Pope.

12. To call back. To revoke; to retract.
He also is wise, and will bring evil, and will not call back his words; but will arise against the house of the evil doers, and against the help of them that work iniquity. Isaiah, xxxi. 2.

13. To call for. To demand; to require; to claim.
Madam, his majesty doth call for you,
And for your grace, and you, my noble lord. Shakesp.

You see, how men of merit are fought after; the undervener may sleep, when the man of action is called for. Shakesp.

Among them he a spirit of phrensy sent,
Who hurt their minds,
And urg'd you on, with mad desire,
To call in haste for their destroyer. Milton's Agonistes.

For master, or for servant, here to call,
Was all alike, where only two were all. Dryden's Fab.

He commits every sin that his appetite calls for, or perhaps his constitution or fortune can bear. Rogers.

14. To call in. To resume money at interest.
Horace describes an old usurer, as so charmed with the pleasures of a country life, that, in order to make a purchase, he called in all his money; but what was the event of it? why, in a very few days after, he put it out again. Addison. Spectator.

15. To call in. To resume any thing that is in other hands.
If clipped money be called in all at once, and stopped from passing by weight, I fear it will stop trade, and put our affairs all at a stand. Locke.

Neither is any thing more cruel and oppressive in the French government, than their practice of calling in their money, after they have sunk it very low, and then coining it anew, at a higher value. Swift.

16. To call in. To summon together; to invite.
The heat is past, follow me no farther now;
Call in the pow'rs, good cousin, Westmoreland. Shakesp.

He fears my subjects loyalty,
And now must call in strangers. Denham's Sophy.

17. To call on. To solicit for a favour, or a debt.
I would be loth to pay him before his day; what need I be so forward with him, that calls not on me? Shakesp. Henry IV.

18. To call on. To repeat solemnly.
Thrice call upon my name, thrice beat your breast,
And hail me thrice to everlasting rest. Dryden.

The Athenians, when they lost any men at sea, went to the shores, shores, and, calling thrice on their names, raised a cenotaph, or empty monument, to their memories. Broome on the Odys.

19. To call over. To read aloud a list or muster-roll.

20. To call out. To challenge; to summon to fight.

When their sov'reign's quarrel calls 'em out,

His foes to mortal combat they defy. Dryden's Virgil.

21. To call upon. To implore; to pray to.

Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me. Psalms i. 15.

CALL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A vocal address.

But would you sing, and rival Orpheus' strain,

The wond'ring forests soon should dance again:

The moving mountains hear the pow'ful call,

And headlong streams hang list'ning in their fall. Pope.

2. Requisition.

It may be feared, whether our nobility would contentedly suffer themselves to be always at the call, and to stand to the sentence of a number of mean persons. Hooker, Preface.

But death comes not at call; justice divine

Mends not her slowest pace, for pray'rs or cries. Par. Lost.

3. Divine vocation; summons to true religion.

Yet he at length, time to himself best known,

Rememb'ring Abraham, by some wond'rous call,

May bring them back repentant and sincere. Par. Regained.

St. Paul himself believed he did well, and that he had a call to it, when he persecuted the christians, whom he confidently thought in the wrong: but yet it was he, and not they, who were mistaken. Locke.

4. A summons from heaven; an impulse.

How justly then will impious mortals fall,

Whose pride would soar to heav'n without a call? Roscomm.

Those who to empire by dark paths aspire,

Still plead a call to what they most desire. Dryden.

5. Authority; command.

Oh! Sir, I wish he were within my call, or your's. Denb.

6. A demand; a claim.

Dependence is a perpetual call upon humanity, and a greater incitement to tenderness and pity, than any other motive whatsoever. Addison, Spectator, N° 181.

7. An instrument to call birds.

For those birds or beasts were made from such pipes or calls, as may express the several tones of those creatures, which are represented. Wilkins's Mathemat. Magick.

8. Calling; vocation; employment.

Now, through the land, his cure of souls he stretch'd,

And, like a primitive apostle, preach'd:

Still chearful, ever constant to his call;

By many follow'd, lov'd by most, admir'd by all. Dryden.

9. A nomination.

Upon the sixteenth was held the serjeants feast at Ely place, there being nine serjeants of that call. Bacon's Henry VII.

CA'LLAT. } n. f. A trull.

CA'LEET. }

He call'd her whore; a beggar, in his drink,

Could not have laid such terms upon his callet. Shakesp.

CA'LLING. n. f. [from call.]

1. Vocation; profession; trade.

If God has interwoven such a pleasure with our ordinary calling, how much superiour must that be, which arises from the survey of a pious life? Surely, as much as christianity is nobler than a trade. South.

We find ourselves obliged to go on in honest industry in our callings. Rogers.

I cannot forbear warning you against endeavouring at wit in your sermons; because many of your calling have made themselves ridiculous by attempting it. Swift.

I left no calling for this idle trade,

No duty broke, no father disobey'd. Pope.

2. Proper station, or employment.

The Gauls found the Roman senators ready to die with honour in their callings. Swift.

3. Class of persons united by the same employment or profession.

It may be a caution to all christian churches and magistrates, not to impose celibacy on whole callings, and great multitudes of men or women, who cannot be supposable to have the gift of continence. Hammond.

4. Divine vocation; invitation or impulse to the true religion.

St. Peter was ignorant of the calling of the Gentiles.

Hakewell on Providence.

CA'LLIPERS. n. f. [of this word I know not the etymology, nor does any thing more probable occur, than that, perhaps, the word is corrupted from clippers, instruments with which any thing is clipped, inclosed or embraced.] Compasses with bowed shanks.

Callipers measure the distance of any round, cylindrick, conical body, either in their extremity, or any part less than the extreme; so that, when workmen use them, they open the two points to their described width, and turn so much stuff off the intended place, till the two points of the callipers fit just over their work. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

CALLO'SITY. n. f. [callosité, Fr.] A kind of swelling without pain, like that of the skin, by hard labour; and therefore, when wounds, or the edges of ulcers, grow so, they are said to be callous. Quincy.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet of his patient, as he finds the fibres loosen too much, are too flaccid, and produce funguses, or as they harden and produce callosities; in the first case, wine and spirituous liquours are useful, in the last hurtful. Arbuthnot on Diet.

CA'LLOUS. adj. [callus, Lat.]

1. Indurated; hardened; having the pores shut up.

In progress of time, the ulcers became sinuous and callous, with induration of the glands. Wise's Surgery.

2. Hardened; insensible.

Licentiousness has so long passed for sharpness of wit, and greatness of mind, that the conscience is grown callous. L'Estr.

The wretch is drench'd too deep,

His soul is stupid, and his heart asleep:

Fatten'd in vice, so callous and so gross,

He sins, and sees not, senseless of his loss. Dryden's Persius.

CA'LLOUSNESS. n. f. [from callous.]

1. Hardness; induration of the fibres:

The oftner we use the organs of touching, the more of these scales are formed, and the skin becomes the thicker, and so a callousness grows upon it. Cheyne's Philosoph. Principles.

2. Insensibility.

If they let go their hope of everlasting life with willingness, and entertain final perdition with exultation, ought they not to be esteemed destitute of common sense, and abandoned to a callousness and numbness of soul? Bentley.

CA'LLOW. adj. Unfledged; naked; without feathers.

Bursting with kindly rapture, forth disclos'd

Their callow young. Paradise Lost, b. vii. l. 420.

Then as an eagle, who, with pious care,

Was beating widely on the wing for prey,

To her now silent airy does repair,

And finds her callow infants forc'd away. Dryden.

How in small flights they know to try their young,

And teach the callow child her parent's song. Prior.

CA'LLUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. An induration of the fibres.

2. The hard substance by which broken bones are united.

CALM. adj. [calme, Fr. kalm, Dutch.]

1. Quiet; serene; not stormy; not tempestuous; applied to the elements.

Calm was the day, and, through the trembling air,

Sweet breathing Zephyrus did softly play

A gentle spirit, that lightly did allay

Hot Titan's beams, which then did glister fair. Spenser.

2. Undisturb'd; unruffled; applied to the passions.

It is no ways congruous, that God should be frightening men into truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence, and gentle methods of persuasion. Atterbury.

The queen her speech with calm attention hears,

Her eyes restrain the silver-streaming tears. Pope's Odyssey.

CALM. n. f.

1. Serenity; stillness; freedom from violent motion.

It seemeth most agreeable to reason, that the waters rather stood in a quiet calm, than that they moved with any raging or overbearing violence. Raleigh's History of the World.

Every pilot

Can steer the ship in calms; but he performs

The skilful part, can manage it in storms. Denham's Sophy.

Nor God alone in the still calm we find,

He mounts the storm, and walks upon the wind. Pope.

2. Freedom from disturbance; quiet; repose; applied to the passions.

Great and strange calms usually portend the most violent storms: and therefore, since storms and calms do always follow one another, certainly, of the two, it is much more eligible to have the storm first, and the calm afterwards: since a calm before a storm is commonly a peace of a man's own making; but a calm after a storm, a peace of God's. South.

To CALM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To still; to quiet.

Neptune we find busy in the beginning of the Æneis, to calm the tempest raised by Æolus. Dryden.

2. To pacify; to appease.

Jesus, whose bare word checked the sea, as much exerts himself in silencing the tempests, and calming the intestine storms within our breasts. Decay of Piety.

Those passions, which seem somewhat calmed, may be entirely laid asleep, and never more awakened. Atterbury.

He will'd to stay,

The sacred rites and hecatombs to pay,

And calm Minerva's wrath. Pope's Odyssey, b. iii. l. 175.

CA'LMER. n. f. [from calm.] The person or thing which has the power of giving quiet.

Angling was, after tedious study, a rest to his mind, a cheerer of his spirits, a diverter of sadness, a calmer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, a procurer of contentedness. Walton.

CA'LMELY. adv. [from calm.]

1. Without storms, or violence; serenity.

C A L

In nature, things move violently to their place, and calmly in their place; so virtue in ambition is violent, in authority settled and calm.
Bacon's Essays, N<sup>o</sup> 11.

His curled brows

Frown on the gentle stream, which calmly flows. Denham.

2. Without passions; quietly.

Chambers.

CA'MBER. n. f. [See CAMBERING.] A term among workmen.

Camber, a piece of timber cut arching, so as a weight considerable being set upon it, it may, in length of time, be induced to a straight.

CA'MBERING. n. f. A word mentioned by Skinner, as peculiar to shipbuilders, who say, that a place is cambering, when they mean arched. [from chambré, French.]

CA'MBRICK. n. f. [from Cambray, a city in Flanders, where it was principally made.] A kind of fine linen, used for ruffles, womens sleeves and caps.

He hath ribbons of all the colours of the rainbow; inkles, caddises, cambricks, and lawns.

Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Rebecca had, by the use of a looking-glass, and by the further use of certain attire, made of cambrick, upon her head, attained to an evil art.

Confed'rate in the cheat, they draw the throng,

And cambrick handkerchiefs reward the song. Gay's Trivia.

CAME. The preterite of to come.

Till all the pack came up, and ev'ry hound

Tore the sad huntsman, grov'ling on the ground. Addison.

CA'MEL. n. f. [camelus, Lat.] An animal very common in Arabia, Judea, and the neighbouring countries. One sort is large, and full of flesh, and fit to carry burdens of a thousand pounds weight, having one bunch upon its back. Another have two bunches upon their backs, like a natural saddle, and are fit either for burdens, or men to ride on. A third kind is leaner, and of a smaller size, called dromedaries, because of their swiftness; which are generally used for riding by men of quality. See DROMEDARY.

Camels have large solid feet, but not hard; in the spring, their hair falls entirely off, in less than three days time, when the flies are extremely uneasy to them. Camels, it is said, will continue ten or twelve days without eating or drinking, and keep water a long time in their stomach, for their refreshment. It is reported, that nature has furnished them, for this purpose, with a very large ventricle, with many bags closed within the coats of it, round about it, for reserving the water. But the Jesuits in China, where they dissected several camels, found no such bags. When a camel is upon a journey, his master follows him, singing and whistling; and the louder he sings, the better the camel goes. The flesh of camels is served up at the best tables, among the Arabians, Persians, and other eastern nations; but the use of it was forbid the Hebrews, they being ranked by Moses among the unclean creatures, Deut. xiv. 7.

Calmet.

Patient of thirst and toil,

Son of the desert! even the camel feels,

Shot through his wither'd heart, the fiery blast.

Thomson.

CAME'LOPARD. n. f. [from camelus and pardus, Lat.] An Abyssinian animal, taller than an elephant, but not so thick. He is so named, because he has a neck and head like a camel; he is spotted like a pard, but his spots are white upon a red ground. The Italians call him giaraffa.

Trevoux.

CA'MELOT. } n. f. [from camel.] A kind of stuff originally made by a mixture of silk and camels hair; it is now made with wool and silk.

This habit was not of camels skin, nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camelot, grograin, or the like; in as much as these stuffs are supposed to be made of the hair of that animal.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Mean-

Meantime the pastor shears their hoary beards,
And eases, of their hair, the loaden herds :

Their camelots warm in tents the soldier hold,
And shield the shiv'ring mariner from cold. Dryden's Virgil.

CAMERA OBSCURA. [Latin.] An optical machine used in a darkened chamber, so that the light coming only through a double convex glass, objects exposed to daylight, and opposite to the glass, are represented inverted upon any white matter placed in the focus of the glass. Martin.

CA'MERADE. n. f. [from camera, a chamber, Lat.] One that lodges in the same chamber; a bosom companion. By corruption we now use comrade.

Camerades with him, and confederates in his worthy design, Rymer's Tragedies of last Age.

CA'MERATED. adj. [cameratus, Lat.] Arched; roofed slope-wise.

CAMERA'TION. adj. [cameratio, Lat.] A vaulting or arching.

CAMISA'DO. n. f. [camisa, a shirt, Ital. camisium, low Lat.] An attack made by soldiers in the dark; on which occasion they put their shirts outward, to be seen by each other.

They had appointed the same night, whose darkness would have encreased the fear, to have given a camisado upon the English. Hayward.

CA'MISATED. adj. [from camisa, a shirt.] Dressed with the shirt outward.

CA'MLET. See CAMELOT.

He had on him a gown with wide sleeves, of a kind of water camlet, of an excellent azure colour. Bacon.

CA'MMOCK. n. f. [cammoc, Saxon.] An herb; the same with petty whin, or restharrow.

Its flower is papilionaceous, and succeeded by a swelling pod, sometimes long, and sometimes short, which is bivalve, and filled with kidney-shaped seeds.

There are many species of this plant, of which four sorts grow wild in England; and that called the prickly restharrow, with purple flowers, is used in medicine. The roots of this plant spread far under ground, and are so tough, that, in ploughing, it often stops the oxen. Miller.

CAMO'YS. adj. [camus, Fr.] Flat; level; depressed. It is only used of the nose.

Many Spaniards, of the race of Barbary Moors, though after frequent commixture, have not worn out the camoys nose unto this day. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 10.

CAMP. n. f. [camp, Fr. camp, Sax. from campus, Lat.] The order of tents, placed by armies when they keep the field. We use the phrase to pitch a camp, to encamp.

From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night,

The hum of either army stilly sounds. Shakesp. Hen. V.

Next, to secure our camp, and naval pow'rs,

Raise an embattel'd wall, with lofty tow'rs. Pope's Iliad.

TO CAMP. v. a. [from the noun.] To encamp; to lodge in tents, for hostile purposes.

Had our great palace the capacity

To camp this host, we would all sup together. Shakesp.

CAMP-FIGHT. n. f. An old word for combat.

For their trial by camp-fight, the accuser was, with the peril of his own body, to prove the accused guilty; and, by offering him his glove or gantlet, to challenge him to this trial. Hakewell.

CAMPA'IGN. } n. f. [campaigne, French; campania, Ital.]

CAMPANIA. }

1. A large, open, level tract of ground, without hills.

The contrary of all this happens in countries thinly inhabited, and especially in vast campanias, where there are few cities, besides what grow by the residence of kings. Temple.

Those grateful groves, that shade the plain,

Wher Tiber rolls majestic to the main,

And fattens, as he runs, the fair campaign. Garth's Ovid. }

2. The time for which any army keeps the field, without entering into quarters.

This might have hastened his march, which would have made a fair conclusion of the campaign. Clarendon.

An iliad rising out of one campaign. Addison.

CAMPA'NIFORM. adj. [of campana, a bell, and forma, Lat.] A term used of flowers, which are in the shape of a bell. Harris.

CAMPA'NULATE. adj. The same with campaniform.

CAMPE'STRAL. adj. [campestris, Lat.] Growing in fields.

The mountain beech is the whitest; but the campestral, or wild beech, is of a blacker colour, and more durable.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

CA'MPHIRE TREE. n. f. [camphora, Lat.]

It hath leaves like those of the pear tree, but full of ribs, which grow alternately on the branches; the flowers consist of one leaf, divided into five or six segments; the fruit is shaped like a nut, the shell tender, and the kernel bifid. There are two sorts of this tree; one is a native of the isle of Borneo, from which the best camphire is taken, which is supposed to be a natural exudation from the tree, produced in such places where the bark of the tree has been wounded or cut. The other sort is a native of Japan, which Dr. Kempfer describes to be a kind of bay, bearing black or purple berries, and from whence the inhabitants prepare their camphire, by making a simple decoction of the root and wood of this tree, cut into small pieces; but this sort of camphire is, in value, eighty or an hundred times less than the true Bornean camphire. Miller.

CA'MPHORATE. adj. [from camphora, Lat.] Impregnated with camphire.

By shaking the saline and camphorate liquours together, we easily confounded them into one high coloured liquor. Boyle.

CA'MPION. n. f. [lychnis, Lat.] A plant.

The leaves are whole, and grow opposite by pairs upon the stalks; the cup of the flower is whole, and either tubulous or swelling; the flower consists of five leaves, which expand in form of a clove gilliflower, and are generally heart shaped; the ovary, which rises in the centre of the calyx, becomes a conical fruit, which is wrapt up in the flower cup, and has commonly one cell, filled with seeds, which are roundish, angular, and kidney-shaped. Miller.

CA'MUS. n. f. [probably from camisa, Lat.] A thin dress, mentioned by Spenser.

And was yclad, for heat of scorching air,

All in filken camus, lilly white,

Purled upon with many a folded plight. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

CAN. n. f. [canne, Sax.] A cup; generally a cup made of metal, or some other matter than earth.

I hate it as an unfill'd can. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

One tree, the coco, affordeth stuff for housing, cloathing, shipping, meat, drink, and can. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

His empty can, with ears half worn away,

Was hung on high, to boast the triumph of the day. Dryden.

CAN. v. n. [konnen, Dutch. It is sometimes, though rarely, used alone; but is in constant use as an expression of the potential mood; as, I can do, thou canst do, I could do, thou couldst do. It has no other terminations.]

1. To be able; to have power.
In place there is licence to do good and evil, whereof the latter is a curse; for, in evil, the best condition is not to will; the second not to can. Bacon's Essays, N° 11.

O, there's the wonder!

Mecænas and Agrippa, who can most
With Cæsar, are his foes. His wife Octavia, Driv'n from his house, solicits her revenge,
And Dolabella, who was once his friend.

Dryden's All for Love.

He can away with no company, whose discourse goes beyond what claret and dissoluteness inspires. Locke.

2. It expresses the potential mood; as, I can do it.
If she can make me blest? She only can:
Empire, and wealth, and all she brings beside,
Are but the train and trappings of her love. Dryden.

3. It is distinguished from may, as power from permission; I can do it; it is in my power: I may do it; it is allowed me: but, in poetry, they are confounded.

4. Can is used of the person with the verb active, where may is used; of the thing, with the verb passive; as, I can do it; it may be done.

CANA'ILLE. n. f. [French.] The lowest people; the dregs; the lees; the offscouring of the people: a French term of reproach.

CANA'L. n. f. [canalis, Lat.]

1. A basin of water in a garden.

The walks and long canals reply. Pope.

2. Any tract or course of water made by art; as the canals in Holland.

3. [In anatomy.] A conduit or passage through which any of the juices of the body flow.

CANAL-COAL. n. f. A fine kind of coal, dug up in England. Even our canal-coal nearly equals the foreign jet.

Woodward on Fossils.

CANALI'LATED. adj. [from canaliculatus, Lat.] Channelled; made like a pipe or gutter. Dict.

CANA'RY. n. f. [from the Canary islands.] Wine brought from the Canaries; sack.

I will to my honest knight Falstaff, and drink canary with him.—I think I shall drink in pipe wine first with him; I'll make him dance. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

TO CANA'RY. v. a. A cant word, which seems to signify to frolick.

Master, will you win your love with a French brawl?—How mean'st thou, brawling in French?—No, my compleat master; but to jigg off a tune at the tongue's end, canary to it with your feet, humour it with turning up your eyelids.

Shakesp. Love's Labour Lost.

CANA'RY BIRD. An excellent singing bird, of a green colour, formerly bred in the Canaries, and nowhere else, but now bred in several parts of Europe, particularly Germany.

Of singing birds, they have linnets, goldfinches, ruddocks, canary birds, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers other.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

TO CANCEL. v. a. [canceller, Fr. from cancellis notare, to mark with cross lines.]

1. To cross a writing.

2. To efface; to obliterate in general.

Now welcome night, thou night so long expected,
That long day's labour doth at last defray,

And

And all my cares which cruel love collected,
Has summ'd in one, and cancelled for aye. Spenser.
Know then, I here forget all former griefs,
Cancel all grudge; repeal thee home again.

Shakesp. Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Thou whom avenging pow'rs obey,
Cancel my debt, too great to pay,
Before the sad accounting day. } Roscommon.

I pass the bills, my lords,
For cancelling your debts. Southerne's Spartan Dame.

CA'NCELLATED. particip. adj. [from cancel.] Cross-barred, marked with lines crossing each other.

The tail of the castor is almost bald, though the beaft is very hairy; and cancelled, with some resemblance to the scales of fishes. Grew's Musæum.

CANCELLA'TION. n. f. [from cancel.] According to Bartolus, is an expunging or wiping out of the contents of an instrument, by two lines drawn in the manner of a cross. Ayliffe's Parerg.

CANCER. n. f. [cancer, Lat.]

1. A crabfish.

2. The sign of the summer solstice.

When now no more th' alternate twins are fir'd,

And Cancer reddens with the solar blaze,
Short is the doubtful empire of the night Thomson.

3. A virulent swelling, or sore, not to be cured.

Any of these three may degenerate into a schirrus, and that schirrus into a cancer. Wiseman.

As when a cancer on the body feeds,
And gradual death from limb to limb proceeds;
So does the chilness to each vital part,
Spread by degrees, and creeps into the heart. Addison's Ovid.

TO CA'NCERATE. v. n. [from cancer.] To grow cancerous;
to become a cancer.

But striking his fist upon the point of a nail in the wall, his hand cancerated, he fell into a fever, and soon after died on't.

L'Estrange's Fables.

CANCERA'TION. n. f. [from cancerate.] A growing cancerous.

CA'NCEROUS. n. f. [from cancer.] Having the virulence and qualities of a cancer.

How they are to be treated when they are strumous, schirrhous, or cancerous, you may see in their proper places. Wisem.

CA'NCEROUSNESS. n. f. [from cancerous.] The state of being cancerous.

CA'NCRINE. adj. [from cancer.] Having the qualities of a crab.

CA'NDENT. adj. [candens, Lat.] Hot; in the highest degree of heat, next to fusion.

If a wire be heated only at one end, according as that end is cooled upward or downward, it respectively requires a verticity, as we have declared in wires totally candent.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 2.

CA'NDICANT. adj. [candicans, Lat.] Growing white; whitish.
Dict.

CANDID. adj. [candidus, Lat.]

1. White. This sense is very rare.

The box receives all black: but, pour'd from thence,
The stones came candid forth, the hue of innocence. Dryd.

2. Without malice; without deceit; fair; open; ingenuous.

The import of the discourse will, for the most part, if there be no designed fallacy, sufficiently lead candid and intelligent readers into the true meaning of it. Locke.

A candid judge will read each piece of wit,

With the same spirit that its authour writ. Pope.

CA'NDIDATE. n. f. [candidatus, Lat.] A competitor; one that solicites, or proposes himself for something of advancement.

So many candidates there stand for wit,

A place at court is scarce so hard to get. Anonymous.

One would be surpris'd to see so many candidates for glory.

Addison. Spect. N° 256.

2. It has generally for before the thing fought.

What could thus high thy rash ambition raise?

Art thou, fond youth, a candidate for praise? Pope.

3. Sometimes of.

Thy firstfruits of poesy were giv'n,

To make thyself a welcome inmate there,

While yet a young probationer,

And candidate of heav'n. Dryden.

CA'NDIDLY. adv. [from candid.] Fairly; without trick; without malice; ingenuously.

We have often desired, they would deal candidly with us; for if the matter stuck only there, we would propose, that every man should swear, that he is a member of the church of Ireland. Swift.

CA'NDIDNESS. n. f. [from candid.] Ingenuity; openness of temper; purity of mind.

It presently sees the guilt of a sinful action; and, on the other side, observes the candidness of a man's very principles, and the sincerity of his intentions. South.

TO CA'NDIFY. v. a. [candifico, Lat.] To make white; to whiten. Dict.

CANDLE. n. f. [candela, Lat.]

1. A light made of wax or tallow, furrounding a wick of flax or cotton.

Here burns my candle out, ay, here it dies,
Which, while it lasted, gave King Henry light. Shakesp.
We see that wax candles last longer than tallow candles, because wax is more firm and hard. Bacon's Nat. History.

Take a child, and, setting a candle before him, he shall find his pupil to contract very much, to exclude the light, with the brightness whereof it would otherwise be dazzled. Ray.

2. Light, or luminary.

By these blest candles of the night,

Had you been there, I think you would have begg'd

The ring of me, to give the worthy doctor.

Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

CA'NDLEBERRY TREE. See SWEET-WILLOW; of which it is a species.

CANDLEHO'LDER. n. f. [from candle and hold.]

1. He that holds the candle.

2. He that remotely assists.

Let wantons, light of heart,

Tickle the senseless rushes with their heels;

For I am proverb'd with a grandfire phrase,

To be a candleholder, and look on. Shakesp.

CA'NDLELIGHT. n. f. [from candle and light.] The light of a candle.

In darkness, candlelight may serve to guide men's steps, which, to use in the day, were madness. Hooker, b. ii. § 4.

Before the day was done, her work she sped,

And never went by candlelight to bed. Dryden's Fab.

The boding owl

Steals from her private cell by night,

And flies about the candlelight. Swift.

Such as are adapted to meals, will indifferently serve for dinners or suppers, only distinguishing between daylight and candlelight. Swift's Introduction to genteel Conversation.

2. The necessary candles for use.

I shall find him coals and candlelight. Molineux to Locke.

CA'NDLEMAS. n. f. [from candle and mas.] The feast of the purification of the Blessed Virgin, which was formerly celebrated with many lights in churches.

The harvest dinners are held by every wealthy man, or, as we term it, by every good liver, between Michaelmas and Can- dlemas. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

There is a general tradition in most parts of Europe, that inferreth the coldness of the succeeding winter, upon shining of the sun upon Candlemas day. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Come Candlemas nine years ago she dy'd,

And now lies bury'd by the yew-tree side. Gay.

CA'NDLESTICK. n. f. [from candle and stick.] The instrument that holds candles.

The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,

With torch-staves in their hands; and their poor jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the hide and hips.

Shakesp. Henry V.

These countries were once christian, and members of the church, and where the golden candlesticks did stand. Bacon.

I know a friend, who has converted the essays of a man of quality, into a kind of fringe for his candlesticks. Addison.

CA'NDLESTUFF. n. f. [from candle and stuff.] Kitchen stuff;
grease; tallow.

But then you will say, that their vapour can last but a short time; to that it may be answered, that, by the help of oil, and wax, and other candlestuff, the flame may continue, and the wick not burn. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 774.

CANDLEWA'STER. n. f. [from candle and waste.] That which consumes candles; a spendthrift.

Patch grief with proverbs, make misfortune drunk

With candlewasters. Shakesp. Much ado about Nothing.

CA'NDOCK. n. f. A weed that grows in rivers.

Let them dry six or twelve months, both to kill the water-weeds, as water-lilies, candocks, reate, and bulrushes, and also, that as these die for want of water, so grafs may grow on the pond's bottom. Walton's Angler.

CA'NDOUR. n. f. [candor, Lat.] Sweetness of temper; purity of mind; openness; ingenuity; kindness.

He should have so much of a natural candour and sweetness, mixed with all the improvement of learning, as might convey knowledge with a sort of gentle insinuation. Watts.

TO CA'NDY. v. a. [probably from candare, a word used in later times, for to whiten.]

1. To conserve with sugar, in such a manner as that the sugar lies in flakes, or breaks into tangles.

Should the poor be flatter'd?

No, let the candy'd tongue lick absurd pomp,

And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee,

Where thrift may follow fawning. Shakesp. Hamlet.

They have in Turkey confections like to candied conserves, made of sugar and lemons, or sugar and citrons, or sugar and violets, and some other flowers, and some mixture of amber.

Bacon.

With candy'd plantanes, and the juicy pine,

On choicest melons and sweet grapes they dine. Waller.

2. To form into congelations.

- Will the cold brook,
Candied with ice, cawdle thy morning toast,
To cure thy o'er-night's surfeit? Shakesp. Timon.
3. To incrust with congelations.
Since when those frosts that winter brings,
Which candy every green,
Renew us like the teeming springs,
And we thus fresh are seen. Drayton.

TO CA'NDY. v. n. To grow congealed.

CA'NDY Lion's foot. [catanance, Lat.] A plant.

The cup of the flower is squamose; the florets round the margin are much longer than those in the middle of the flower; the seeds are wrapt up in a leafy or downy substance within the cup, or outer covering. This plant begins to flower in May, and continues till August or September. Miller.

CANE. n. f. [canna, Lat.]

1. A kind of strong reed, of which walking staffs are made; a walking staff. See REED.

The king thrust the captain from him with his cane; whereupon he took his leave, and went home. Harvey.

If the poker be out of the way, or broken, stir the fire with your master's cane. Swift.

2. The plant which yields the sugar.

This cane or reed grows plentifully both in the East and West Indies. Other reeds have their skin hard and dry, and their pulp void of juice; but the skin of the sugar cane is soft, and the spongy matter or pith it contains very juicy. It usually grows four or five feet high, and about half an inch in diameter; though some have been mentioned in the island of Tabago twenty four feet high. The stem or stalk is divided by knots a foot and a half apart. At the top it puts forth a number of long green tufted leaves, from the middle of which arise the flower and the seed. There are likewise leaves springing out from each knot; but these usually fall as the cane rises. The ground fit for sugar canes is light, soft, and spongy, lying on a descent proper to carry off the water, and well turned to the sun. They usually plant them in pieces cut a foot and a half below the top of the flower, and they are ordinarily ripe in ten months, though sometimes not till fifteen; at which time they are found quite full of a white succulent marrow, whence is expressed the liquor of which sugar is made. When ripe, they are cut, their leaves cleared off, and they are carried in bundles to the mills, which consist of three wooden rollers, covered with steel plates. Chambers.

And the sweet liquor on the cane bestow,

From which prepar'd the luscious sugars flow. Blackmore.

3. A lance; a dart made of cane; whence the Spanish inigo de canas.

Abenamar, thy youth these sports has known,

Of which thy age is now spectator grown;

Judge like thou litt'st, to praise or to arraign,

The flying skirmish of the darted cane. Dryden's Conq. of Gr.

4. A reed.

Food may be afforded to bees, by small canes or troughs conveyed into their hives. Mortimer's Husbandry.

TO CANE. v. a. [from the noun.] To beat with a walking staff.

CANICULAR. adj. [canicularis, Lat.] Belonging to the dog-star; as, canicular or dog-days.

In regard to different latitudes unto some, the canicular days are in the winter; as unto such as are under the equinoctial line; for, unto them, it ariseth, when the sun is about the tropick of Cancer, which season unto them is winter.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 12.

CANINE. adj. [caninus, Lat.]

1. Having the properties of a dog.

A third kind of women are made up of canine particles: these are scolds, who imitate the animals out of which they were taken, always busy and barking, and snarl at every one that comes in their way. Addison's Spectator, N° 209.

2. Canine hunger, in medicine, is an appetite which cannot be satisfied.

It may occasion an exorbitant appetite of usual things, which they will take in such quantities, till they vomit them up like dogs, from whence it is called canine. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CA'NISTER. n. f. [canistrum, Lat.]

1. A small basket.

My lovely care,

Take the presents, which the nymphs prepare:

White lilies in full canisters they bring,

With all the glories of the purple spring. Dryden's Virg.

2. A small vessel in which any thing, such as tea or coffee, is laid up.

CA'NKER. n. f. [cancer, Lat. It seems to have the same meaning and original with cancer, but to be accidentally written with a k, when it denotes bad qualities in a less degree; or, canker might come from chancre, Fr. and cancer from the Latin.]

1. A worm that preys upon, and destroys fruits.

And loathful idleness he doth detest,

The canker worm of every gentle breast. Spenser.

That which the locust hath left, hath the canker worm eaten.

Joel, i. 4.

A huffing, shining, flatt'ring, cringing coward,

A canker worm of peace, was rais'd above him.

Otway.

2. A fly that preys upon fruits.

There be of flies, caterpillars, canker flies, and bear flies.

Walton's Angler.

3. Any thing that corrupts or consumes.

Yet writers say, as in the sweetest bud

The eating canker dwells; so eating love

Inhabits in the finest wits of all. Shakesp. Two G. of Verona.

It is the canker and ruin of many men's estates, which, in process of time, breeds a publick poverty.

Bacon.

Sacrilege may prove an eating canker, and a consuming moth; in the estate that we leave them. Atterbury.

No longer live the cankers of my court;

All to your several states with speed resort;

Waste in wild riot what your land allows,

There ply the early feast, and late carouse.

Pope.

4. A kind of wild worthless rose.

To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose,

And plant this thorn, this canker Bolingbroke.

Shakesp.

Draw a cherry with the leaf, the shaft of a steeple, a single or canker rose. Peacham.

5. An eating or corroding humour.

I am not glad, that such a fore of time

Should seek a plaister by a condemn'd revolt,

And heal th' inveterate canker of one wound,

By making many.

Shakesp. King John.

6. Corrosion; virulence.

As with age his body uglier grows,

So his mind with cankers.

Shakesp. Tempest.

7. A disease in trees.

TO CA'NKER. v. n. [from the noun.] To grow corrupt.

That cunning architect of canker'd guile,

Whom princes late displeasure left in bands,

For falsed letters, and suborned wile. Fairy Queen, b. ii. c. i.

I will lift the down trod Mortimer

As high i' th' air as this unthankful king,

As this ingrate and canker'd Bolingbroke. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

Silvering will fully and canker more than gilding; which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, will be profitable. Bacon's Physical Remains.

Or what the cross dire looking planet smite,

Or hurtful worm with canker'd venom bite.

Milton.

To some new clime, or to thy native sky,

Oh! friendless and forsaken virtue, fly:

The Indian air is deadly to thee grown;

Deceit and canker'd malice rule thy throne. Dryden's Auren.

Let envious jealousy, and canker'd spite

Produce my actions to severest light,

And tax my open day, or secret night.

} Prior.

TO CA'NKER. v. a.

1. To corrupt; to corrode.

Restore to God his due in tithe and time:

A tithe purloin'd, cankers the whole estate.

Herbert.

2. To infect; to pollute.

An honest man will enjoy himself better in a moderate fortune, that is gained with honour and reputation, than in an overgrown estate, that is cankered with the acquisitions of rapine and exaction. Addison's Spectator, N° 469.

CA'NKERBIT. particip. adj. [from canker and bit.] Bitten with an envenomed tooth.

Know thy name is lost;

By treason's tooth baregnawn and cankerbit. Shakesp. K. Lear.

CA'NNABINE. adj. [cannabinus, Lat.] Hempen.

Diët.

CA'NNIEAL. n. f. An anthropophagite; a man-eater.

The cannibals themselves eat no man's flesh, of those that die of themselves, but of such as are slain. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

They were little better than cannibals, who do hunt one another; and he that hath most strength and swiftness, doth eat and devour all his fellows. Davies on Ireland.

It was my bent to speak,

Of the cannibals that each other eat;

The anthropophagi, and men whose heads

Did grow beneath their shoulders.

Shakesp. Othello.

The captive cannibal, oppress'd with chains,

Yet braves his foes, reviles, provokes, disdains;

Of nature fierce, untameable, and proud,

He bids defiance to the gaping croud;

And spent at last, and speechless as he lies,

With fiery glances mocks their rage, and dies. Granville.

If an eleventh commandment had been given, Thou shalt not eat human flesh; would not these cannibals have esteem'd it more difficult than all the rest?

Bentley.

CA'NNIBALLY. adv. [from cannibal.] In the manner of a cannibal.

Before Corioli, he scotch'd him and notch'd him like a carbanado.—Had he been cannibally given, he might have broiled, and eaten him too. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

CA'NNIPERS. n. f. [corrupted from callipers; which see.]

The square is taken by a pair of cannipers, or two rulers clapped to the side of a tree, measuring the distance between them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CANNON.

C A N

CANNON. n. f. [cannon, Fr. from canna, Lat. a pipe, meaning a large tube.]

1. A great gun for battery.
2. A gun larger than can be managed by the hand. They are of so many sizes, that they decrease in the bore from a ball of forty-eight pounds to a ball of five ounces.

As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks,
So they redoubled strokes upon the foe. Shakesp. Macbeth.

He had left all the cannon he had taken; and now he sent all his great cannon to a garrison. Clarendon.

The making, or price, of these gunpowder instruments, is extremely expensive, as may be easily judged by the weight of their materials; a whole cannon weighing commonly eight thousand pounds; a half cannon, five thousand; a culverin, four thousand five hundred; a demi-culverin, three thousand; which, whether it be in iron or brass, must needs be very costly.

Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

CANNON-BALL. } n. f. [from cannon, ball, bullet, and shot.]
CANNON-BULLET. } The balls which are shot from great
CANNON-SHOT. } guns.

He reckons those for wounds that are made by bullets, although it be a cannon-shot. Wise's Surgery.

Let a cannon-bullet pass through a room, it must strike successively the two sides of the room. Locke.

To CANNONADE. v. n. [from cannon.] To play the great guns; to batter or attack with great guns.

Both armies cannonaded all the ensuing day. Tatler, N° 63.

To CANNONADE. v. a. To fire upon the enemy with cannon.

CANNONIER. n. f. [from cannon.] The engineer that manages the cannon.

Give me the cups:

And let the kettle to the trumpets speak,
The trumpets to the cannonier without,

The cannons to the heav'ns, the heav'ns to earth. Shakesp.

A third was a most excellent cannonier, whose good skill did much endamage the forces of the king. Hayward.

CANNO. A word compounded of can and not.

I cannot but believe many a child can tell twenty, long before he has any idea of infinity at all. Locke.

CANO. } n. f. A boat made by cutting the trunk of a tree in-
CANOE. } to a hollow vessel.

Others made rafts of wood, and others devised the boat of one tree, called the canoe, which the Gauls, upon the river Roan, used in assisting the transportation of Hannibal's army.

Raleigh's Essays.

They maintained a war against Semiramis, in which they had four thousand monoxyla, or canoes, of one piece of timber.

Arbutnot on Coins.

CANON. n. f. [κανων.]

1. A rule; a law.

The truth is, they are rules and canons of that law, which is written in all mens hearts; the church had for ever, no less than now, stood bound to observe them, whether the apostle had mentioned them, or no. Hooker, b. iii. § 4.

His books are almost the very canon to judge both doctrine and discipline by. Hooker, Pref.

Religious canons, civil laws are cruel,
Then what should war be? Shakesp. Timon.

Canons in logick are such as these: every part of a division, singly taken, must contain less than the whole; and a definition must be peculiar and proper to the thing defined.

Watts's Logick.

2. The laws made by ecclesiastical councils.

Canon law is that law, which is made and ordained in a general council, or provincial synod of the church. Ayliffe.

These were looked on as lapsed persons, and great severities of penance were prescribed them, as appears by the canons of Ancyra, and many others. Stillingfleet.

3. The books of Holy Scripture; or the great rule.

Canon also denotes those books of Scripture, which are received as inspired and canonical, to distinguish them from either profane, apocryphal, or disputed books. Thus we say, that Genesis is part of the sacred canon of the Scripture. Ayliffe.

4. A dignitary in cathedral churches.

For deans and canons, or prebends, of cathedral churches, in their first institution, they were of great use in the church; they were to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, and for his government in causes ecclesiastical. Bacon.

Swift much admires the place and air,
And longs to be a canon there.

A canon! that's a place too mean:
No, doctor, you shall be a dean,

Two dozen canons round your stall,
And you the tyrant o'er them all. Swift.

5. Canons Regular. Such as are placed in monasteries. Ayliffe.

6. Canons Secular. Lay canons, who have been, as a mark of honour, admitted into some chapters.

7. [Among churgeons.] An instrument used in sewing up wounds. Dict.

8. A large sort of printing letter, probably so called from being first used in printing a book of canons; or perhaps from its size, and therefore properly written canon.

C A N

CA'NON BIT. n. f. That part of the bit let into the horse's mouth.

A goodly person, and could manage fair,

His stubborn steed with canonbit,
Who under him did trample as the air. Fairy Queen, b. i.

CA'NONESS. n. f. [canonissa, low Lat.]

There are also, in popish countries, women which they call secular canonesses, living after the example of secular canons.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

CANO'NICAL. adj. [canonicus, low Lat.]

1. According to the canon.

2. Constituting the canon.

Publick readings there are of books and writings, not canon-ical, whereby the church doth also preach, or openly make known the doctrine of virtuous conversation. Hooker, b. v.

No such book was found amongst those canonical scriptures. Raleigh's History of the World.

3. Regular; stated; fixed by ecclesiastical laws.

Seven times in a day do I praise thee, said David; from this definite number some ages of the church took their pattern for their canonical hours. Taylor.

4. Spiritual; ecclesiastical; relating to the church.

York anciently had a metropolitan jurisdiction over all the bishops of Scotland, from whom they had their consecration, and to whom they swore canonical obedience. Ayliffe.

CANO'NICALLY. adv. [from canonical.] In a manner agreeable to the canon.

It is a known story of the friar, who, on a fasting day, bids his capon be carp, and then very canonically eat it.

Government of the Tongue.

CANO'NICALNESS. n. f. [from canonical.] The quality of being canonical.

CA'NONIST. n. f. [from canon.] A man versed in the ecclesiastical laws; a professor of the canon law.

John Fisher, bishop of Rochester, when the king would have translated him from that poor bishoprick, he refused, saying, he would not forsake his poor little old wife; thinking of the fifteenth canon of the Nicene council, and that of the canonists, Matrimonium inter episcopum & ecclesiam esse contractum, &c.

Camden's Remains.

Of whose strange crimes no canonist can tell,

In what commandment's large contents they dwell. Pope.

CANONIZA'TION. n. f. [from canonize.] The act of declaring any man a saint.

It is very suspicious, that the interests of particular families, or churches, have too great a sway in their canonizations.

Addison on Italy.

To CA'NONIZE. v. a. [from canon, to put into the canon, or rule for observing festivals.] To declare any man a saint.

The king, desirous to bring into the house of Lancaster celestial honour, became suitor to pope Julius, to canonize king Henry VI. for a saint. Bacon's Henry VII.

By those hymns all shall approve

Us canoniz'd for love. Donne.

They have a pope too, who hath the chief care of religion, and of canonizing whom he thinks fit, and thence have the honour of saints. Stillingfleet.

CA'NONRY. } n. f. [from canon.] An ecclesiastical benefice in CA'NONSHIP. } some cathedral or collegiate church, which has a prebend, or a stated allowance out of the revenues of such church, commonly annexed to it. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CA'NOPIED. adj. [from canopy.] Covered with a canopy.

I sat me down to watch upon a bank,

With ivy canopy'd, and interwove

With flaunting honeysuckle. Milton.

CANOPY. n. f. [canopeum, low Lat.] A covering of state over a throne or bed; a covering spread over the head.

She is there brought unto a paled green,

And placed under a stately canopy,

The warlike feats of both those knights to see. Fairy Queen.

Now spread the night her spangled canopy,

And summon'd every restless eye to sleep. Fairfax.

Nor will the raging fever's fire abate,

With golden canopies, and beds of state. Dryden.

To CA'NOPY. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a canopy.

The birch, the myrtle, and the bay,

Like friends did all embrace;

And their large branches did display,

To canopy the place. Dryden.

CANO'ROUS. adj. [canorus, Lat.] Musical; tuneful.

Birds that are most canorous, and whose notes we most commend, are of little throats, and short. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CANT. n. f. [probably from cantus, Lat. implying the odd tone of voice used by vagrants; but imagined by some to be corrupted from quaint.]

1. A corrupt dialect used by beggars and vagabonds.

2. A particular form of speaking peculiar to some certain class or body of men.

I write not always in the proper terms of navigation, land service, or in the cant of any profession. Dryden.

If we would trace out the original of that flagrant and avowed impiety, which has prevailed among us for some years, we should find, that it owes its rise to that cant and hypocrisy, which which had taken possession of the people's minds in the times of the great rebellion. Addison. Freeholder, N° 37.

Astrologers, with an old paltry cant, and a few pot-hooks for planets, to amuse the vulgar, have too long been suffered to abuse the world. Swift's Predictions for the Year 1701.

A few general rules, with a certain cant of words, has sometimes set up an illiterate heavy writer, for a most judicious and formidable critick. Addison. Spectator, N° 291.

3. A whining pretension to goodness, in formal and affected terms.

Of promise prodigal, while pow'r you want,

And preaching in the self-denying cant. Dryden's Aurengz.

4. Barbarous jargon.

The affectation of some late authours, to introduce and multiply cant words, is the most ruinous corruption in any language. Swift.

5. Auction.

Numbers of these tenants, or their descendants, are now offering to sell their leases by cant, even those which were for lives. Swift.

To CANT. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk in the jargon of particular professions, or in any kind of formal affected language, or with a peculiar and studied tone of voice.

Men cant endlessly about materia and forma; hunt chimeras by rules of art, or dress up ignorance in words of bulk or found, which may stop up the mouth of enquiry.

Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica.

That uncouth affected garb of speech, or canting language rather, if I may so call it, which they have of late taken up, is the signal distinction and characteristical note of that, which, in that their new language, they call the godly party. Sanderson.

The busy, subtle serpents of the law,

Did first my mind from true obedience draw;

While I did limits to the king prescribe,

And took for oracles that canting tribe. Roſcommon.

Unskill'd in schemes by planets to foreshow,

Like canting rascals, how the wars will go. Dryden's Juven.

CANTA'LIVER. See CANTILIVER.

CANTATA. n. f. [Ital.] A song.

CANTA'TION. n. f. [from canto, Lat.] The act of singing.

CA'NTER. n. f. [from cant.] A term of reproach for hypocrites, who talk formally of religion, without obeying it.

CANTERBURY BELLS. See BELFLOWER.

CANTERBURY GALLOP. [In horsemanship.] The hard gallop of an ambling horse, commonly called a canter; and probably derived from the monks riding to Canterbury on easy ambling horses.

CANTHARIDES. n. f. [Latin.] Spanish flies; used to raise blisters.

The flies, cantharides, are bred of a worm, or caterpillar, but peculiar to certain fruit trees; as are the fig tree, the pinetree, and the wild brier; all which bear sweet fruit, and fruit that hath a kind of secret biting or sharpness: for the fig hath a milk in it, that is sweet and corrosive; the pine apple hath a kernel that is strong and absterfiv. Bacon's Nat. History.

CANTHUS. n. f. [Latin.] The corner of the eye. The internal is called the greater, and the external the lesser canthus. Quincy.

A gentlewoman was seized with an inflammation and tumour in the great canthus, or angle of her eye. Wiseman.

CA'NTICLE. n. f. [from canto, Lat.] A song; used generally for a song in scripture.

This right of estate, in some nations, is yet more significantly expressed by Moses in his canticles, in the person of God to the Jews. Bacon's Holy War.

CANTI'LIVERS. n. f. Pieces of wood framed into the front or other sides of an house, to sustain the molding and eaves over it. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

CANTLE. n. f. [kant, Dutch, a corner; eschantillon, Fr. a piece.] A piece with corners. Skinner.

See how this river comes, me cranking in,

And cuts me from the best of all my land,

A huge halfmoon, a monstrous cantle out. Shakeſp. H. IV.

To CA'NTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut in pieces.

For four times talking, if one piece thou take,

That must be cantled, and the judge go snack. Dryden's Juv.

CA'NTLET. n. f. [from cantle.] A piece; a fragment.

Raging with high disdain, repeats his blows;

Nor shield, nor armour can their force oppose;

Huge cantlets of his buckler strew the ground,

And no defence in his bor'd arms is found. Dryden.

CANTO. n. f. [Ital.] A book, or section of a poem.

Why, what would you do?—

—Make a willow cabbin at your gate,

And call upon my soul within the house;

Write loyal cantos of contemned love. Shakeſp. Tw. Night.

CANTON. n. f. [from canto, the corner of the eye; and hence came the cantons of the Switzers. It is the reward of a prince given to an earl. Peacham.]

1. A small parcel or division of land.

Only that little canton of land, called the English pale, containing four small shires, did maintain a bordering war with the Irish, and retain the form of English government. Davies.

2. A small community, or clan.

The same is the case of rovers by land; such, as yet, are some cantons in Arabia, and some petty kings of the mountains, adjacent to straits and ways. Bacon's Holy War.

To CA'NTON. v. a. [from the noun.] To divide into little parts.

Families shall quit all subjection to him, and canton his empire into less governments for themselves. Locke.

It would certainly be for the good of mankind, to have all the mighty empires and monarchies of the world cantoned out into petty states and principalities. Addison on Italy.

The late king of Spain, reckoning it an indignity to have his territories cantoned out into parcels by other princes, during his own life, and without his consent, rather chose to bequeath the monarchy entire to a younger son of France. Swift.

They canton out to themselves a little province in the intellectual world, where they fancy the light shines, and all the rest is in darkness. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

To CA'NTONIZE. v. a. [from canton.] To parcel out into small divisions.

Thus was all Ireland cantonized among ten persons of the English nation. Davies on Ireland.

The whole forest was in a manner cantonized amongst a very few in number, of whom some had regal right. Howel.

CA'NTRED. n. f. The same in Wales as an hundred in England: For cantre, in the British language, signifieth an hundred. Cowel.

The king regrants to him all that province, reserving only the city of Dublin, and the cantreds next adjoining, with the maritime towns. Davies on Ireland.

CANVASS. n. f. [canevas, Fr. cannabis, Lat. hemp.] A kind of cloth woven for several uses, as sails, painting cloths, tents.

The master commanded forthwith to set on all the canvass they could, and fly homeward. Sidney.

And eke the pens that did his pinions bind,

Were like main yards with flying canvass lin'd. Fairy Q. b. i.

Their canvass castles up they quickly rear,

And build a city in an hour's space. Fairfax, b. ii.

Where-e'er thy navy spreads her canvass wings,

Homage to thee, and peace to all she brings. Waller.

With such kind passion hastes the prince to fight,

And spreads his flying canvass to the Sound;

Him whom no danger, were he there, could fright;

Now absent, every little noise can wound. Dryden.

Thou, Kneller, long with noble pride,

The foremost of thy art, hast vy'd

With nature in a generous strife,

And touch'd the canvass into life. Addison.

To CA'NVASS. v. a. [Skinner derives it from cannabasser, Fr. to beat hemp; which being a very laborious employment, it is used to signify, to search diligently into.]

1. To sift; to examine.

I have made careful search on all hands, and canvassed the matter with all possible diligence. Woodward.

2. To debate; to controvert.

The curs discovered a raw hide in the bottom of a river, and laid their heads together how to come at it: they canvassed the matter one way and t'other, and concluded, that the way to get it, was to drink their way to it. L'Eſtrange.

To CA'NVASS. v. n. To solicit.

This crime of canvassing, or soliciting for church preferment, is, by the canon law, called simony. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CA'NY. adj. [from cane.]

1. Full of canes.

2. Consisting of canes.

But in his way lights on the barren plains

Of Sericana, where Chineses drive,

With sails and wind, their cany wagons light. Parad. Lost.

CA'NZONET. n. f. [canzonetta, Ital.] A little song.

Vecchi was most pleasing of all others, for his conceit and variety, as well his madrigals as canzonets. Peacham.

CAP. n. f. [cap, Welch; cæppe, Sax. cappe, Germ. cappe, Fr. cappa, Ital. capa, Span. kappe, Dan. and Dutch; caput, a head, Latin.]

1. The garment that covers the head.

Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.—

Why, this was moulded on a porringer,

A velvet dish. Shakeſp. Taming the Shrew.

I have ever held my cap off to thy fortune.—

—Thou hast serv'd me with much faith. Shakeſp.

First, lolling, sloth in woollen cap,

Taking her after-dinner nap. Swift.

The cap, the whip, the masculine attire,

For which they roughen to the sense. Thomson's Autumn.

2. The ensign of the cardinalate.

Henry the fifth did sometimes prophesy,

If once he came to be a cardinal,

He'd make his cap coequal with the crown. Shakeſp. H. VI.

3. The topmost; the highest.

Thou art the cap of all the fools alive. Shakeſp. Timon.

4. A reverence made by uncovering the head.

They

C A P

They more and less, came in with cap and knee, Met him in boroughs, cities, villages. Shakesp. Henry IV.
Should the want of a cap or a cringe so mortally discompose him, as we find afterwards it did. L'Estrange.

5. A vessel made like a cap.

It is observed, that a barrel or cap, whose cavity will contain eight cubical feet of air, will not serve a diver above a quarter of an hour. Wilkins.

6. Cap of a great gun. A piece of lead laid over the touch-hole, to preserve the prime.

7. Cap of maintenance. One of the regalia carried before the king at the coronation.

To CAP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover on the top.

The bones next the joint are capped with a smooth cartilaginous substance, serving both to strength and motion. Derham.

2. To snatch off the cap.

If one, by another occasion, take any thing from another, as boys sometimes use to cap one another, the same is straight felony. Spenser on Ireland.

3. To cap verses. To name alternately verses beginning with a particular letter; to name alternately.

Where Henderson, and th' other masses,

Were sent to cap texts, and put cases. Hudibras.

Sure it is a pitiful pretence to ingenuity, that can be thus kept up, there being little need of any other faculty but memory, to be able to cap texts. Government of the Tongue, § 3.

There is an author of ours, whom I would desire him to read, before he ventures at capping characters. Atterbury.

CAP à pè. } [cap à pè, Fr.] From head to foot; all over.
CAP à pè. }

A figure like your father,

Arm'd at all points exactly, cap à pè,

Appears before them, and, with solemn march,

Goes slow and stately by them. Shakesp. Hamlet.

There for the two contending knights he sent,

Arm'd cap à pè, with reverence low they bent;

He smil'd on both. Dryden's Fables.

A woodlouse,

That folds up itself in itself for a house,

As round as a ball, without head, without tail,

Inclos'd cap à pè in a strong coat of mail. Swift.

CAP-PAPER. A sort of coarse brownish paper.

Having, for trial sake, filtred it through cap-paper, there remained in the filtre a powder. Boyle.

CAPABILITY. n. f. [from capable.] Capacity; the quality of being capable.

CAPABLE. adj. [capable, Fr.]

1. Endued with powers equal to any particular thing.

To say, that the more capable, or the better deserver, hath such right to govern, as he may compulsorily bring under the less worthy, is idle. Bacon.

When we consider so much of that space, as is equal to, or capable to receive a body of any assigned dimensions. Locke.

When you hear any person give his judgment, consider with yourself whether he be a capable judge. Watts.

2. Intelligent; able to understand.

Look you, how pale he glares;

His form and cause conjoined, preaching to stones,

Would make them capable. Shakesp. Hamlet.

3. Capacious; able to receive or understand.

I am much bound to God, that he hath endued you with one capable of the best instructions. Digby.

4. Susceptible.

The soul, immortal substance, to remain,

Conscious of joy, and capable of pain. Prior.

5. Qualified for; without any natural impediment.

There is no man that believes the goodness of God, but must be inclined to think, that he hath made some things for as long a duration as they are capable of. Tillotson.

6. Qualified for; without legal impediment.

Of my land,

Loyal and natural boy! I'll work the means

To make thee capable. Shakesp. King Lear.

7. It has the particle of before a noun.

What secret springs their eager passions move,

How capable of death for injur'd love. Dryden's Virgil.

8. Hollow. This sense is not now in use.

Lean but upon a rush,

The cicatrice, and capable impessure,

Thy palm some moments keeps. Shakesp. As you like it.

CAPABLENESS. n. f. [from capable.] The quality or state of being capable; knowledge; understanding; power of mind.

CAPACIOUS. adj. [capax, Lat.]

1. Wide; large; able to hold much.

Beneath th' incessant weeping of those drains,

I see the rocky Siphons stretch'd immense,

The mighty reservoirs of harden'd chalk,

Or stiff compacted clay, capacious found. Thomson's Autumn.

2. Extensive; equal to much knowledge, or great design.

There are some persons of a good genius, and a capacious mind, who write and speak very obscurely. Watts.

CAPA'CIOUSNESS. n. f. [from capacious.] The power of holding or receiving; largeness.

A concave measure, of known and denominate capacity, serves to measure the capaciousness of any other vessel. In like manner, to a given weight, the weight of all other bodies may be reduced, and so found out. Holder on Time.

To CAPA'CITATE. v. a. [from capacity.] To make capable;
to enable; to qualify.

By this instruction we may be capacitated to observe those errors. Dryden.

These sort of men were sycophants only, and were endued with arts of life, to capacitate them for the conversation of the rich and great. Tatler, N° 56.

CAPA'CITY. n. f. [capacité, Fr.]

1. The power of holding or containing any thing.

Had our palace the capacity

To camp this host, we would all sup together. Shakesp.

Notwithstanding thy capacity

Receiveth as the sea, nought enters there,

Of what validity and pitch foe'er,

But falls into abatement and low price. Shakesp. Tw. Night.

For they that most and greatest things embrace,

Enlarge thereby their mind's capacity,

As streams enlarg'd, enlarge the channel's space. Davies.

Space, considered in length, breadth, and thickness, I think,
may be called capacity. Locke.

2. The force or power of the mind.

No intellectual creature in the world, is able, by capacity, to do that which nature doth without capacity and knowledge.

Hooker, b. i. § 3.

In spiritual natures, so much as there is of desire, so much there is also of capacity to receive. I do not say, there is always a capacity to receive the very thing they desire; for that may be impossible. South.

An heroick poem requires the accomplishment of some extraordinary undertaking; which requires the strength and vigour of the body, the duty of a soldier, and the capacity and prudence of a general. Dryden's Juv. Dedication.

3. Power; ability.

Since the world's wide frame does not include

A cause with such capacities endu'd,

Some other cause o'er nature must preside. Blackmore.

4. Room; space.

There remained, in the capacity of the exhausted cylinder, store of little rooms, or spaces, empty or devoid of air. Boyle.

5. State; condition; character.

A miraculous revolution, reducing many from the head of a triumphant rebellion, to their old condition of masons, smiths, and carpenters; that, in this capacity, they might repair what,
as colonels and captains, they had ruined and defaced. South.

You desire my thoughts as a friend, and not as a member of parliament; they are the same in both capacities. Swift.

CAPA'RISON. n. f. [caparazon, a great cloke, Span.] A horse-cloth, or a sort of cover for a horse, which is spread over his furniture. Farrier's Dict.

Tilting furniture, emblazon'd shields,

Impresses quaint, caparisons, and steeds,

Bases, and tinsel trappings, gorgeous knights,

At joust, and tournament. Paradise Lost, b. ix. l. 31.

Some wore a breastplate, and a light jupon;

Their horses cloath'd with rich caparison. Dryden's Fab.

To CAPA'RISON. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress in caparisons.

At his command,

The steeds, caparison'd with purple, stand;

With golden trappings, glorious to behold,

And champ betwixt their teeth the foaming gold. Dryden.

2. To dress pompously; in a ludicrous sense.

Don't you think, though I am caparisoned like a man, I have a doublet and hose in my disposition? Shakesp. As you like it.

CAPE. n. f. [cape, Fr.]

1. Headland; promontory.

What from the cape can you discern at sea?—

—Nothing at all; it is a high wrought flood. Shakesp. Oth.

The parting sun,

Beyond the earth's green cape, and verdant isles,

Hesperian sets; my signal to depart. Parad. Lost, b. viii.

The Romans made war upon the Tarentines, and obliged them by treaty not to sail beyond the cape. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. The neck-piece of a cloke.

He was clothed in a robe of fine black cloth, with wide sleeves and cape. Bacon.

CAPER. n. f. [from caper, Latin, a goat.] A leap; a jump; a skip.

We that are true lovers, run into strange capers; but as all is mortal in nature, so is all nature in love mortal in folly.

Shakesp. As you like it.

Flimnap, the treasurer, is allowed to cut a caper on the strait rope, at least an inch higher than any other lord in the whole empire. Swift's Gulliver's Travels.

CAP'ER. n. f. [capparis, Lat.] An acid pickle. See CAPER-BUSH.

We invent new sauces and pickles, which resemble the animal animal ferment in taste and virtue, as mangoes, olives, and capers.

Floyer on the Humours.

CA'PER BUSH. n. f. [capparis, Lat.]

Its flower consists of four leaves, which are expanded in form of a rose; the fruit is fleshy, and shaped like a pear; in which are contained many roundish seeds. This plant grows in the South of France, in Spain and in Italy, upon old walls and buildings; and the buds of the flowers, before they are open, are pickled for eating.
Miller.

To CA'PER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dance frolicsomely.

The truth is, I am only old in judgment; and he that will caper with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him.
Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.

2. To skip for merriment.

Our master

Cap'ring to eye her. Shakesp. Tempest.

His nimble hand's instinct then taught each string

A cap'ring cheerfulness, and made them sing

To their own dance.

Craslow.

The family tript it about, and caper'd, like hailstones bounding from a marble floor.
Arbuthnot's John Bull.

3. To dance; spoken in contempt.

The stage would need no force, nor song, nor dance,

Nor capering monsieur from active France.

Rowe.

CA'PERER. n. f. [from caper.] A dancer; in contempt.

The tumbler's gambols some delight afford;

No less the nimble caperer on the cord:

But these are still insipid stuff to thee,

Coop'd in a ship, and tosd upon the sea. Dryden's Juv.

CAPIAS. n. f. [Lat.] A writ of two sorts, one before judgment, called capias ad respondendum, in an action personal, if the sheriff, upon the first writ of distress, return that he has no effects in his jurisdiction. The other is a writ of execution after judgment.
Cowel.

CAPILLA'CEOUS. adj. The same with capillary.

CAPILLAMENT. n. f. [capillamentum, Lat.] Those small threads or hairs which grow up in the middle of a flower, and adorned with little herbs at the top, are called capillaments.
Quincy.

CA'PILLARY. adj. [from capillus, hair, Lat.]

1. Resembling hairs; small; minute; applied to plants.

Capillary, or capillaceous plants, are such as have no main stalk or stem, but grow to the ground, as hairs on the head; and which bear their seeds in little tufts or protuberances on the backside of their leaves.
Quincy.

Our common hyssop is not the least of vegetables, nor observed to grow upon walls; but rather, as Lemnius well conceiveth, some kind of capillaries, which are very small plants, and only grow upon walls and stony places.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 7.

2. Applied to vessels of the body. Small; as the ramifications of the arteries.
Quincy.

Ten capillary arteries in some parts of the body, as in the brain, are not equal to one hair; and the smallest lymphatick vessels are an hundred times smaller than the smallest capillary artery.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CAPILLA'TION. n. f. [from capillus, Lat.] A vessel like a hair; a small ramification of vessels.

Nor is the humour contained in smaller veins, or obscurer capillations, but in a vesicle.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.

CAPITAL. adj. [capitalis, Lat.]

1. Relating to the head.

Needs must the serpent now his capital bruise

Expect with mortal pain. Paradise Lost, b. xii. l. 383.

2. Criminal in the highest degree, so as to touch life.

Edmund, I arrest thee

On capital treason. Shakesp. King Lear.

Several cases deserve greater punishment than many crimes that are capital among us.
Swift.

3. That which affects life.

In capital causes, wherein but one man's life is in question, the evidence ought to be clear; much more in a judgment upon a war, which is capital to thousands.
Bacon.

4. Chief; principal.

I will, out of that infinite number, reckon but some that are most capital, and commonly occurrent both in the life and conditions of private men.
Spenser on Ireland.

As to swerve in the least points, is error; so the capital enemies thereof God hateth, as his deadly foes, aliens, and, without repentance, children of endless perdition.
Hooker.

They are employed by me, and do, in themselves, tend to confirm the truth of a capital article in religion.
Atterbury.

5. Chief; metropolitan.

This had been

Perhaps thy capital seat, from whence had spread

All generations; and had hither come,

From all the ends of th' earth, to celebrate

And reverence thee, their great progenitor. Par. Lost, b. xi.

6. Applied to letters; large; such as are written at the beginnings or heads of books.

Our most considerable actions are always present, like capital letters to an aged and dim eye. Taylor's Rule of Living holy.

The first whereof is written in capital letters, without chapters or verses.
Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

7. Capital Stock. The principal or original stock of a trading company.

CA'PITAL. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. The upper part of a pillar.

You see the volute of the Ionick, the foliage of the Corinthian, and the uovali of the Dorick, mixed, without any regularity, on the same capital.
Addison on Italy.

2. The chief city of a nation or kingdom.

CA'PITALLY. adv. [from capital.] In a capital manner.

CAPITA'TION. n. f. [from caput, the head, Lat.] Numeration by heads.

He suffered also for not performing the commandment of God, concerning capitation; that, when the people were numbered, for every head they should pay unto God a shekel.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 11.

CAPITE. n. f. [from caput, capitis, Lat.]

A tenure which holdeth immediately of the king, as of his crown, be it by knight's service or socage, and not as of any honour, castle, or manour: and therefore it is otherwise called a tenure, that holdeth merely of the king; because, as the crown is a corporation and feigniory in gross, as the common lawyers term it, so the king that possesseth the crown, is, in account of law, perpetually king, and never in his minority, nor ever dieth.
Cowel.

CAPITULAR. n. f. [from capitulum, Lat. an ecclesiastical chapter.]

1. A body of the statutes of a chapter.

That this practice continued to the time of Charlemain, appears by a constitution in his capitular.
Taylor.

2. A member of a chapter.

Canonists do agree, that the chapter makes decrees and statutes, which shall bind the chapter itself, and all its members or capitulars.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

To CAPITULATE. v. n. [from capitulum, Lat.]

1. To draw up any thing in heads or articles.

Percy, Northumberland,

The archbishop of York, Douglas, and Mortimer, Capitulate against us, and are up. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. i.

2. To yield, or surrender up, on certain stipulations.

The king took it for a great indignity, that thieves should offer to capitulate with him as enemies.
Hayward.

I still pursued, and, about two o' clock this afternoon, she thought fit to capitulate.
Spectator, No 566.

CAPITULA'TION. n. f. [from capitulate.] Stipulation; terms; conditions.

It was not a complete conquest, but rather a dedition upon terms and capitulations, agreed between the conquerour and the conquered; wherein, usually, the yielding party secured to themselves their law and religion.
Hale.

CAP'VI TREE. n. f. [copaiba, Lat.]

It hath a flower consisting of five leaves, which expand in form of a rose; the pointal is fixed in the centre of the flower, which afterwards becomes a pod, containing one or two seeds, which are surrounded with a pulp of a yellow colour. This tree grows near a village called Ayapel, in the province of Antiochi, in the Spanish West Indies, about ten days journey from Carthage. There are great numbers of these trees in the woods about this village, which grow to the height of sixty feet; some of them do not yield any of the balsam; those that do, are distinguished by a ridge, which runs along their trunks. These trees are wounded in their centre, and they apply vessels to the wounded part, to receive the balsam, which will all flow out in a short time. One of these trees will yield five or six gallons of balsam.
Miller.

CA'PON. n. f. [capo, Lat.] A castrated cock.

In good roast beef my landlord sticks his knife;

The capon fat delights his dainty wife. Gay's Pastorals.

CAPONNI'ERE. n. f. [Fr. a term in fortification.] A covered lodgment, of about four or five feet broad, encompassed with a little parapet of about two feet high, serving to support planks laden with earth. This lodgment contains fifteen or twenty soldiers, and is usually placed at the extremity of the counter-scarp, having little embrasures made in them, through which they fire.
Harris.

CAPOT. n. f. [French.] Is when one party wins all the tricks of cards at the game of picquet.

To CAPO'T. v. a. [from the noun.] When one party has won all the tricks of cards at picquet, he is said to have capotted his antagonist.

CAPO'UCH. n. f. [capuce, French] A monk's hood. Dict.

CA'PPER. n. f. [from cap.] One who makes or sells caps.

CAPRE'OLATE. adj. [from capreolus, a tendril of a vine, Lat.]

Such plants as turn, wind, and creep along the ground, by means of their tendrils, as gourds, melons, and cucumbers, are termed, in botany, capreolate plants.
Harris.

CAPRICE. } n. f. [caprice, Fr. capricho, Span.] Freak; CAPRICHIO. } fancy; whim; sudden change of humour.

It is a pleasant spectacle to behold the shifts, windings, and unexpected caprichios of distressed nature, when pursued by a close and well managed experiment. Glanville's Sceptis, Pref.

C A P

Heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole ;

That counterworks each folly and caprice,

That disappoints th' effect of ev'ry vice. Pope.

If there be a single spot more barren, or more distant from the church, the rector or vicar may be obliged, by the caprice or pique of the bishop, to build, under pain of sequestration. Swift.

Their passions move in lower spheres,

Where'er caprice or folly steers. Swift.

All the various machines and utensils would now and then play odd pranks and caprices, quite contrary to their proper structures, and design of the artificers. Bentley.

CAPRICIOUSLY. adv. [from capricious.] Whimsically; in a manner depending wholly upon fancy.

CAPRICIOUSNESS. n. f. [from capricious.] The quality of being led by caprice, humour, whimsicalness.

A subject ought to suppose, that there are reasons, although he be not apprised of them; otherwise he must tax his prince of capriciousness, inconstancy, or ill design. Swift.

CAPRICORN. n. f. [capricornus, Lat.] One of the signs of the zodiack; the winter solstice.

Let the longest night in Capricorn be of fifteen hours, the day consequently must be of nine. Notes to Creech's Manilius.

CAPRIOLE. n. f. [French. In horsemanship.] Caprioles are leaps firma à firma, or such as a horse makes in one and the same place, without advancing forwards, and in such a manner, that when he is in the air, and height of his leap, he yerks or strikes out with his hinder legs, even and near. A capriole is the most difficult of all the high manage, or raised airs. It is different from the croupade in this, that the horse does not show his shoes; and from a balotade, in that he does not yerk out in a balotade. Farrier's Dict.

CAPSTAN. n. f. [corruptly called capstern; cabestan, Fr.] A cylinder, with levers to wind up any great weight, particularly to raise the anchors.

The weighing of anchors by the capstan, is also new.

But fate forbids; the Stygian floods oppose,

And with nine circling streams the captive souls inclose.

Dryden, Æn. vi.

TO CAPTIVE. v. a. [from the noun. It was used formerly with the accent on the last syllable, but now it is on the first.]

To take prisoner; to bring into a condition of servitude.

But being all defeated save a few,

Rather than fly, or be captiv'd, herself she slew. Fairy Q. b. ii.

Oft leavest them to hostile sword

Of heathen and profane, their carcasses

To dogs and fowls a prey, or else captiv'd. Milton's Agonist.

What further fear of danger can there be?

Beauty, which captives all things, sets me free. Dryden.

Still lay the god: the nymph surpriz'd,

Yet, mistress of herself, devis'd,

How she the vagrant might intral,

And captive him, who captives all.

Prior.

CAPTIVITY. n. f. [captivité, Fr. captivitas, low Lat.]

In the sacrament we do not receive Christ carnally, but we receive him spiritually; and that of itself is a conjugation of blessings and spiritual graces. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

CARNALNESS. n. f. The same with carnality. Dict.

CARNATION. n. f. [carnes, Lat.] The name of the natural flesh colour; from whence perhaps the flower is named; the name of a flower. See CLOVEGILLIFLOWER.

And lo the wretch! whose vile, whose insect lust

Laid this gay daughter of the spring in dust:

O punish him! or to th' Elysian shades

Dismiss my soul, where no carnation fades.

Pope.

CARNE' LION. n. f. A precious stone.

The common carnelion has its name from its flesh colour; which is, in some of these stones, paler, when it is called the female carnelion; in others deeper, called the male. Woodward.

CARNE' OUS. adj. [carneus, Lat.] Flethy.

I have observed in a calf, the umbilical vessels to terminate in certain bodies, divided into a multitude of carneous papillæ.

Ray on the Creation.

TO CARNI'FY. v. n. [from caro, carnis, Lat.] To breed flesh; to turn nutriment into flesh.

At the same time I think, I deliberate, I purpose, I command: in inferiour faculties, I walk, I see, I hear, I digest, I sanguify, I carnify.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CARNIVAL. n. f. [carnaval, Fr.] The feast held in the popish countries before Lent.

The whole year is but one mad carnival, and we are voluptuous not so much upon desire or appetite, as by way of exploit and bravery. Decay of Piety.

CARNI'VOROUS. adj. [from carnis and voro.] Flesh-eating; that of which flesh is the proper food.

In birds there is no mastication or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop or crow. Ray on the Creation.

Man is by his frame, as well as his appetite, a carnivorous animal. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CARNO'SITY. n. f. [carnosité, Fr.] Flethy excrescences.

By this method, and by this course of diet, with sudorificks, the ulcers are healed, and that carnosity resolved. Wiseman.

CARNOUS. adj. [from caro, carnis, Lat.] Flethy.

The first or outward part is a thick and carnous covering, like that of a walnut; the second, a dry and flosculous coat, commonly called mace. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 6.

The muscle whereby he is enabled to draw himself together, the academists describe to be a distinct carnous muscle, extended to the ear. Ray on the Creation.

CAR'OB, or St. John's Bread. [siliqua, Lat.] A plant.

It hath a petalous flower, having many stamina, which grow from the divisions of the flower-cup; in the centre of which rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a fruit or pod, which is plain and fleshy, containing several roundish plain seeds. This tree is very common in Spain, and in some parts of Italy, as also in the Levant, where it grows in the hedges, and produces a great quantity of long, flat, brown-coloured pods, which are thick, mealy, and of a sweetish taste. These pods are many times eaten by the poorer sort of inhabitants. Miller.

CARO'CHE. n. f. [from carosse, Fr.] A coach; a carriage of pleasure. It is used in the comedy of Albumazar, but now it is obsolete.

CAROL. n. f. [carola, Ital. from choreala, Lat.]

1. A song of joy and exultation.

And let the Graces dance unto the rest,

For they can do it best:

The whiles the maidens do their carol sing,

To which the woods shall answer, and their echo ring.

Spenser's Epithalamium.

Even in the old testament, if you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many herse-like airs as carols. Eacon.

Oppos'd to her, on t' other side advance

The costly feast, the carol, and the dance,

Minstrels and musick, poetry and play,

And balls by night, and tournaments by day. Dryden's Fab.

2. A song of devotion.

No night is now with hymn or carol blest.

Shakesp.

They gladly thither haste; and, by a choir

Of squadron'd angels, hear his carol sung. Par. Lost, b. xii.

3. A song in general.

The carol they began that hour,

How that a life was but a flower,

In the spring time.

Shakesp. As you like it.

TO CAR'OL. v. n. [carolare, Ital.] To sing; to warble; to sing in joy and festivity.

Hark, how the cheerful birds do chant their lays,

And carol of love's praise.

Spenser's Epithalamium.

This done, she sung, and caroll'd out so clear,

That men and angels might rejoice to hear.

Dryden.

Hov'ring swans their throats releas'd

From native silence, carol sounds harmonious.

Prior.

TO CAR'OL. v. a. To praise; to celebrate.

She with precious viol'd liquours heals,

For which the shepherds at their festivals,

Carol her goodness loud in rustick lays.

Milton.

CAROTID. adj. [carotides, Lat.] Two arteries which arise out of the ascending trunk of the aorta, near where the subclavian arteries arise.

The carotid, vertebral, and splenick arteries, are not only variously contorted, but also here and there dilated, to moderate the motion of the blood; so the veins are also variously dilated. Ray on the Creation.

CARO'USAL. n. f. [from carouse.] It seems more properly pronounced with the accent upon the second syllable; but Dryden accents it on the first.] A festival.

This game, these carousals Ascanius taught,

And building Alba to the Latins brought.

Dryden's Æn.

TO CARO'USE. v. n. [caroussier, Fr. from gar ausz, all out, Germ.] To drink; to quaff; to drink largely.

He calls for wine: a health, quoth he, as if

H'd been aboard carousing to his mates

After a storm.

Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

Learn with how little life may be preserved,

In gold and myrrh they need not to carouse.

Raleigh.

Now hats fly off, and youths carouse,

Healthis first go round, and then the house,

The brides came thick and thick.

Suckling.

Under the shadow of friendly boughs

They sit carousing, where their liquor grows.

Waller.

TO CARO'USE. v. a. To drink.

Now my sick fool, Roderigo,

Whom love hath turn'd almost the wrong side out,

To Desdemona hath tonight carous'd

Potations pottle deep.

Shakesp. Othello.

Our cheerful guests carouse the sparkling tears

Of the rich grape, whilst musick charms their ears. Denham.

CARO'USE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A drinking match.

Waste in wild riot what your land allows,

There ply the early feast, and late carouse.

Pope's Odyssey.

2. A hearty dose of liquor.

He had so many eyes watching over him, as he could not drink a full carouse of sack; but the state was advertised thereof within few hours after. Davies on Ireland.

Please you, we may contrive this afternoon,

And quaff carouses to our mistress' health.

Shakesp.

CARO'USER. n. f. [from carouse.] A drinker; a toper.

The bold carouser, and advent'ring dame,

Nor fear the fever, nor refuse the flame;

Safe

Safe in his skill from all constraint set free,
But conscious shame, remorse, and piety.

Granville.

CARP. n. f. [carpe, Fr.] A pond fish.

A friend of mine stored a pond of three or four acres with carps and tench. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To CARP. v. n. [carpo, Lat.] To censure; to cavil; to find fault; with at before the thing or person censured.

Tertullian, even often through discontentment, carpeth inju-riously at them, as though they did it even when they were free from such meaning. Hooker, b. iv. § 7.

This your all licens'd fool

Does hourly carp and quarrel, breaking forth

In rank and not to be endured riots. Shakesp. King Lear.

No, not a tooth or nail to scratch,

And at my actions carp or catch. Herbert.

When I spoke,

My honest homely words were carp'd, and censur'd,

For want of courtly stile. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

CARPENTER. n. f. [charpentier, Fr.] An artificer in wood; a builder of houses and ships. He is distinguished from a joiner, as the carpenter performs larger and stronger work.

This work performed with advisement good,

Godfrey his carpenters, and men of skill,

In all the camp, sent to an aged wood. Fairfax, b. iii.

In building Hiero's great ship, there were three hundred car- penters employed for a year together. Wilkins's Dædalus.

In burden'd vessels, first with speedy care,

His plenteous stores do season'd timbers send,

Thither the brawny carpenters repair,

And, as the surgeons of maim'd ships, attend. Dryden.

CARPENTRY. n. f. [from carpenter.] The trade or art of a carpenter.

It had been more proper for me to have introduced carpentry before joinery, because necessity did doubtless compel our forefathers to use the conveniency of the first, rather than the extravagancy of the last. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

CARPER. n. f. [from to carp.] A caviller; a censorious man.

I have not these weeds,

By putting on the cunning of a carper. Shakesp. Timon.

CARPET. n. f. [karpet, Dutch.]

1. A covering of various colours, spread upon floors or tables.

Be the Jacks fair within, the Jills fair without, carpets laid,
and every thing in order. Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

Against the wall, in the middle of the halfpace, is a chair placed before him, with a table and carpet before it. Bacon.

2. Ground variegated with flowers, and level and smooth.

Go signify as much, while here we march

Upon the grassy carpet of this plain. Shakesp. Richard III.

The carpet ground shall be with leaves o'erspread,

And boughs shall weave a cov'ring for your head. Dryden.

3. Any thing variegated.

The whole dry land is, for the most part, covered over with a lovely carpet of green grass, and other herbs. Ray.

4. Carpet is used, proverbially, for a state of ease and luxury; as, a carpet knight, a knight that has never known the field, and has recommended himself only at table.

He is knight, dubbed with unhacked rapier, and on carpet consideration. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

5. To be on the carpet, [sur le tapis, Fr.] is the subject of confi-deration; an affair in hand.

To CARPET. v. a. [from the noun.] To spread with carpets.

We found him in a fair chamber, richly hanged and carpeted under foot, without any degrees to the state; he was set upon a low throne, richly adorned, and a rich cloth of state over his head, of blue sattin embroidered. Bacon's New Atlantis.

The dry land surface we find every where almost naturally carpeted over with grass, and other agreeable wholesome plants.

Derham's Physico-Theology.

CARPING. particip. adj. [from to carp.] Captious; censorious.

No carping critick interrupts his praise,

No rival strives, but for a second place. Granville.

Lay aside therefore a carping spirit, and read even an adversary with an honest design to find out his true meaning: do not snatch at little lapses, and appearances of mistake. Watts.

CARPINGLY. adv. [from carping.] Captiously; censoriously.

We derive out of the Latin at second hand by the French, and make good English, as in these adverbs, carpingly, currently, actively, colourably. Camden's Remains.

CARPMEALS. n. f. A kind of coarse cloth made in the North of England. Phillips's World of Words.

CARPUS. n. f. [Latin.] The wrist, so named by anatomists, which is made up of eight little bones, of different figures and thickness, placed in two ranks, four in each rank. They are strongly tied together by the ligaments which come from the radius, and by the annular ligament. Quincy.

I found one of the bones of the carpus lying loose in the wound. Wifeman's Surgery.

CARRACK. See CARACK.

CARRAT. See CARAT.

CARRA'WAY. See CARAWAY.

Nay, you shall see mine orchard, where, in an arbour, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting, with a dish of carraways, and so forth; come, cousin, silence, and then to bed. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.

CARRIAGE. n. f. [cariage, Fr. baggage; from carry.]

1. The act of carrying or transporting, or bearing any thing.

The unequal agitation of the winds, though material to the carriage of sounds farther or less way, yet do not confound the articulation. Bacon's Natural Hist. N° 193.

If it seem so strange to move this obelisk for so little space, what may we think of the carriage of it out of Egypt?
Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

2. Conquest; acquisition.

Solyman resolved to besiege Vienna, in good hope, that, by the carriage away of that, the other cities would, without resistance, be yielded. Knolles's History of the Turks.

3. Vehicle; that in which any thing is carried.

What horse or carriage can take up and bear away all the loppings of a branchy tree at once? Watts.

4. The frame upon which cannon is carried.

He commanded the great ordnance to be laid upon carriages, which before lay bound in great unwieldy timber, with rings fastened thereto, and could not handsomely be removed to or fro. Knolles's History of the Turks.

5. Behaviour; personal manners.

Before his eyes he did cast a mist, by his own insinuation, and by the carriage of his youth, that expressed a natural princely behaviour. Bacon's Henry VII.

Though in my face there's no affected frown,

Nor in my carriage a feign'd niceness shown,

I keep my honour still without a stain. Dryden.

Let them have ever so learned lectures of breeding, that which will most influence their carriage, will be the company they converse with, and the fashion of those about them. Locke.

6. Conduct; measures; practices.

You may hurt yourself; nay, utterly

Grow from the king's acquaintance by this carriage.

Shakesp. Henry VIII.

He advised the new governour to have so much discretion in his carriage, that there might be no notice taken in the exercise of his religion. Clarendon, b. viii.

7. Management; manner of transacting.

The manner of carriage of the business, was as if there had been secret inquisition upon him. Bacon's Henry VII.

CARRIER. n. f. [from to carry.]

1. One who carries something.

You must distinguish between the motion of the air, which is but a vehiculum causæ, a carrier of the sounds, and the sounds conveyed. Bacon's Nat Hist. N° 125.

For winds, when homeward they return, will drive

The loaded carriers from their evening hive. Dryden.

2. One whose profession or trade is to carry goods for others.

I have rather made it my choice to transcribe all, than to venture the loss of my originals by post or carrier. Pierce's Lett.

The roads are crouded with carriers, laden with rich manufactures. Swift.

3. A messenger; one who carries a message.

The welcome news is in the letter found;

The carrier's not commission'd to expound;

It speaks itself. Dryden's Religio Laici.

4. The name of a species of pigeons, so called from the reported practice of some nations, who send them with letters tied to their necks, which they carry to the place where they were bred, however remote.

There are tame and wild pigeons, and of tame there are croppers, carriers, runts. Walton's Angler.

CARRION. n. f. [charogne, Fr.]

1. The carcase of something not proper for food.

They did eat the dead carriions, and one another soon after;
inasmuch that the very carcases they scraped out of their graves.

Spenser on Ireland.

It is I,

That, lying by the violet in the sun,

Do, as the carriion does, not as the flower. Shakesp.

This foul deed shall smell above the earth,

With carriion men groaning for burial. Shakesp. J. Caesar.

You'll ask me why I rather chuse to have

A weight of carriion flesh, than to receive

Three thousand ducats. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

Ravens are seen in flocks where a carriion lies, and wolves in herds to run down a deer. Temple.

Sheep, oxen, horses fall; and heap'd on high,

The diff'ring species in confusion lie,

Till, warn'd by frequent ills, the way they found,

To lodge their lothsome carriion under ground. Dryden.

Criticks, as they are birds of prey, have ever a natural inclination to carriion. Pope.

2. A name of reproach for a worthless woman.

Shall we send that foolish carriion, Mrs. Quickly, to him, and excuse his throwing into the water.

Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

3. Any flesh so corrupted as not to be fit for food.

Not all that pride that makes thee swell,

As big as thou dost blown up veal;

C A R

Nor all thy tricks and flights to cheat,
Sell all thy carriion for good meat.

Hudibras.

The wolves will get a breakfast by my death,
Yet scarce enough their hunger to supply,
For love has made me carriion ere I die.

Dryden.

CARRION. adj. [from the subst.] Relating to carcases; feeding upon carcases.

Match to match I have encounter'd him,
And made a prey for carriion kites and crows,
Ev'n of the bonny beasts he lov'd so well. Shakesp. H. VI.
The charity of our death-bed visits from one another, is much at a rate with that of a carriion crow to a sheep; we smell a carcase. L'Estrange.

CARROT. n. f. [carote, Fr. daucus, Lat.]

It hath a fleshy root; the leaves are divided into narrow segments; the petals of the flower are unequal, and shaped like a heart; the umbel, when ripe, is hollowed and contracted, appearing somewhat like a bird's nest; the seeds are hairy, and in shape of lice. The species are; 1. Common wild carrot. 2.
Dwarf wild carrot, with broader leaves. 3. Dark red-rooted garden carrot. 4. The orange coloured carrot. 5. The white carrot. The first grows wild upon arable land, and is seldom cultivated. This is the particular sort which should be used in medicine, and for which the druggists commonly sell the seeds of the garden carrot. The third and fourth sorts are commonly cultivated for the kitchen; as is the fifth sort, though not so common in England. The white is generally preferred for the sweetest. But, in order to preserve carrots for use all the winter and spring, about the beginning of November, when the green leaves are decayed, dig them up, and lay them in sand in a dry place, where the frost cannot come to them. Miller.

Carrots, though garden roots, yet they do well in the fields for feed, though the land for them should rather be digged than plowed. Mortimer.

His spouse orders the sack to be immediately opened, and greedily pulls out of it half a dozen bunches of carrots. Dennis.

CARROTINESS. n. f. [from carrot.] Redness of hair.

CARROTY. adj. [from carrot.] Spoken of red hair, on account of its resemblance in colour to carrots.

CARROWS. n. f. [an Irish word.]

The carrows are a kind of people that wander up and down to gentlemens houses, living only upon cards and dice; who, though they have little or nothing of their own, yet will they play for much money. Spenser on Ireland.

TO CARRY. v. a. [charier, Fr. from currus, Lat. See CAR.]

1. To convey from a place; opposed to bring, or convey to a place.
When he dieth, he shall carry nothing away. Pf. xlix. 18.
And devout men carried Stephen to his burial. Acts, viii. 2.
I mean to carry her away this evening, by the help of these two soldiers. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

As in a hive's vimineous dome,
Ten thousand bees enjoy their home;
Each does her studious action vary,
To go and come, to fetch and carry.

Prior.

They exposed their goods with the price marked upon them, then retired; the merchants came, left the price which they would give upon the goods, and likewise retired; the Seres returning, carried off either their goods or money, as they liked best. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. To transport.

They began to carry about in beds those that were sick.
Mark, vi. 55.

The species of audibles seem to be carried more manifestly through the air, than the species of visibles. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Where many great ordnance are shot off together, the sound will be carried, at the least, twenty miles upon the land. Bacon.

3. To bear; to have about one.

Do not take out bones like surgeons I have met with, who carry them about in their pockets. Wise man's Surgery.

4. To take; to have with one.

If the ideas of liberty and volition were carried along with us in our minds, a great part of the difficulties that perplex men's thoughts would be easier resolved. Locke.

I have listened with my utmost attention for half an hour to an oratour, without being able to carry away one single sentence out of a whole sermon. Swift.

5. To convey by force.

Go, carry Sir John Falstaff to the Fleet;

Take all his company along with him. Shakesp. Henry IV.

6. To effect any thing.

There are some vain persons, that whatsoever goeth alone, or moveth upon greater means, if they have never so little hand in it, they think it is they that carry it. Bacon.

Of-times we lose the occasion of carrying a business well thoroughly by our too much haste. Ben. Johnson's Discovery.

These advantages will be of no effect, unless we improve them to words, in the carrying of our main point. Addison.

7. To gain in competition.

And hardly shall I carry out my side,

Her husband being alive. Shakesp. King Lear.

How many stand for consulships?—Three, they say; but it is thought of every one Coriolanus will carry it. Shakesp.

C A R

I see not yet how many of these six reasons can be fairly avoided; and yet if any of them hold good, it is enough to carry the cause. Saunderson.

The latter still enjoying his place, and continuing a joint commissioner of the treasury, still opposed, and commonly car- ried away every thing against him. Clarendon.

8. To gain after resistance.

The count wooes your daughter,

Lays down his wanton siege before her beauty;

Resolves to carry her; let her consent,

As we'll direct her now, 'tis best to bear it. Shakesp.

What a fortune does the thick lips owe,

If he can carry her thus?

Shakesp. Othello.

The town was distressed, and ready for an assault, which, if it had been given, would have cost much blood; but yet the town would have been carried in the end. Bacon's Henry VII.

9. To prevail; with it. [le porter, Fr.]

Are you all resolved to give your voices?

But that's no matter; the greater part carries it. Shakesp.

By these, and the like arts, they promised themselves, that they should easily carry it; so that they entertained the house all the morning with other debates. Clarendon.

If the numerousness of a train must carry it, virtue may go follow Astræa, and vice only will be worth the courting. Glanv.

Children, who live together, often strive for mastery, whose wills shall carry it over the rest. Locke.

In pleasures and pains, the present is apt to carry it, and those at a distance have the disadvantage in the comparison. Locke.

10. To bear out; to face through; to outface.

If a man carries it off, there is so much money saved; and if he be detected, there will be something pleasant in the fro-lick. L'Estrange.

11. To preserve external appearance.

My niece is already in the belief that he's mad; we may carry it thus for our pleasure, and his penance. Shak. T. Night.

12. To manage; to transact.

The senate is generally as numerous as our house of commons; and yet carries its resolutions so privately, that they are seldom known. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

13. To behave; to conduct; with the reciprocal pronoun.

Neglect not also the examples of those that have carried themselves ill in the same place. Bacon.

He attended the king into Scotland, where he did carry him- self with much singular sweetness and temper. Wotton.

He carried himself so insolently in the house, and out of the house, to all persons, that he became odious. Clarendon.

14. To bring forward; to advance in any progress.

It is not to be imagined how far constancy will carry a man;
however, it is better walking slowly in a rugged way, than to break a leg and be a cripple. Locke.

This plain natural way, without grammar, can carry them to a great degree of elegancy and politeness in their language.
Locke on Education, § 168.

There is no vice which mankind carries to such wild extremes, as that of avarice. Swift.

15. To urge; to bear on with some kind of external impulse.

Men are strongly carried out to, and hardly took off from,
the practice of vice. South.

He that the world, or flesh, or devil, can carry away from the profession of an obedience to Christ, is no son of the faithful Abraham. Hammond's Practical Catechism.

Ill nature, passion, and revenge, will carry them too far in punishing others; and therefore God hath certainly appointed government to restrain the partiality and violence of men.
Locke.

16. To bear; to have; to obtain.

In some vegetables, we see something that carries a kind of analogy to sense; they contract their leaves against the cold;
they open them to the favourable heat. Hale's Origin of Mank.

17. To exhibit to show; to display on the outside; to set to view.

The aspect of every one in the family carries so much satisfaction, that it appears he knows his happy lot. Addison. Spect.

18. To imply; to import.

It carries too great an imputation of ignorance, lightness or folly, for men to quit and renounce their former tenets, presently upon the offer of an argument, which they cannot immediately answer. Locke.

19. To contain.

He thought it carried something of argument in it, to prove that doctrine. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

20. To have annexed; to have any thing joined.

There was a righteous and a searching law, directly forbidding such practices; and they knew that it carried with it the divine stamp. South.

There are many expressions, which carry with them to my mind no clear ideas. Locke.

The obvious portions of extension, that affect our senses,
carry with them into the mind the idea of finite. Locke.

21. To convey or bear any thing united or adhering, by communication of motion.

We see also manifestly, that sounds are carried with wind;
and

and therefore sounds will be heard further with the wind than against the wind. Bacon's Natural History, No 125.

22. To move or continue any thing in a certain direction.
His chimney is carried up through the whole rock, so that you see the sky through it, notwithstanding the rooms lie very deep. Addison on Italy.

23. To push on ideas in a train.
Manethes, that wrote of the Egyptians, hath carried up their government to an incredible distance. Hale's Origin of Mank.

24. To receive; to endure.
Some have in readiness so many odd stories, as there is nothing but they can wrap it into a tale, to make others carry it with more pleasure. Bacon, Essay 23.

25. To support; to sustain.
Carry camomile, or wild thyme, or the green strawberry, upon sticks, as you do hops upon poles. Bacon's Nat. History.

26. To bear, as trees.
Set them a reasonable depth, and they will carry more shoots upon the stem. Bacon's Natural History, No 425.

27. To fetch and bring, as dogs.
Young whelps learn easily to carry; young popinjays learn quickly to speak. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

28. To carry off. To kill.
Old Parr lived to one hundred and fifty three years of age, and might have gone further, if the change of air had not carried him off. Temple.

29. To carry on. To promote; to help forward.
It carries on the same design that is promoted by authours of a graver turn, and only does it in another manner. Addison.

30. To carry on. To continue; to advance from one stage to another.
By the administration of grace, begun by our Blessed Saviour, carried on by his disciples, and to be completed by their successors to the world's end, all types that darkened this faith, are enlightned. Sprat.
Aeneas's settlement in Italy was carried on through all the oppositions in his way to it, both by sea and land. Addison.

31. To carry on. To prosecute; not to let cease.
France will not consent to furnish us with money sufficient to carry on the war. Temple.

32. To carry through. To support; to keep from failing, or being conquered.
That grace will carry us, if we do not wilfully betray our succours, victoriously through all difficulties. Hammond.

To CARRY. v. n.
1. A hare is said, by hunters, to carry, when she runs on rotten ground, or on frost, and it sticks to her feet.
2. A horse is said to carry well, when his neck is arched, and he holds his head high; but when his neck is short, and ill shaped, and he lowers his head, he is said to carry low.
3. To carry it high. To be proud.

CARRY-TALE. n. f. [from carry and tale.] A talebearer.
Some carry-tale, some pleafeman, some flight zany,
Told our intents before. Shakesp. Love's Labour Lost.

CART. n. f. See CAR. [cart, cart, Sax.]

1. A carriage in general.
The Scythians are described by Herodotus to lodge always in carts, and to feed upon the milk of mares. Temple.
Triptolemus, so sung the Nine,
Strew'd plenty from his cart divine. Dryden.

2. A wheel-carriage, used commonly for luggage.
Now while my friend, just ready to depart,
Was packing all his goods in one poor cart,
He stopp'd a little—— Dryden's Juvenal.

3. A small carriage with two wheels, used by husbandmen, distinguished from a waggon, which has four wheels.
Alas! what weights are these that load my heart!
I am as dull as winter-starved sheep,
Tir'd as a jade in overladen cart. Sidney.

4. The vehicle in which criminals are carried to execution.
The squire, whose good grace was to open the scene,
Now fitted the halter, now travers'd the cart,
And often took leave, but was loth to depart. Prior.

To CART. v. a. [from the noun.] To expose in a cart by way of punishment.
Democritus ne'er laugh'd so loud,
To see bawds carted through the croud. Hudibras.
No woman led a better life:
She to intrigues was e'en hard-hearted;
She chuckl'd when a bawd was carted;
And thought the nation ne'er would thrive,
Till all the whores were burnt alive. Prior.

To CART. v. n. To use carts for carriage.
Oxen are not so good for draught, where you have occasion to cart much, but for winter ploughing. Mortimer.

CART-HORSE. n. f. [from cart and horse.] A coarse unwieldy horse, fit only for the cart.
It was determined, that these sick and wounded soldiers should be carried upon the cart-horses. Knolles.

CART-JADE. n. f. [from cart and jade.] A vile horse, fit only for the cart.
He came out with all his clowns, horsed upon such cart-

jades, so furnished, I thought if that were thrift, I wished none of my friends or subjects ever to thrive. Sidney, b. ii.

CART-LOAD. n. f. [from cart and load.]
1. A quantity of any thing piled on a cart.
A cart-load of carrots appeared of darker colour, when looked upon where the points were obverted to the eye, than where the sides were so. Boyle.
Let Wood and his accomplices travel about a country with cart-loads of their ware, and see who will take it. Swift.

2. A quantity sufficient to load a cart.

CART-WAY. n. f. [from cart and way.] A way through which a carriage may conveniently travel.
Where your woods are large, it is best to have a cart-way along the middle of them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CARTE BLANCHE. [French.] A blank paper; a paper to be filled up with such conditions as the person to whom it is sent thinks proper.

CARTEL. n. f. [cartel, Fr. cartello, Ital.] A writing containing, for the most part, stipulations between enemies.
As this discord among the sisterhood is likely to engage them in a long and lingering war, it is the more necessary that there should be a cartel settled among them. Addison's Freeholder.

CARTER. n. f. [from cart.] The man who drives a cart, or whose trade it is to drive a cart.
If he love her not,
Let me be no assistant for a state,
But keep a farm, and carters. Shakesp. Hamlet.
The divine goodness never fails, provided that, according to the advice of Hercules to the carter, we put our own shoulders to the work. L'Estrange.
The criminals are seiz'd upon the place:
Carter and host confronted face to face. Dryden.
It is the prudence of a carter to put bells upon his horses, to make them carry their burdens cheerfully. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

CARTILAGE. n. f. [cartilago, Lat.] A smooth and solid body, softer than a bone, but harder than a ligament. In it are no cavities or cells for containing of marrow; nor is it covered over with any membrane to make it sensible, as the bones are. The cartilages have a natural elasticity, by which, if they are forced from their natural figure or situation, they return to it of themselves, as soon as that force is taken away. Quincy.
Those canals, by degrees, are abolished, and grow solid; several of them united, grow a membrane; these membranes further consolidated, become cartilages, and cartilages bones. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CARTILAGINEOUS. } n. f. [from cartilage.] Consisting of car-CARTILAGINOUS. } tilages.
By what artifice the cartilagineous kind of fishes poise themselves, ascend and descend at pleasure, and continue in what depth of water they list, is as yet unknown. Ray.
The larynx gives passage to the breath, and, as the breath passeth through the rimula, makes a vibration of those cartilaginous bodies, which forms that breath into a vocal sound or voice. Holder's Elements of Speech.

CARTOON. n. f. [cartone, Ital.] A painting or drawing upon large paper.
It is with a vulgar idea that the world beholds the cartoons of Raphael, and every one feels his share of pleasure and entertainment. Watts's Logick.

CARTOUCH. n. f. [cartouche, Fr.] A case of wood three inches thick at the bottom, girt round with marlin, and holding forty-eight musket balls, and six or eight iron balls of a pound weight. It is fired out of a hobit or small mortar, and is proper for defending a pass. Harris.

CARTRAGE. } n. f. [cartouche, Fr.] A case of paper or parch-
CARTRIDGE. } ment filled with gunpowder, used for the greater expedition in charging guns.
Our careful monarch stands in person by,
His new-cast cannons firmness to explore;
The strength of big-corn'd powder loves to try,
And ball and cartrage sorts for every bore. Dryden.

CARTRUT. n. f. [from cart and rut; route, a way.] The track made by a cart wheel.

CARTULARY. n. f. [from charta, paper, Lat.] A place where papers or records are kept.

CARTWRIGHT. n. f. [from cart and wright.] A maker of carts.

To CARVE. v. a. [ceorfan, Sax. kerven, Dutch.]
1. To cut wood, or stone, or other matter, into elegant forms.
Taking the very refuse among those which served to no use, he hath carved it diligently when he had nothing else to do. Wisdom, xiii. 13.
Had Democrates really carved mount Athos into a statue of Alexander the Great, and had the memory of the fact been obliterated by some accident, who could afterwards have proved it impossible, but that it might casually have been? Bentley.

2. To cut meat at the table.

3. To make any thing by carving or cutting.
Yet fearing idleness, the nurse of ill,
In sculpture exercis'd his happy skill;

And carv'd in iv'ry such a maid so fair,
As nature could not with his art compare,
Were she to work.

Dryden.

4. To engrave.

O Rosalind! these trees shall be my books,
And in their barks my thoughts I'll character;
That every eye, which in this forest looks,
Shall see thy virtue witness'd every where.

Run, run, Orlando, carve on every tree,

The fair, the chaste, the unexpressive she.

Shakespeare.

5. To chuse one's own part.

He had been a keeper of his flocks, both from the violence of robbers and his own soldiers; who could easily have carved themselves their own food.

South.

How dares sinful dust and ashes invade the prerogative of providence, and carve out to himself the seasons and issues of life and death?

South.

The labourer's share, being seldom more than a bare subsistence, never allows that body of men opportunity to struggle with the richer, unless when some common and great distress emboldens them to carve to their wants.

Locke.

6. To cut; to hew.

Or they will buy his sheep forth of the cote,

Or they will carve the shepherd's throat.

Spenser's Pastorals.

Brave Macbeth, with his brandish'd steel,

Like valour's minion, carved out his passage.

Shakespeare.

TO CARVE. v. n.

1. To exercise the trade of a sculptor.

2. To perform at table the office of supplying the company from the dishes.

in her; she discourges, she carves, she gives the leer of invitation.

Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Well then, things handsomely were serv'd;

My mistress for the strangers carv'd.

Prior.

CA'RVEL. n. f. [See CARAVEL.] A small ship.

I gave them order, if they found any Indians there, to send in the little fly-boat, or the carvel, into the river; for, with our great ships, we durst not approach the coast.

Raleigh.

CA'RVIER. n. f. [from carve.]

1. A sculptor.

All arts and artists Perseus could command,

Who sold for hire, or wrought for better fame,

The master painters and the carvers came.

Dryden.

2. He that cuts up the meat at the table.

Meanwhile thy indignation yet to raise,

The carver, dancing round each dish, surveys

With flying knife, and, as his art directs,

With proper gestures ev'ry fowl dissects.

Dryden.

3. He that chooses for himself.

In this kind, to come in braving arms,

Be his own carver, and cut out his way,

To find out right with wrongs it may not be.

Shak. R. II.

We are not the carvers of our own fortunes.

L'Estrange.

CA'RVING. n. f. [from carve.] Sculpture; figures carved.

They can no more last like the ancients, than excellent carv- ings in wood, like those in marble and brass.

Temple.

The lids are ivy, grapes in clusters lurk

Beneath the carving of the curious work.

Dryden's Virgil.

CARU'NCLE. n. f. [caruncula, Lat.] A small protuberance of flesh, either natural or morbid.

Caruncles are a sort of loose flesh, arising in the urethra by the erosion made by virulent acid matter.

Wifeman.

CARYATES. } n. f. [from Carya, a city taken by the Greeks,

CARYATIDES. } who led away the women captives; and, to perpetuate their slavery, represented them in buildings as charged with burdens.] An order of columns or pilasters under the figures of women, dressed in long robes, serving to support entablatures.

Chambers.

CASCA'DE. n. f. [cascade, Fr. cascata, Ital. from cascare, a low word, to fall] A cataract; a water-fall.

Rivers diverted from their native course,

And bound with chains of artificial force,

From large cascades in pleasing tumult roll'd,

Or rose through figur'd stone, or breathing gold.

Prior.

The most enlivening part of all is the river Teverone, which throws itself down a precipice, and falls by several cascades, from one rock to another, till it gains the bottom of the valley.

Addison on Italy.

CASE. n. f. [caisse, Fr. a box.]

1. Something that covers or contains any thing else; a covering; a box; a sheath.

O cleave, my sides!

Heart, once be stronger than thy continent,

Crack thy frail case.

Shakespeare. Antony and Cleopatra.

Each thought was visible that roll'd within,

As through a crystal case the figur'd hours are seen.

Dryden.

Other caterpillars produced maggots, that immediately made themselves up in cases.

Ray on the Creation.

The body is but a case to this vehicle.

Broome on the Odyssey.

Just then Clarissa drew, with tempting grace,

A two-edg'd weapon from her shining case.

Pope.

case for such monuments, and to furnish it with other choice collections from all parts of his own charge.

Wotton.

CASE-KNIFE. n. f. [from case and knife.] A large kitchen knife.

The king always acts with a great case-knife stuck in his girdle, which the lady snatches from him in the struggle, and so defends herself.

Addison's Remarks on Italy.

CASE-SHOT. n. f. [from case and shot.] Bullets inclosed in a case.

In each seven small brass and leather guns, charged with case-shot.

Clarendon, b. viii.

CASE. n. f. [casus, Lat.]

1. Condition with regard to outward circumstances.

Unworthy wretch, quoth he, of so great grace,

How dare I think such glory to attain?

These that have it attain'd, were in like case,

Quoth he, as wretched, and liv'd in like pain.

Fairy Queen.

Question your royal thoughts, make the case yours;

Be now a father, and propose a son.

Shakespeare. Henry IV. p. ii.

Some knew the face,

And all had heard the much lamented case.

Dryden.

These were the circumstances under which the Corinthians then were, and the argument which the apostle advances, is intended to reach their particular case.

Atterbury.

My youth may be made, as it never fails in executions, a case of compassion.

Pope's Preface to his Works.

2. State of things.

He saith, that if there can be found such an inequality between man and man, as there is between man and beast, or between soul and body, it investeth a right of government, which seemeth rather an impossible case, than an untrue sentence.

Bacon's Holy War.

Here was the case; an army of English, wasted and tired with a long winter's siege, engaged an army of a greater number than themselves, fresh and in vigour.

Bacon.

I can but be a slave where-ever I am; so that taken or not taken, 'tis all a case to me.

L'Estrange.

They are excellent in order to certain ends; he hath no need to use them, as the case now stands, being provided for with the provision of an angel.

Taylor's Holy Living.

Your parents did not produce you much into the world, whereby you have fewer ill impressions; but they failed, as is generally the case, in too much neglecting to cultivate your mind.

Swift.

3. In physick; state of the body.

It was well; for we had rather met with calms and contrary winds, than any tempests; for our sick were many, and in very ill case.

Bacon.

Chalybeate water seems to be a proper remedy in hypochon-driacal cases.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

4. In ludicrous language, condition with regard to leanness, or health.

Thou liest, most ignorant monster, I am in case to justify a constable.

Shakespeare. Tempest.

Pray have but patience till then, and when I am in little better case, I'll throw myself in the very mouth of you.

L'Estr.

Quoth Ralph, I should not, if I were

In case for action, now be here.

Hudibras, p. i. cant. iii.

For if the fire be faint, or out of case,

He will be copy'd in his famish'd race.

Dryden's Virgil.

The priest was pretty well in case,

And shew'd some humour in his face;

Look'd with an easy careless mien,

A perfect stranger to the spleen.

Swift.

5. Contingence.

The atheist, in case things should fall out contrary to his belief or expectation, hath made no provision for this case; if, contrary to his confidence, it should prove in the issue that there is a God, the man is lost and undone for ever.

Tillotson.

6. Question relating to particular persons or things.

Well do I find each man most wise in his own case.

Sidney.

It is strange, that the ancient fathers should not appeal to this judge, in all cases, it being so short and expedite a way for the ending of controversies.

Tillotson.

7. Representation of any fact or question.

If he be not apt to beat over matters, and to call up one thing, to prove and illustrate another, let him study the lawyers cases: so every defect of the mind may have a special receipt.

Bacon, Essay 51.

8. The variation of nouns.

The several changes which the noun undergoes in the Latin and Greek tongues, in the several numbers, are called cases, and are designed to express the several views or relations under which the mind considers things with regard to one another; and the variation of the noun for this purpose is called declension.

Clark's Latin Grammar.

9. In case. [nel caso, Ital.] If it should happen; upon the supposition that: a form of speech now little used.

For

For in case it be certain, hard it cannot be for them to shew us where we shall find it; that we may say these were the orders of the apostles. Hooker, b. iii.

A sure retreat to his forces, in case they should have an ill day, or unlucky chance in the field. Bacon's Henry VII.

This would be the accomplishment of their common felicity, in case, either by their evil destiny or advice, they suffered not the occasion to be lost. Hayward.

To CASE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put in a case or cover.

Case ye, case ye; on with your vizours; there's money of the king's coming down the hill. Shakefp. Henry IV. p. i.

The cry went once for thee,

And still it might, and yet it may again,

If thou would'st not entomb thyself alive,

And case thy reputation in a tent. Shakefp. Troil. and Cress.

On whose luxuriant herbage, half conceal'd,

Like a fall'n cedar, far diffus'd his train,

Case'd in green scales, the crocodile extends. Thomson.

2. To cover as a case.

Then comes my fit again, I had else been perfect;

As broad, and gen'ral, as the *casin*g air,

To faucy doubts and fears. Shakefp. Macbeth.

3. To cover on the outside with materials different from the inside.

Then they began to case their houses with marble.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

4. To strip off the covering; to take off the skin.

We'll make you some sport with the fox ere we case him.

Shakefp. All's well that ends well.

To CASE. v. n. To put cases; to contrive representations of facts.

They fell presently to reasoning and *casin*g upon the matter with him, and laying distinctions before him. L'Estrange.

To CASEHARDEN. v. a. [from case and harden.] To harden on the outside.

The manner of casehardening is thus: Take cow horn or hoof, dry it thoroughly in an oven, then beat it to powder; put about the same quantity of bay salt to it, and mingle them together with stale chamberlye, or else white wine vinegar. Lay some of this mixture upon loam, and cover your iron all over with it; then wrap the loam about all, and lay it upon the hearth of the forge to dry and harden. Put it into the fire, and blow up the coals to it, till the whole lump have just a blood-red heat. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

CA'SEMATE. n. f. [from casa armata, Ital. casamata, Span. a vault formerly made to separate the platforms of the lower and upper batteries.]

1. [In fortification.] A kind of vault or arch of stone-work, in that part of the flank of a bastion next the curtain, somewhat retired or drawn back towards the capital of the bastion, serving, as a battery, to defend the face of the opposite bastion, and the moat or ditch. Chambers.

2. The well, with its several subterraneous branches, dug in the passage of the bastion; till the miner is heard at work, and air given to the mine. Harris.

CA'SEMENT. n. f. [casamento, Ital.] A window opening upon hinges.

Why, then may you have a casement of the great chamber window, where we play, open, and the moon may shine in at the casement. Shakefp. Midsummer Night's Dream.

Here in this world they do much knowledge read,

And are the casements which admit most light. Davies.

They, waken'd with the noise, did fly

From inward room to window eye,

And gently op'ning lid, the casement,

Look'd out, but yet with some amazement. Hudibras.

There is as much difference between the clear representations of the understanding then, and the obscure discoveries that it makes now, as there is between the prospect of a casement and a key-hole. South.

CA'SEOUS. adj. [caseus, Lat.] Resembling cheese; cheesy.

Its fibrous parts are from the caseous parts of the chyle.

Floyer on Humours.

CA'SERN. n. f. [caserne, Fr.] A little room or lodgement erected between the rampart and the houses of fortified towns, to serve as apartments or lodgings for the soldiers of the garrison, with beds. Harris.

CA'SEWORM. n. f. [from case and worm.] A grub that makes itself a case.

Cadises, or caseworms, are to be found in this nation, in several distinct counties, and in several little brooks. Floyer.

CASH. n. f. [caisse, Fr. a chest.] Money; properly ready money; money in the chest, or at hand.

A thief, bent to unhoard the cash

Of some rich burgher. Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 188.

He is at an end of all his cash; he has both his law and his daily bread now upon trust. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

He sent the thief, that stole the cash, away,

And punish'd him that put it in his way. Pope.

CA'SH-KEEPER. n. f. [from cash and keep.] A man entrusted with the money.

Dispensator was properly a cash-keeper, or privy-purse.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

CA'SHEWNUT. n. f. A tree.

The cup of the flower, which is produced at the extremity of a footstalk, is oblong and quinquefid; the flower consists of one leaf, which is divided into five long narrow segments; in the bottom of the calyx is the ovary, which becomes a soft pear-shaped fruit; upon the apex of which grows a vessel, in which is contained one kidney-shaped seed. This tree is very common in Jamaica and Barbadoes, where it grows very large, but in England will rarely stand through our winters. The inhabitants of the West Indies plant them from branches taken from the old trees; which, with them, take root very well, and in two years time produce fruits. Miller.

CASHI'ER. n. f. [from cash.] He that has charge of the money.

If a steward or cashier be suffered to run on, without bringing him to a reckoning, such a sottish forbearance will teach him to shuffle. South.

A Venetian, finding his son's expences grow very high, ordered his cashier to let him have no more money than what he should count when he received it. Locke.

Flight of cashiers, or mobs, he'll never mind;

And knows no losses, while the muse is kind. Pope.

To CASHI'ER. v. a. [casser, Fr. caissare, Lat.]

1. To discard; to dismiss from a post, or a society, with reproach.

Does 't not go well? Cassio hath beaten thee,

And thou by that small hurt hast cashier'd Cassio. Shakefp.

Seconds in factions many times prove principals; but many times also they prove cyphers, and are cashiered. Bacon.

If I had omitted what he said, his thoughts and words being thus cashiered in my hands, he had no longer been Lucretius. Dryden.

They have already cashiered several of their followers as mutineers. Addison's Freeholder.

The ruling rogue, who dreads to be cashier'd,

Contrives, as he is hated, to be fear'd. Swift.

2. It seems, in the following passages, to signify the same as to annul; to vacate; which is sufficiently agreeable to the derivation.

If we should find a father corrupting his son, or a mother her daughter, we must charge this upon a peculiar anomaly and baseness of nature; if the name of nature may be allowed to that which seems to be utter cashiering of it, and deviation from, and a contradiction to, the common principles of humanity. South.

Some, out of an overfondness of that darling invention, cashier, or at least endeavour to invalidate, all other arguments, and forbid us to hearken to those proofs, as weak or fallacious. Locke.

CASK. n. f. [casque, Fr. cadus, Lat.]

1. A barrel; a wooden vessel to stop up liquor or provisions.

The patient turning himself abed, it makes a fluctuating kind of noise, like the rumbling of water in a cask. Harvey.

Perhaps tomorrow he may change his wine,

And drink old sparkling Alban, or Setine,

Whose title, and whose age, with mould o'ergrown,

The good old cask for ever keeps unknown. Dryden.

2. It has cask in a kind of plural sense, to signify the commodity or provision of casks.

Great inconveniencies grow by the bad cask being commonly so ill seasoned and conditioned, as that a great part of the beer is ever lost and cast away. Raleigh.

CASK. } n. f. [casque, Fr. caiss, Lat.] A helmet; armour for CASQUE. } the head: a poetical word.

Let thy blows, doubly redoubled,

Fall like amazing thunder on the casque

Of thy pernicious enemy. Shakefp. Richard II.

And these

Sling weighty stones, when from afar they fight;

Their casques are cork, a covering thick and light. Dryden.

What are his aims? why does he load with darts

His trembling hands, and crush beneath a cask

His wrinkled brows? Addison's Cato.

CA'SKET. n. f. [a diminutive of caisse, a chest, Fr. caisse, caissette.] A small box or chest for jewels, or things of particular value.

O ignorant poor man! what dost thou bear,

Lock'd up within the casquet of thy breast?

What jewels, and what riches hast thou there?

What heav'nly treasure in so weak a chest? Davies.

They found him dead, and cast into the streets,

An empty casquet, where the jewel, life,

By some damn'd hand was robb'd, and ta'en away. Shakefp.

Mine eye hath found that sad sepulchral rock,

That was the casquet of heav'n's richest store. Milton.

That had by chance pack'd up his choicest treasure

In one dear casquet, and sav'd only that. Otway's Ven. Preserv.

This casquet India's glowing gems unlocks,

And all Arabia breathes from yonder box. Pope.

To CA'SKET. v. a. [from the noun.] To put in a casket.

CASSA'TION. n. f. [caffatio, Lat.] A making null or void. D.

CA'SSAVI. } n. f. An American plant.
CA'SSADA. }

It has a short spreading bell-shaped flower, consisting of one leaf, cut into several parts, whose pointal afterwards becomes a roundish fruit, composed of three cells joined together, each containing one oblong seed. To these notes should be added, male flowers having no pointal, and which, growing round the female flower, fall off, and are never fruitful. The species are six: 1. The common caffavi, or caffada. 2. The most prickly caffavi, with a chaste tree leaf. 3. Tree-like less prickly caffavi, with white flowers growing in umbels, and a stinging wolfsbane leaf. 4. Shrubby caffavi, without prickles, and smooth leaves, which are less divided, &c. The first sort is cultivated in all the warm parts of America, where the root, after being divested of its milky juice, is ground to flour, and then made into cakes of bread. Of this there are two sorts. The most common has purplish stalks, with the veins and leaves of a purplish colour; but the stalks of the other are green, and the leaves of a lighter green. The last sort is not venomous, even when the roots are fresh and full of juice; which the negroes frequently dig up, roast, and eat, like potatoes, without any ill effects. The caffada is propagated by cuttings, about fifteen or sixteen inches long, taken from those plants whose roots are grown to maturity. These cuttings are planted by the Americans in their rainy seasons, a foot or fourteen inches deep in the ground; and the land in which they are placed, must be well wrought. When the cuttings have taken root, they require no farther care than to be kept clear from weeds; and, in about eight or nine months, when grown to maturity, in good ground they will be as large as the calf of a man's leg, but commonly equal to the size of good parsneps. Miller.

CA'SSAWARE. See CASSIOWARY.

CA'SSIA. n. f. A sweet spice mentioned by Moses, Exod. xxx. 24. as an ingredient in the composition of the holy oil, which was to be made use of in the consecration of the sacred vessels of the tabernacle. This aromack is said to be the bark of a tree very like cinamon, and grows in the Indies without being cultivated. Calmet.

All thy garments smell of myrrh, aloes, and caffia. Pf. xlv. 8.

CA'SSIA. n. f. The name of a tree.

It hath a cylindrical, long, taper, or flat pod, divided into many cells by transverse diaphragms; in each of which is contained one hard seed, lodged, for the most part, in a clammy black substance, which is purgative. The flowers have five leaves, disposed orbicularly. The species are nine; 1. The American caffia, with roundish pointed leaves. 2. The purging caffia, or pudding pipe tree, &c. Many of these plants will flower the second year, and some of them will produce ripe seeds with us. The second sort grows to be a very large tree, not only in Alexandria, but also in the West Indies. This is what produces the purging caffia of the shops. Miller.

CA'SSIDONY, or Stickadore. n. f. [stoechas, Latin.] The name of a plant.

CA'SSIOWARY. n. f. A large bird of prey in the East Indies.

The bird of conquest her chief feather cast. Fairfax, b. iii.
Of plants some are green all winter, others cast their leaves. Bacon's Natural History, N° 592.

The casting of the skin is, by the ancients, compared to the breaking curd of the secundine, or cawl, but not rightly; for that were to make every casting of the skin a new birth: and besides, the secundine is but a general cover, not shaped according to the parts, but the skin is shaped according to the parts. The creatures that cast the skin, are the snake, the viper, the grasshopper, the lizzard, the silkworm, &c. Bacon's Natural History, N° 732.

O fertile head, which ev'ry year
Could such a crop of wonders bear!
Which might it never have been cast,
Each year's growth added to the last,
These lofty branches had supply'd
The earth's bold sons prodigious pride. Waller.

The waving harvest bends beneath his blast,
The forest shakes, the groves their honours cast. Dryden.

From hence, my lord, and love, I thus conclude,
That though my homely ancestors were rude,
Mean as I am, yet may I have the grace
To make you father of a generous race:

- And noble then am I, when I begin,
In virtue cloath'd, to cast the rags of sin. Dryden's W. of B.
The ladies have been in a kind of moulting season, having cast great quantities of ribbon and cambrick, and reduced the human figure to the beautiful globular form. Addison. Spectator.
18. To lay aside, as fit to be worn no longer.
So may cast poets write; there's no pretension
To argue loss of wit, from loss of pension. Dryden's D. Seb.
He has ever been of opinion, that giving cast clothes to be worn by valets, has a very ill effect upon little minds. Addison.
19. To have abortions; to bring forth before the time.
Thy ewes and thy she-goats have not cast their young, and the rams of thy flock have I not eaten. Gen. xxxi. 38.
20. To overweigh; to make to preponderate; to decide by over-ballancing.
Which being inclined, not constrained, contain within themselves the casting act, and a power to command the conclusion. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 13.
How much interest casts the balance in cases dubious. South.
Life and death are equal in themselves,
That which could cast the balance, is thy falshood. Dryden.
Not many years ago, it so happened, that a cobbler had the casting vote for the life of a criminal, which he very graciously gave on the merciful side. Addison on Italy.
Suppose your eyes sent equal rays
Upon two distant pots of ale,
In this sad state, your doubtful choice
Would never have the casting voice. Prior.
21. To compute; to reckon; to calculate.
Hearts, tongues, figure, scribes, bards, poets, cannot Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number, ho!
His love to Antony. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.
Here is now the smith's note for shoeing and plow-irons.—
Let it be cast and paid. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.
You cast th' event of war, my noble lord,
And summ'd th' account of chance, before you said,
Let us make head. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.
The best way to represent to life the manifold use of friendship, is to cast and see how many things there are, which a man cannot do himself. Bacon's Essays.
I have lately been casting in my thoughts the several unhappinesses of life, and comparing the infelicities of old age to those of infancy. Addison. Spectator, N° 131.
22. To contrive; to plan out.
The cloister facing the South, is covered with vines, and would have been proper for an orange-house; and had, I doubt not, been cast for that purpose, if this piece of gardening had been then in as much vogue as it is now. Temple.
23. To judge; to consider in order to judgment.
If thou couldst, doctor, cast
The water of my land, find her disease,
And purge it to a sound and pristine health,
I would applaud thee to the very echo,
That should applaud again. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Peace, brother, be not over exquisite
To cast the fashion of uncertain evils. Milton.
24. To fix the parts in a play.
Our parts in the other world will be new cast, and mankind will be there ranged in different stations of superiority.
Addison. Spectator, N° 219.
25. To glance; to direct the eye.
Zelmanes's languishing countenance, with crossed arms, and sometimes cast up eyes, she thought to have an excellent grace.
Sidney, b. ii.
As he past along,
How earnestly he cast his eyes upon me. Shakesp. H. VIII.
Begin, auspicious boy, to cast about
Thy infant eyes, and, with a smile, thy mother single out.
Dryden's Virgil, Past. iv.
Far eastward cast thine eye, from whence the sun,
And orient science, at a birth begun. Pope's Dunciad.
He then led me to the rock, and, placing me on the top of it, Cast thy eyes eastward, said he, and tell me what thou seest. Addison. Spectator, N° 159.
26. To found; to form by running in a mould.
When any such curious work of silver is to be cast, as requires that the impression of hairs, or very slender lines, be taken off by the metal, it is not enough, that the silver be barely melted; but it must be kept a considerable while in a strong fusion. Boyle.
How to build ships, and dreadful ordnance cast,
Instruct the artist. Waller.
The father's grief restrain'd his art;
He twice essay'd to cast his son in gold,
Twice from his hands he dropp'd the forming mould.
Dryden, Æneid vi.
27. To melt metal into figures.
Yon' croud, he might reflect, yon' joyful croud
With restless rage would pull my statue down,
And cast the brags anew to his renown. Prior.
This was but as a refiner's fire, to purge out the dross, and then cast the mass again into a new mould. Burnet's Theory.
VOL. I.

28. To model; to form.
We may take a quarter of a mile for the common measure of the depth of the sea, if it were cast into a channel of an equal depth every where. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Under this influence, derived from mathematical studies, some have been tempted to cast all their logical, their metaphysical, and their theological and moral learning into this method.
Watts's Logick.
29. To communicate by reflection or emanation.
So bright a splendour, so divine a grace,
The glorious Daphnis casts on his illustrious race. Dryden.
We may happen to find a fairer light cast over the same scriptures, and see reason to alter our sentiments even in some points of moment. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
30. To yield, or give up, without reserve or condition.
The reason of mankind cannot suggest any solid ground of satisfaction, but in making God our friend, and in carrying a conscience so clear, as may encourage us, with confidence, to cast ourselves upon him. South.
31. To inflict.
The world is apt to cast great blame on those who have an indifferency for opinions, especially in religion. Locke.
32. To cast away. To shipwreck.
Sir Francis Drake, and John Thomas, meeting with a storm, it thrust John Thomas upon the islands to the South, where he was cast away. Raleigh's Essays.
His father Philip had, by like mishap, been like to have been cast away upon the coast of England. Knolles's History.
With pity mov'd, for others cast away
On rocks of hope and fears. Roscommon.
But now our fears tempestuous grow,
And cast our hopes away;
Whilst you, regardless of our woe,
Sit careless at a play. Dorset.
33. To cast away. To lavish; to waste in profusion; to turn to no use.
They that want means to nourish children, will abstain from marriage; or, which is all one, they cast away their bodies upon rich old women. Raleigh's Essays.
France, hast thou yet more blood to cast away?
Say, shall the current of our right run on? Shakesp. K. J.
He might be silent, and not cast away
His sentences in vain. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
O Marcia, O my sister, still there's hope!
Our father will not cast away a life,
So needful to us all, and to his country. Addison's Cato.
34. To cast away. To ruin.
It is no impossible thing for states, by an oversight in some one act or treaty between them and their potent opposites, utterly to cast away themselves for ever. Hooker, b. iii. § 10.
35. To cast down. To deject; to depress the mind.
We're not the first,
Who, with best meaning, have incurr'd the worst;
For thee, oppress'd king, I am cast down;
Myself could else outfrown false fortune's frown.
Shakesp. King Lear.
The best way will be to let him see you are much cast down,
and afflicted, for the ill opinion he entertains of you.
Addison. Spectator, N° 171.
36. To cast off. To discard; to put away.
The prince will, in the perfectness of time,
Cast off his followers. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.
He led me on to mightiest deeds,
But now hath cast me off, as never known. Milt. Agonistes.
How! not call him father? I see preferment alters a man strangely; this may serve me for an use of instruction, to cast off my father, when I am great. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
I long to clasp that haughty maid,
And bend her stubborn virtue to my passion:
When I have gone thus far, I'd cast her off. Addison's Cato.
37. To cast off. To reject.
It is not to be imagined, that a whole society of men should publickly and professedly disown, and cast off a rule, which they could not but be infallibly certain was a law. Locke.
38. To cast off. To disburden one's self of.
All conspired in one to cast off their subjection to the crown of England. Spenser's State of Ireland.
This maketh them, through an unweariable desire of receiving instruction, to cast off the care of those very affairs, which do most concern their estate. Hooker, Preface.
The true reason why any man is an atheist, is because he is a wicked man: religion would curb him in his lusts; and therefore he casts it off, and puts all the scorn upon it he can.
Tillotson, Serm. ii.
Company, in any action, gives credit and countenance to the agent; and so much as the sinner gets of this, so much he casts off of shame. South.
We see they never fail to exert themselves, and to cast off the oppression, when they feel the weight of it. Addison.
39. To cast off. To leave behind.
Away he scours cross the fields, casts off the dogs, and gains a wood; but, pressing through a thicket, the bushes held him 4 D by

by the horns, till the hounds came in, and plucked him down.
L'Estrange, Fab. xliii.

40. To cast off. [hunting term.] To let go, or set free; as, to cast off the dogs.

41. To cast out. To reject; to turn out of doors.
Thy brat hath been cast out, like to itself, no father owning it.
Shakefp. Winter's Tale.

42. To cast out. To vent; to speak; with some intimation of negligence or vehemence.

Why dost thou cast out such ungenerous terms
Against the lords and sovereigns of the world? Add. Cato.

43. To cast up. To compute; to calculate.
Some writers, in casting up the goods most desirable in life, have given them this rank, health, beauty, and riches. Temple.
A man who designs to build, is very exact, as he supposes, in casting up the cost beforehand; but, generally speaking, he is mistaken in his account.
Dryden's Fab. Preface.

44. To cast up. To vomit.
Thou, beastly feeder, art so full of him,
That thou provok'st thyself to cast him up. Shakefp. H. IV.
Their villainy goes against my weak stomach, and therefore I must cast it up. Shakefp. Henry V.

O, that in time Rome did not cast
Her errors up, this fortune to prevent. Ben. Johnson's Catil.
Thy foolish error find;

Cast up the poison that infects thy mind. Dryden.

TO CAST. v. n.

1. To contrive; to turn the thoughts.
Then closely as he might, he cast to leave
The court, not asking any pass or leave. Spenser.
From that day forth, I cast in careful mind,
To seek her out with labour and long time. Fairy Q. b. i.
We have three that bend themselves, looking into the experiments of their fellows, and cast about how to draw out of them things of use and practice for man's life and knowledge.
Bacon's New Atlantis.

But first he casts to change his proper shape;
Which else might work him danger or delay. Par. L. b. iii.
As a fox, with hot pursuit
Chas'd through a warren, cast about

To save his credit. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. iii.

All events, called casual, among inanimate bodies, are mechanically produced according to the determinate figures, textures, and motions of those bodies, which are not conscious of their own operations, nor contrive and cast about how to bring such events to pass.
Bentley.

This way and that I cast to save my friends,
Till one resolve my varying counsel ends. Pope's Odyssey.

2. To admit of a form, by casting or melting.
It comes at the first fusion into a mass that is immediately malleable, and will not run thin, so as to cast and mould, unless mixed with poorer ore, or cinders. Woodward on Fossils.

3. To warp; to grow out of form.
Stuff is said to cast or warp, when, by its own drought, or moisture of the air, or other accident, it alters its flatness and straightness.

CAST. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of casting or throwing; a throw.
So when a sort of lusty shepherds throw
The bar by turns, and none the rest outgo
So far, but that the rest are measuring casts,
Their emulation and their pastime lasts. Waller.
Yet all these dreadful deeds, this deadly fray,
A cast of dreadful dust will soon allay. Dryden's Virgil.

2. The thing thrown.
Some harrow their ground over, and sow wheat or rye on it with a broad cast; some only with a single cast, and some with a double. Mortimer.

3. State of any thing cast or thrown.
In his own instance of casting ambs-ace, though it partake more of contingency than of freedom; supposing the posture of the party's hand, who did throw the dice; supposing the figure of the table, and of the dice themselves; supposing the measure of force applied, and supposing all other things which did concur to the production of that cast, to be the very same they were, there is no doubt but, in this case, the cast is necessary.
Bramhall's Answer to Hobbes.
Plato compares life to a game at tables; there what cast we shall have is not in our power, but to manage it well, that is.
Norris.

4. The space through which any thing is thrown.
And he was withdrawn from them about a stone's cast, and kneeled down and prayed. Luke, xxii. 41.

5. A stroke; a touch.

Swift's Examiner, N° 19.
This was a cast of Wood's politicks; for his information was wholly false and groundless, which he knew very well. Swift.

6. Motion of the eye.

Pity causeth sometimes tears, and a flexion or cast of the eye aside; for pity is but grief in another's behalf; the cast of the eye is a gesture of aversion, or loathsomeness, to behold the object of pity.
Bacon's Natural History.

If any man desires to look on this doctrine of gravity, let him turn the first cast of his eyes on what we have said of fire.
Digby on the Soul.

There held in holy passion still,
Forget thyself to marble, till,
With a sad leaden downward cast,
Thou fix them on the earth as fast. Milton.

They are the best epitomes in the world, and let you see, with one cast of an eye, the substance of above an hundred pages.
Addison on ancient Medals.

7. The throw of dice.

8. Chance from the cast of dice.

Were it good,
To set the exact wealth of all our states
All at one cast; to set so rich a main
On the nice hazard of some doubtful hour? Shakefp. H. IV.
In the last war, has it not sometimes been an even cast, whether the army should march this way or that way? South.

9. Venture from throwing dice.

When you have brought them to the very last cast, they will offer to come to you, and submit themselves. Spenser on Ireland.
With better grace an ancient chief may yield
The long contended honours of the field,
Than venture all his fortune at a cast,
And fight, like Hannibal, to lose at last. Dryden.

Will you turn recreant at the last cast? you must along.
Dryden's Spanish Friar.

10. A mould; a form.
The whole would have been an heroic poem, but in another cast and figure, than any that ever had been written before.
Prior.

11. A shade; or tendency to any colour.
A flaky mass, grey, with a cast of green, in which the talky matter makes the greatest part of the mass. Woodward.
The qualities of blood in a healthy state are to be florid, the red part congealing, and the serum ought to be without any greenish cast.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

12. Exterieur appearance.
The native hue of resolution
Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought. Shakefp. Hamlet.

Neglect not the little figures and turns on the words, nor sometimes the very cast of the periods; neither omit or confound any rites or customs of antiquity. Pope's Ess. on Homer.

14. A flight; a number of hawks dismissed from the fist.
A cast of merlins there was besides, which, flying of a gallant height over certain bushes, would beat the birds that rose, down unto the bushes, as falcons will do wild fowl over a river.
Sidney, b. ii.

CA'STANET. n. f. [castaneta, Sp.] Small shells of ivory, or hard wood, which dancers rattle in their hands.
If there had been words enow between them, to have expressed provocation, they had gone together by the ears like a pair of castanets.

CA'STAWAY. n. f. [from cast and away.] A person lost, or abandoned by providence.
Neither given any leave to search in particular who are the heirs of the kingdom of God, who castaways. Hooker, b. v.
Left that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway. 1 Cor. ix. 27.

CA'STAWAY. adj. [from the subst.] Useless; of no value.
We only prize, pamper, and exalt this vassal and slave of death, or only remember, at our castaway leisure, the imprisoned immortal soul.
Raleigh's History.

CA'STED. The participle preterite of cast, but improperly, and found perhaps only in the following passage.
When the mind is quicken'd, out of doubt,
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move
With casted slough and fresh legerity. Shakefp. Henry V.

 Chicane in furs, and casuistry in lawn. Pope's Dunciad.
CAT. n. f. [katz, Teuton. chat, Fr.] A domestick animal that catches mice, commonly reckoned by naturalists the lowest order of the leonine species.
 'Twas you incens'd the rabble:
 Cats, that can judge as fitly of his worth,
 As I can of those mysteries, which heav'n
 Will not have earth to know. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
 Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd. Shakefp. Macbeth.
 A cat, as she beholds the light, draws the ball of her eye small and long, being covered over with a green skin, and dilates it at pleasure. Peacham on Drawing.
CAT. n. f. A sort of ship.
CAT in the pan. [imagined by some to be rightly written Catipan, as coming from Catipani, revolted governours. An unknown correspondent imagines, very naturally, that it is corrupted from Cate in the pan.]
 There is a cunning which we, in England, call the turning of the cat in the pan; which is, when that which a man says to another, he lays it as if another had said it to him. Bacon.
CAT o' nine tails. A whip with nine lashes, used for the punishment of crimes.
 You dread reformers of an impious age;
 You awful cat o' nine tails to the stage;
 This once be just, and in our cause engage. Prologue to Vanbrugh's False Friend.
CATACHRE'SIS. n. f. [κατάχρησις, abuse.] It is, in rhetorick, the abuse of a trope, when the words are too far wrested from their native signification, or when one word is abusively put for another, for want of the proper word; as, a voice beautiful to the ear. Smith's Rhetorick.
CATACHRE'STICAL. adj. [from catachresis.] Contrary to proper use; forced; far fetched.

A cataphrestical and far derived similitude it holds with men, that is, in a bifurcation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CA'TACLYSM. n. f. [κατακλυσμός.] A deluge; an inundation; used generally for the universal deluge.

The opinion that held these cataclysms and empyroses universal, was such, as held, that it put a total consummation unto things in this lower world. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CA'TACOMBS. n. f. [from κατά and κοίτη; a hollow or cavity.] Subterraneous cavities for the burial of the dead; of which there are a great number about three miles from Rome, supposed to be the caves and cells where the primitive christians hid and assembled themselves, and where they interred the martyrs, which are accordingly visited with devotion. But, anciently, the word catacomb was only understood of the tombs of St. Peter and St. Paul; and Mr. Monro, in the Philosophical Transactions, supposes the catacombs to have been originally the sepulchres of the first Romans. Places like these might afford convenient resortments to the primitive christians, but could never be built by them. Chambers.

CATAGMA'TICK. adj. [κατάγμα, a fracture.] That which has the quality of consolidating the parts.

I put on a catagmatick emplaster, and, by the use of a laced glove, scattered the pituitous swelling, and strengthened it. Wifeman's Surgery.

CATALE'PSIS. n. f. [κατάληψις.] A lighter species of the apoplexy, or epilepsy.

There is a disease called a catalepsis, wherein the patient is suddenly seized without sense or motion, and remains in the same posture in which the disease seizeth him. Arbuthnot.

CA'TALOGUE. n. f. [κατάλογος.] An enumeration of particulars; a list; a register of things one by one.

In the catalogue ye go for men,
As hounds, and greyhounds, mungrels, spaniels, curs,
Showghes, water rugs, and demy wolves, are cleped
All by the name of dogs. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Make a catalogue of all the prosperous sacrilegious persons, and I believe they will be repeated much sooner than the alphabet. South.

I was in the library of manuscripts belonging to St. Laurence, of which there is a printed catalogue; I looked into the Virgil which disputes its antiquity with that of the Vatican. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

The bright Tygete, and the shining Bears,
With all the sailors catalogue of stars. Addison's Ovid.

CATAMO'UNTAIN. n. f. [from cat and mountain.] A fierce animal, resembling a cat.

The black prince of Monomotapa, by whose side were seen the glaring catamountain, and the quill-darting porcupine. Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.

CA'TAPHRACT. n. f. [cataphractus, Lat.] A horseman in complete armour.

On each side went armed guards,
Both horse and foot before him and behind,
Archers and slingers, cataphracts and spears. Milt. Agonist.

CA'TAPLASM. n. f. [κατάπλασμα.] A poultice; a soft and moist application.

I bought an unction of a mountebank,
So mortal, that but dip a knife in it,
Where it draws blood, no cataplasm so rare,
Collected from all simples that have virtue
Under the moon, can save. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Warm cataplasms discuss, but scalding hot may confirm the tumour. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CA'TAPULT. n. f. [catapulta, Lat.] An engine used anciently to throw stones.

The balista violently shot great stones and quarrels, as also the catapults. Camden's Remains.

CA'TARACT. n. f. [καταράκτης.] A fall of water from on high; a shoot of water; a cascade.

Blow, winds, and crack your cheeks; rage, blow!
You cataraets and hurricanes, spout,
Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the cocks. Shakesp. King Lear.

What if all
Her stores were open'd, and this firmament
Of hell should spout her cataraets of fire?
Impendent horrors! Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii. l. 170.

No sooner he, with them of man and beast
Select for life, shall in the ark be lodg'd,
And shelter'd round; but all the cataraets
Of heav'n set open, on the earth shall pour Rain, day and night. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi. l. 824.

Torrents and loud impetuous cataraets,
'Through roads abrupt, and rude unfashion'd tracts,
Run down the lofty mountain's channel'd sides,
And to the vale convey their foaming tides. Blackmore.

CA'TARACT. [In medicine.] A suffusion of the eye, when little clouds, motes, and flies, seem to float about in the air; when, confirmed, the pupil of the eye is either wholly, or in part, covered, and shut up with a little thin skin, so that the light has no admittance. Quincy.

Saladine hath a yellow milk, which hath likewise much acrimony; for it cleanseth the eyes: it is good also for cataraets. Bacon's Natural History, N° 639.

CATARRH. n. f. [καταρρῆ, defluo.] A defluxion of a sharp serum from the glands about the head and throat, generally occasioned by a diminution of insensible perspiration, or cold, wherein what should pass by the skin, ouzes out upon those glands, and occasions irritations. The causes are, whatsoever occasions too great a quantity of serum in the body; whatsoever hinders the discharge by urine, and the pores of the skin. Quincy.

All fev'rous kinds,
Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs. Par. Lost, b. xi.
Neither was the body then subject to die by piecemeal, and languish under coughs, catarrhs, or consumptions. South.

CATA'RRHAL. } adj. [from catarrh.] Relating to a catarrh;
CATA'RRHOUS. } proceeding from a catarrh.

The catarrhal fever requires evacuations. Floyer.
Old age attended with a glutinous, cold, catarrhous, leucophlegmatick constitution. Arbuthnot on Diet.

CATA'STROPHE. n. f. [κατάστροφῆ.]

1. The change or revolution, which produces the conclusion or final event of a dramatick piece.

10. To please; to seize the affections; to charm.

For I am young, a novice in the trade,
The fool of love, unpractis'd to persuade,
And wanting the soothing arts that catch the fair,
But, caught myself, lie struggling in the snare, Dryden.

I've perus'd her well;
Beauty and honour in her are so mingled,
That they have caught the king. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

11. To receive any contagion or disease.

I cannot name the disease, and it is caught
Of you that yet are well. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Those measles,
Which we disdain should tetter us, yet seek
The very way to catch them. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

In foeth I know not why I am so sad :

It wearies me ; you say it wearies you ;

But how I caught it, found it, or came by it,

I am to learn.

Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.

The softest of our British ladies expose their necks and arms to the open air, which the men could not do, without catching cold, for want of being accustomed to it. Addison. Guardian.

Or call the winds through long arcades to roar,

Proud to catch cold at a Venetian door.

Pope.

12. To catch at. To endeavour suddenly to lay hold on.

Cowel.

They call all temporal businesses under-sheriffries, as if they were but matters for under-sheriffs and catchpolls ; though many times those under-sheriffries do more good than their high speculations.

Bacon's Essays.

Another monster,

Sullen of aspect, by the vulgar call'd

A catchpoll, whose polluted hands the gods,

With force incredible and magick charms,

Erst have endu'd, if he his ample palm

Should haply on ill fated shoulder lay

Of debtor.

Philips.

CATECHE'TICAL. adj. [from κατηχέω.] Consisting of questions and answers.

Socrates introduced a catechetical method of arguing ; he would ask his adversary question upon question, till he convinced him out of his own mouth, that his opinions were wrong.

Addison. Spectator, N° 238.

CATECHE'TICALLY. adv. [from catechetical.] In the way of question and answer.

To CA'TECHISE. v. a. [κατηχέω.]

1. To instruct by asking questions, and correcting the answers.

I will catechise the world for him ; that is, make questions, and bid them answer.

Shakefp. Othello.

Had those three thousand souls been catechised by our modern casuists, we had seen a wide difference.

Decay of Piety.

2. To question ; to interrogate ; to examine ; to try by interrogatories.

Why then I suck my teeth, and catechise

My piked man of countries.

Shakefp. King John.

There flies about a strange report,

Of some express arriv'd at court ;

I'm stopp'd by all the fools I meet,

And catechis'd in ev'ry street.

Swift.

CA'TECHISER. n. f. [from to catechise.] One who catechizes.

CA'TECHISM. n. f. [from κατηχίς.] A form of instruction by means of questions and answers, concerning religion.

Ways of teaching there have been sundry always usual in God's church ; for the first introduction of youth to the knowledge of God, the Jews even till this day have their catechisms.

Hooker, b. v. § 19.

He had no catechism but the creation, needed no study but reflection, and read no book but the volume of the world.

South.

CA'TECHIST. n. f. [κατηχιστής.] One whose charge is to instruct by questions, or to question the uninstructed concerning religion.

None of years and knowledge was admitted, who had not been instructed by the catechist in this foundation, which the catechist received from the bishop.

Hammond's Fundamentals.

CATECHU'MEN. n. f. [κατηχούμενος.] One who is yet in the first rudiments of christianity ; the lowest order of christians in the primitive church.

The prayers of the church did not begin in St. Austin's time, till the catechumens were dismissed.

Stillington.

CATECHUME'NICAL. adj. [from catechumen.] Belonging to the catechumens.

Diët.

CATEGO'RICAL. adj. [from category.] Absolute ; adequate ; positive ; equal to the thing to be expressed.

The king's commissioners desired to know whether the parliament's commissioners did believe, that bishops were unlawful ? To which they could never obtain a categorical answer.

Clarendon, b. viii.

A single proposition, which is also categorical, may be divided again into simple and complex.

Watts's Logick.

CATEGO'RICALLY. adv. [from categorical.] Positively ; expressly.

I dare affirm, and that categorically, in all parts where-ever trade is great, and continues so, that trade must be nationally profitable.

Child's Discourse of Trade.

CA'TEGORY. n. f. [κατηγορία.] A class ; a rank ; an order of ideas ; a predicament.

The absolute infinitude, in a manner, quite changes the nature of beings, and exalts them into a different category.

Cheyne.

CATENA'RIAN. adj. [from catena, Lat.] Relating to a chain ; resembling a chain.

In geometry, the catenarian curve is formed by a rope or chain hanging freely between two points of suspension.

Harris.

The back is bent after the manner of the catenarian curve, by which it obtains that curvature that is safest for the included marrow.

Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

To CA'TENATE. v. a. [from catena, Lat.] To chain.

Diët.

CATENA'TION. n. f. [from catena, Lat.] Link ; regular connexion.

Which catenation, or conserving union, whenever his pleasure shall divide, let go, or separate, they shall fall from their existence.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To CA'TER. v. n. [from cates.] To provide food ; to buy in victuals.

He that doth the ravens feed,

Yea providently caters for the sparrow,

Be comfort to my age.

Shakefp. As you like it.

CA'TER. n. f. [from the verb.] Provider ; collector of provisions, or victuals.

The oysters dredged in this Lyner, find a welcomer acceptance, where the taste is cater for the stomach, than those of the Tamar.

CA'TERER. n. f. [from cater.] One employed to select and buy in provisions for the family; the providore or purveyor.

Let no scent offensive the chamber infest;
Let fancy, not cost, prepare all our dishes;
Let the caterer mind the taste of each guest,
And the cook in his dressing comply with their wishes.

Ben. Johnson's Tavern Academy.

He made the greedy ravens to be Elias's caterers, and bring him food.

King Charles.

Seldom shall one see in cities or courts that athletick vigour, which is seen in poor houses, where nature is their cook, and necessity their caterer.

South.

CA'TERESS. n. f. [from cater.] A woman employed to cater, or provide victuals.

Impostor! do not charge innocent nature,
As if she would her children should be riotous
With her abundance? she, good cateress,
Means her provision only to the good.

Milton.

CATERPILLAR. n. f. [This word Skinner and Minshew are inclined to derive from chatte peluse, a weasel; it seems easily deducible from cates, food, and pillar, Fr. to rob; the animal that eats up the fruits of the earth.] A worm which, when it gets wings, is sustained by leaves and fruits.

The caterpillar breedeth of dew and leaves; for we see infinite caterpillars breed upon trees and hedges, by which the leaves of the trees or hedges are consumed.

Bacon.

Auster is drawn with a pot pouring forth water, with which descend grasshoppers, caterpillars, and creatures bred by moisture.

Peacham on Drawing.

CATERPILLAR. n. f. [scorpioides, Lat.] The name of a plant.

It hath a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empalement rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a jointed pod, convoluted like a snail or caterpillar.

Miller.

TO CATERWA'UL. v. n. [from cat.]

1. To make a noise as cats in rutting time:

2. To make any offensive or odious noise.

What a caterwauling do you keep here? If my lady has not called up her steward Malvolio, and bid him turn you out of doors, never trust me.

Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.

Was no dispute between

The caterwauling bretheren?

Hudibras, p. i. c. iii.

CATES. n. f. [of uncertain etymology; Skinner imagines it may be corrupted from delicate; which is not likely, because Junius observes, that the Dutch have kater in the same sense with our cater. It has no singular.] Viands; food; dish of meat; generally employed to signify nice and luxurious food.

The fair acceptance, Sir, creates

The entertainment perfect, not the cates.

Ben Johnson.

O wasteful riot, never well content

With low priz'd fare; hunger ambitious

Of cates by land and sea far fetcht and sent.

Raleigh.

Alas, how simple to these cates,

Was that crude apple, that diverted Eve!

Par. Lost, b. ii.

They by th' alluring odour drawn, in haste

Fly to the dulcet cates, and crouding sip

Their palatable bane.

Philips.

With costly cates she stain'd her frugal board,

Then with ill-gotten wealth she bought a lord.

Arbutnot.

CA'TFISH. n. f. The name of a sea-fish in the West Indies; so called from its round head and large glaring eyes, by which they are discovered in hollow rocks.

Philips's World of Words.

CA'THARPINGS. n. f. Small ropes in a ship, running in little blocks from one side of the shrouds to the other, near the deck; they belong only to the main shrouds; and their use is to force the shrouds tight, for the ease and safety of the masts, when the ship rolls.

Harris.

CATHA'RTICAL. adj. [καθαρτικός.] Purging medicines. The CATHA'RTICK. adj. vermicular or peristaltick motion of the guts continually helps on their contents, from the pylorus to the rectum; and every irritation either quickens that motion in its natural order, or occasions some little inversions in it. In both, what but slightly adheres to the coats, will be loosened, and they will be more agitated, and thus rendered more fluid. By this only it is manifest, how a cathartic hastens and increases the discharges by stool; but where the force of the stimulus is great, all the appendages of the bowels, and all the viscera in the abdomen, will be twitched; by which a great deal will be drained back into the intestines, and made a part of what they discharge.

Quincy.

Quicksilver precipitated either with gold, or without addition, into a powder, is wont to be strongly enough cathartical, though the chymists have not yet proved, that either gold or mercury hath any salt at all, much less any that is purgative.

Boyle's Sceptical Chymistry.

Lustrations and catharticks of the mind were sought for, and all endeavour used to calm and regulate the fury of the passions.

Decay of Piety.

The piercing causticks ply their spiteful pow'r,

Emeticks ranch, and keen catharticks scour.

Garth.

Plato has called mathematical demonstrations the catharticks or purgatives of the soul.

Addison. Spectator, N° 507.

There is nothing to be left void in a firm building; even the cavities ought not to be filled with rubbish, which is of a perishing kind. Dryden's Dedication to Æneid.
Materials packed together with wonderful art in the several cavities of the skull. Addison, Spectator, No 275.
An instrument with a small cavity, like a small spoon, dipt in oil, may fetch out the stone. Arbutnot on Diet.
If the atmosphere was reduced into water, it would not make an orb above thirty two feet deep, which would soon be swallowed up by the cavity of the sea, and the depressed parts of the earth. Bentley.

CAUK. n. f. It denotes a coarse talky spar. Woodward.

CA'UKY. adj. [from cauk.] A white, opaque, cauky spar, shot or pointed. Woodward on Fossils.

CAUL. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]
1. The net in which women inclose their hair; the hinder part of a woman's cap.
Ne spared they to strip her naked all,
Then when they had despoil'd her tire and caul,
Such as she was, their eyes might her behold. Fairy Q. b. i.
Her head with ringlets of her hair is crown'd,
And in a golden caul the curls are bound. Dryden's Æneid.
2. Any kind of small net.
An Indian mantle of feathers, and the feathers wrought into a caul of packthread. Grew's Museum.
3. The omentum; the integument in which the guts are inclosed.
The caul serves for the warming the lower belly, like an apron or piece of woollen cloth. Hence a certain gladiator, whose caul Galen cut out, was so liable to suffer cold, that he kept his belly constantly covered with wool. Ray on the Creation.
The beast they then divide, and disunite
The ribs and limbs, observant of the rite :
On these, in double cauls involv'd with art,
The choicest morsels lay. Pope's Odyssey, b. iii. l. 585.

CAULIFEROUS. adj. [from caulis, a stalk, and fero, to bear, Lat.] A term in botany for such plants as have a true stalk, which a great many have not.

CAULIFLOWER. n. f. [from caulis, Lat. the stalk of a plant.] A species of cabbage; which see.
Towards the end of the month, earth up your winter plants and salad herbs; and plant forth your cauliflowers and cabbage, which were sown in August. Evelyn's Kalendar.

TO CAULK. See TO CALK.

TO CAUPO'NATE. v. n. [caupono, Lat.] To keep a victualling-house; to sell wine or victuals. Dict.

CAU'SABLE. adj. [from causo, low Lat.] That which may be caused, or effected by a cause.
That may be miraculously effected in one, which is naturally causable in another. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 21.

CAU'SAL. adj. [causalis, low Lat.] Relating to causes; implying or containing causes.
Every motion owning a dependence on preredquired motors, we can have no true knowledge of any, except we would distinctly pry into the whole method of causal concatenations. Glanville's Scepis Scientifica, c. 35.

Causal propositions are, where two propositions are joined by causal particles; as, houses were not built, that they might be destroyed; Rehoboam was unhappy, because he followed evil counsel. Watts's Logick.

CAUSA'LITY. n. f. [causalitas, low Latin.] The agency of a cause; the quality of causing.
As he created all things, so is he beyond and in them all, in his very essence, as being the soul of their causalities, and the essential cause of their existences. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
By an unadvised transiliency from the effect to the remotest cause, we observe not the connection, through the interposal of more immediate causalities. Glanville's Scepis, c. 14.

CA'USALLY. adv. [from causal.] According to the order or series of causes.
Thus may it more be causally made out, what Hippocrates affirmeth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CAUSA'TION. n. f. [from causo, low Lat.] The act or power of causing.
Thus doth he sometimes delude us in the conceits of stars and meteors, besides their allowable actions, ascribing effects thereunto of independent causation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CA'USATIVE. adj. [a term in grammar.] That expresses a cause or reason.

CA'USATOR. n. f. [from causo, low Lat.] A causer; an author of any effect.
Demonstratively understanding the simplicity of perfection, and the invisible condition of the first causator, it was out of the power of earth, or the areopagy of hell, to work them from it. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 10.

CAUSE. n. f. [causa, Lat.]
1. That which produces or effects any thing; the efficient.
The wife and learned amongst the very heathens themselves, have all acknowledged some first cause, whereupon originally the being of all things dependeth; neither have they otherwise spoken of that cause, than as an agent, which, knowing what and why it worketh, observeth, in working, a most exact order or law. Hooker, b. i. § 2.
Butterflies, and other flies, revive easily when they seem dead, being brought to the sun or fire; the cause whereof is the diffusion of the vital spirit, and the dilating of it by a little heat. Bacon's Natural History, No 697.
Cause is a substance exerting its power into act, to make one thing begin to be. Locke.
2. The reason; motive to any thing.
The rest shall bear some other fight,
As cause will be obey'd. Shakesp. Macbeth.
So great, so constant, and so general a practice, must needs have not only a cause, but also a great, a constant, and a general cause, every way commensurate to such an effect. South.
Thus, royal sir! to see you landed here,
Was cause enough of triumph for a year. Dryden.
Æneas wond'ring stood: then ask'd the cause,
Which to the stream the crouding people draws. Dryden.
Even he,
Lamenting that there had been cause of enmity,
Will often wish fate had ordain'd you friends. Rowe's Ambitious Stepmother.
3. Cause of debate; subject of litigation.
O madness of discourse!
That cause sets up with and against thyself!
Bifold authority. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.
Hear the causes between your brethren, and judge righteously between every man and his brother, and the stranger that is with him. Deut. i. 16.
4. Side; party; ground or principle of action or opposition.
Ere to thy cause, and thee, my heart inclin'd,
Or love to party had seduc'd my mind. Tickell.

TO CAUSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To effect as an agent; to produce.
She weeping ask'd, in these her blooming years,
What unforeseen misfortune caus'd her care
To loath her life, and languish in despair. Dryden's Fables.
Things that move so swift, as not to affect the senses distinctly, and so cause not any train of ideas in the mind, are not perceived to move. Locke.

CAU'SELESSLY. adv. [from causeless.] Without cause; without reason.
Human laws are not to be broken with scandal, nor at all without reason; for he that does it causelessly, is a despiser of the law, and undervalues its authority. Taylor's Holy Living.

CAU'SELESS. adj. [from cause.]
1. Without cause; original to itself.
Reach th' Almighty's sacred throne,
And make his causeless pow'r, the cause of all things, known. Blackmore's Creation.
2. Without just ground or motive.
Yet is my truth yplight,
And love avow'd to other lady late,
That, to remove the same, I have no might;
To change love causeless, is reproach to warlike knight. Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. vii. stanz. 50.

C A U

And me and mine, threats not with war but death;
 Thus causeless hatred endless is unceasing. Fairfax, b. iv.
 The causeless dislike, which others have conceived, is no sufficient reason for us to forbear in any place. Hooker, b. v.
 As women yet who apprehend
 Some sudden cause of causeless fear,
 Although that seeming cause take end,
 A shaking through their limbs they find. Waller.
 Alas! my fears are causeless and ungrounded,
 Fantastick dreams, and melancholy fumes. Denham's Sophy.
CA'USER. n. f. [from cause.] He that causes; the agent by which an effect is produced.
 Is not the causer of these timeless deaths,
 As blameful as the executioner? Shakesp. Richard III.
CA'USEY. n. f. [chauffée, Fr. This word, by a false notion of CA'USEWAY. } its etymology, has been lately written causeway.] A way raised and paved; a way raised above the rest of the ground.
 To Shuppim the lot came forth westward by the causey.
1 Chron. xxvi. 16.
 Th' other way Satan went down,
 The causeway to hell-gate. Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 415.
 But that broad causeway will direct your way,
 And you may reach the town by noon of day. Dryden.
 Whose causeway parts the vale with shady rows;
 Whose seats the weary traveller repose. Pope.
CA'USTICAL. adj. [καυστικός.] Medicaments which, by their
CA'USTICK. } violent activity and heat, destroy the texture of the part to which they are applied, and eat it away, or burn it into an eschar, which they do by the extreme minuteness, asperity, and quantity of motion, that, like those of fire itself, destroy the texture of the solids themselves, and change what they are applied to, into a substance like burnt flesh; which, in a little time, with detergent dressing, falls quite off, and leaves a vacuity in the part. Quincy.
 If extirpation be safe, the best way will be by caustical medicines or escharoticks. Wiseman's Surgery.
 I proposed eradicating by escharoticks, and began with a caustick stone. Wiseman's Surgery.
 Air too hot, cold and moist, abounding perhaps with caustick, astringent, and coagulating particles. Arbuthnot.
CA'USTICK. n. f. A caustick or burning application.
 It was a tenderness to mankind, that introduced corrosives and causticks, which are indeed but artificial fires. Temple.
 The piercing causticks ply their spiteful pow'r,
 Emeticks ranch, and keen catharticks scour. Garth.
CA'UTEL. n. f. [cautela, Lat.] Caution; scruple; a word disused.
 Perhaps he loves you now;
 And now no foil of cautel doth besmerch
 The virtue of his will. Shakesp. Hamlet.
CA'UTELOUS. adj. [cauteleux, Fr.]
 1. Cautious; wary; provident.
 Palladio doth wish, like a cautelous artisan, that the inward walls might bear some good share in the burden. Wotton.
 2. Wily; cunning; treacherous.
 Of themselves, for the most part, they are so cautelous and wily headed, especially being men of so small experience and practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilties and sly shifts. Spenser on Ireland.
 Your son
 Will or exceed the common, or be caught
 With cautelous baits and practice. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
CA'UTELOUSLY. adv. [from cautelous.] Cunningly; slyly; treacherously; cautiously; warily.
 The Jews, not undoubtedly resolved of the sciatica side of Jacob, do cautelously, in their diet, abstain from both. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 1.
 All pretorian courts, if any of the parties be laid asleep, under pretence of a retirement, and the other party doth cautelously get the start and advantage, yet they will set back all things in statu quo prius. Bacon's War with Spain.
CAUTERIZA'TION. n. f. [from cauterize.] The act of burning flesh with hot irons, or caustick medicaments.
 They require, after cauterization, no such bandage, as that thereby you need to fear interception of the spirits. Wiseman.
TO CA'UTERIZE. v. a. [cauteriser, Fr.] To burn with the cautery.
 For each true word a blister, and each false,
 Be cauterizing to the root o' th' tongue,
 Consuming it with speaking. Shakesp. Timon.
 No marvel though cantharides have such a corrosive and cauterizing quality; for there is not one other of the insecta, but is bred of a duller matter. Bacon's Natural History.
 The design of the cautery is to prevent the canal from closing; but the operators confess, that, in persons cauterized, the tears trickle down ever after. Sharp's Surgery.
CAUTERY. n. f. [καύω, uro.]
 Cautery is either actual or potential; the first is burning by a hot iron, and the latter with caustick medicines. The actual cautery is generally used to stop mortification, by burning the dead parts to the quick; or to stop the effusion of blood, by searing up the vessels. Quincy.

C E A

 In heat of fight it will be necessary to have your actual cautery always ready; for that will secure the bleeding arteries in a moment. Wiseman's Surgery.
CAUTION. n. f. [caution, Fr. cautio, Lat.]
 1. Prudence, as it respects danger; foresight; provident care; wariness.
 2. Security for.
 Such conditions, and cautions of the condition, as might assure the people with as much assurance as worldly matters bear. Sidney.
 The Cedar, upon this new acquest, gave him part of Baccharia for caution for his disbursements. Howel's Vocal Forest.
 The parliament would yet give his majesty sufficient caution that the war should be prosecuted. Clarendon.
 He that objects any crime, ought to give caution by the means of sureties, that he will persevere in the prosecution of such crimes. Ayliffe's Parergon.
 3. Provision or security against; direction.
 In despite of all the rules and cautions of government, the most dangerous and mortal of vices will come off. L'Estrange.
 4. Provisionary precept.
 Attention to the forementioned symptoms affords the best cautions and rules of diet, by way of prevention. Arbuthnot.
 5. Warning.
TO CA'UTION. v. a. [from the noun.] To warn; to give notice of a danger.
 How shall our thought avoid the various snare?
 Or wisdom to our caution'd soul declare
 The diff'rent shapes thou pleasest to employ,
 When bent to hurt, and certain to destroy? Prior.
 You caution'd me against their charms,
 But never gave me equal arms;
 Your lessons found the weakest part,
 Aim'd at the head, but reach'd the heart. Swift.
CA'UTIONARY. adj. [from caution.] Given as a pledge, or in security.
 I am made the cautionary pledge,
 The gage and hostage of your keeping it. Southerne.
 Is there no security for the island of Britain? Has the enemy no cautionary towns and sea-ports, to give us for securing trade? Swift.
CA'UTIOUS. adj. [from cautus, Lat.] Wary; watchful.
 Be cautious of him; for he is sometimes an inconstant lover because he hath a great advantage. Swift.
CA'UTIOUSLY. adv. [from cautious.] In an attentive, wary manner.
 They know how fickle common lovers are:
 Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;
 For few there are but have been once deceiv'd. Dryden.
CA'UTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from cautious.] Watchfulness; vigilance; circumspection; provident care; prudence with respect to danger.
 I could not but approve their generous constancy and cautiousness. K. Charles.
 We should always act with great cautiousness and circumspection, in points where it is not impossible that we may be deceived. Addison. Spectator, N° 399.
TO CAW. v. n. [taken from the sound.] To cry as the rook, raven, or crow.
 Ruffet-pated choughs, many in sort,
 Rising and cawing at the gun's report. Shakesp.
 There is a walk of aged elms, so very high, that the rooks and crows upon the tops seem to be cawing in another region. Addison. Spectator, N° 110.
 The rook, who high amid the boughs
 In early spring, his airy city builds,
 And ceaseless caws. Thomson's Spring.
CA'YMAN. n. f. The American name for the alligator or crocodile.
TO CEASE. v. n. [cesser, Fr. cesso, Lat.]
 1. To leave off; to stop; to give over; to desist.
 The lives of all, who cease from combat, spare;
 My brother's be your most peculiar care. Dryden's Aureng.
 2. To fail; to be extinct.
 The poor man shall never cease out of the land. Deut. xv. 11.
 The soul being removed, the faculties and operations of life, sense and intellect cease from that moles corporea, and are no longer in it. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
 3. To be at an end.
 But now the wonder ceases, since I see
 She kept them only, Tityrus, for thee. Dryden's Virgil's Past.
 4. To rest.
 The ministers of Christ have ceased from their labours. Sprat.
TO CEASE. v. a. To put a stop to; to put an end to.
 Hasten you to lord Timon;
 Importune him for monies; be not ceas'd
 With slight denial. Shakesp. Timon.
 You may sooner, by imagination, quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower, than than to make him stand still. Bacon's Natural Hist. N<sup>o</sup> 990.

C E I

Cease then this impious rage. Paradise Lost, b. v. l. 845.
 But he her fears to cease,
 Sent down the meek-ey'd peace. Milton.

The discord is compleat, nor can they cease
 The dire debate, nor yet command the peace. Dryden.

CEASE. n. f. [from the verb.] Extinction; failure.

The cease of majesty

Dies not alone, but, like a gulph, withdraws

What's near it, with it. Shakesp. Hamlet.

CE'ASELESS. adj. [from cease.] Incessant; perpetual; continual; without pause; without stop; without end.

My guiltless blood must quench the ceaseless fire,

On which my endless tears were bootless spent. Fairfax.

All these, with ceaseless praise his works behold,

Both day and night. Paradise Lost, b. iv. l. 679.

Like an oak

That stands secure, though all the winds employ

Their ceaseless roar, and only sheds its leaves,

Or mast, which the revolving spring restores. Philips.

CE'CITY. n. f. [cæcitas, Lat.] Blindness; privation of sight.

They are not blind, nor yet distinctly see; there is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecuty; they have sight enough to discern the light, though not perhaps to distinguish objects or colours. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CECU'TIENCY. n. f. [cæcutio, Lat.] Tendency to blindness;
 cloudiness of sight.

There is in them no cecuty, yet more than a cecuty.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 18.

CEDAR. n. f. [cedrus, Lat.] A tree.

It is evergreen; the leaves are much narrower than those of the pine-tree, and many of them produced out of one tubercle, resembling a painter's pencil; it hath male flowers, or katkins, produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree.
 The seeds are produced in large cones, squamose and turbinat-ed. The extension of the branches is very regular in cedar trees; the ends of the shoots declining, and thereby shewing their upper surface, which is constantly cloathed with green leaves, so regularly as to appear at a distance like a green carpet, and, in waving about, make an agreeable prospect. It is surprising that this tree has not been more cultivated in England; for it would be a great ornament to barren bleak mountains, even in Scotland, where few other trees would grow; it being a native of Mount Libanus, where the snow continues most part of the year. What we find in Scripture, of the lofty cedars, is no ways applicable to the stature of this tree; for we find by those now growing in England, and by the testimony of travellers, that have seen those few remaining trees on Mount Libanus, they are not inclined to grow very lofty, but extend their branches very far; to which the allusion, made by the Psalmist, agrees very well, when, describing the flourishing state of a people, he says, they shall spread their branches like the cedar tree. Maundrel, in his Travels, says, he measured one of the largest cedars on Mount Libanus, and found it to be twelve yards six inches in circumference, and found, and thirty seven yards in the spread of its boughs. At about five or six yards from the ground, it was divided into five limbs, each of which was equal to a great tree. The wood of this famous tree is accounted proof against the putrefaction of animal bodies. The saw dust is thought to be one of the secrets used by the mount-banks, who pretend to have the embalming mystery. This wood is also said to yield an oil, which is famous for preserving books and writings, and the wood is thought by my lord Bacon to continue above a thousand years sound. It is also recorded, that, in the temple of Apollo, at Utica, there was found timber of near two thousand years old; and the statue of the goddess, in the famous Ephesian temple, was said to be of this material, as well as the timber work of that glorious structure.
 This sort of timber is very dry, and subject to split; nor does it well endure to be fastened with nails; therefore pins of the same wood are much preferable. Miller.

I must yield my body to the earth:

Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,

Whose arms gave shelter to the princely eagle;

Under whose shade the ramping lion slept,

Whose top branch overpeer'd Jove's spreading tree,

And kept low shrubs from winter's pow'rful wind.

Shakesp. Henry VI. p. iii.

CE'DRINE. adj. [cedrinus, Lat.] Of or belonging to the cedar tree.

To CEIL. v. a. [cælo, Lat.] To overlay, or cover the inner roof of a building.

And the greater house he ceiled with fir-tree, which he overlaid with fine gold. 2 Chron. iii. 5.

How will he, from his house ceiled with cedar, be content with his Saviour's lot, not to have where to lay his head?

Decay of Piety.

CE'ILING. n. f. [from ceil.] The inner roof.

Varnish makes ceilings not only shine, but last. Bacon.

And now the thicken'd sky

Like a dark ceiling stood; down rush'd the rain

Impetuous. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 743.

C E L

So when the sun by day, or moon by night,
 Strike on the polish'd brass their trembling light,
 The glitt'ring species here and there divide,
 And cast their dubious beams from side to side:

Now on the walls, now on the pavement play,
 And to the ceiling flash the glaring day. Dryden's Æneid.

CE'LANDINE, (greater.) [chelidonium, Lat.] A plant.

The cup of the flower consists of two leaves, which soon fall away; the flower has four leaves, that are expanded in form of a cross. It grows wild, and is used in medicine. Miller.

CE'LANDINE, (the lesser, or Pilewort.) [chelidonium minus, Lat.]

It hath a gramose or granulose root; the leaves are roun-dish; the flower stalks trail upon the ground; the cup of the flower consists of three leaves. Miller.

CE'LATRE. n. f. [cælatura, Lat.] The art of engraving or cutting in metals.

To CE'LEBRATE. v. a. [celebro, Lat.]

1. To praise; to commend; to give praise to; to make famous.

The songs of Sion were psalms and pieces of poetry, that adored or celebrated the Supreme Being. Addison. Spectator.

I would have him read over the celebrated works of antiquity, which have stood the test of so many different ages. Addison.

2. To distinguish by solemn rites; to perform solemnly.

He slew all them that were gone to celebrate the sabbath.

2 Maccab. v. 26.

On the feast day, the father cometh forth, after divine service, into a large room, where the feast is celebrated. Bacon.

3. To mention in a set or solemn manner, whether of joy or sorrow.

This pause of pow'r, 'tis Ireland's hour to mourn;

While England celebrates your safe return. Dryden.

CELEBRATION. n. f. [from celebrate.]

1. Solemn performance; solemn remembrance.

He laboured to drive sorrow from her, and to hasten the ce- lebration of their marriage. Sidney.

He shall conceal it,

While you are willing it shall come to note;

What time we will our celebration keep,

According to my birth. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

During the celebration of this holy sacrament, you attend earnestly to what is done by the priest. Taylor.

2. Praise; renown; memorial.

No more shall be added in this place, his memory deserving a particular celebration, than that his learning, piety and virtue, have been attained by few. Clarendon.

Some of the ancients may be thought sometimes to have used a less number of letters, by the celebration of those who have added to their alphabet. Holder's Elements of Speech.

CELE'BRIOUS. adj. [celeber, Lat.] Famous; renowned; noted;

The Jews, Jerusalem, and the Temple, having been always so celebrious; yet when, after their captivities, they were despoiled of their glory, even then, the Assyrians, Greeks, and Romans, honoured, with sacrifices, the most high God, whom that nation worshipped. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

CELE'BRIOUSLY. adv. [from celebrious.] In a famous manner.

CELE'BRIOUSNESS. n. f. [from celebrious.] Renown; fame.

CELE'BRITY. n. f. [celebritas, Lat.] Celebration; fame.

The manner of her receiving, and the celebrity of the marriage, were performed with great magnificence. Bacon.

CELE'RIACK. n. f. A species of parsley; it is also called turnep- rooted celery.

CELE'RITY. n. f. [celeritas, Lat.] Swiftnes; speed; velocity,

We very well see in them, who thus plead, a wonderful cele- rity of discourse; for, perceiving at the first but only some cause of suspicion, and fear lest it should be evil, they are presently, in one and the self-same breath, resolved, that what beginning soever it had, there is no possibility it should be good. Hooker.

His former custom and practice was ever full of forwardness and celerity, to make head against them. Bacon's Henry VII.

Thus, with imagin'd wings, our swift scene flies,

In motion with no less celerity

Than that of thought.

Shakesp. Henry V.

Three things concur to make a percussive great; the bigness, the density, and the celerity of the body moved. Digby.

Whatever encreaseth the density of the blood, even without encreasing its celerity, heats, because a denser body is hotter than a rarer. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CE'LERY. n. f. A species of parsley; which see.

CELE'STIAL. adj. [celestis, Lat.]

1. Heavenly; relating to the superiour regions.

There stay, until the twelve celestial signs

Have brought about their annual reckoning.

Shakesp. Love's Labour Lost.

The ancients commonly applied celestial descriptions of other climes to their own. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 12.

2. Heavenly; relating to the blessed state.

Play that sad note

I nam'd my knell; whilst I sit meditating

On that celestial harmony I go to. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

3. Heavenly, with respect to excellence.

Canst thou pretend desire, whom zeal inflam'd

To worship, and a pow'r celestial nam'd?

Dryden.

Telemachus,

C E M

Telemachus, his bloomy face

Glowing celestial sweet, with godlike grace. Pope's Odyssey.

CELESTIAL. n. f. [from the adj.] An inhabitant of heaven.

Thus affable and mild, the prince precedes,

And to the dome th' unknown celestial leads. Pope's Odyssey.

CELESTIALLY. adv. [from celestial.] In a heavenly manner.

TO CELESTIFY. v. a. [from celestis, Lat.] To give something of heavenly nature to any thing.

We should affirm, that all things were in all things, that heaven were but earth terrestriated, and earth but heaven celestified, or that each part above had influence upon its affinity below.

Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CELIACK. adj. [κοιλία, the belly.] Relating to the lower belly.

The blood moving slowly through the celiack and mesenterick arteries, produce complaints.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CELIBACY. n. f. [from cælebs, Latin.] Single life; unmarried state.

I can attribute their numbers to nothing but their frequent marriages; for they look on celibacy as an accursed state, and generally are married before twenty.

Spectator, N<sup>o</sup> 495.

By teaching them how to carry themselves in their relations of husbands and wives, parents and children, they have, without question, adorned the gospel, glorified God, and benefited man, much more than they could have done in the devoutest and strictest celibacy.

Atterbury.

CELIBATE. n. f. [cœlibatus, Lat.] Single life.

Where polygamy is forbidden, the males oblige themselves to celibate, and then multiplication is hindered.

Shak. Coriol.

There is a cement compounded of flower, whites of eggs, and stones powdered, that becometh hard as marble.

Bacon.

You may see divers pebbles, and a crust of cement or stone between them, as hard as the pebbles themselves.

Bacon.

The foundation was made of rough stone, joined together with a most firm cement; upon this was laid another layer, consisting of small stones and cement.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Bond of union in friendship.

Let not the piece of virtue which is set

Betwixt us, as the cement of our love,

To keep it builded, be the ram to batter.

Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

What cement should unite heaven and earth, light and darkness?

Glanville's Scepssis, c. iv.

Look over the whole creation, and you shall see, that the band or cement, that holds together all the parts of this great and glorious fabrick, is gratitude.

South.

TO CEMENT. v. a. [from the noun.] To unite by means of something interposed.

But how the fear of us

May cement their divisions, and bind up

The petty difference, we yet not know.

Shak. Ant. and Cl.

Liquid bodies have nothing to cement them; they are all loose and incoherent, and in a perpetual flux: even an heap of sand, or fine powder, will suffer no hollowness within them, though they be dry substances.

C E N

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Edgar

Cemented all the long contending powers.

Philips.

Love with white lead cements his wings;

White lead was sent us to repair

Two brightest, brittlest earthly things,

A lady's face, and china ware.

Swift.

TO CEMENT. v. n. To come into conjunction; to cohere.

When a wound is recent, and the parts of it are divided by a sharp instrument, they will, if held in close contact for some time, reunite by inosculation, and cement like one branch of a tree ingrafted on another.

With them, to question certitude of sense. Dryden.

There can be no maius and minus in the certitude we have of things, whether by mathematic demonstration, or any other way of consequence. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra, b. ii. c. iv. § 2.

CERVICAL. adj. [cervicalis, Lat.] Belonging to the neck.

The aorta bending a little upwards, sends forth the cervical and axillary arteries; the rest turning down again, forms the descending trunk. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

CERULEAN. } adj. [cæruleus, Lat.] Blue; sky coloured.

CERULEOUS. }
It afforded a solution, with, now and then, a light touch of sky colour, but nothing near so high as the ceruleous tincture of silver. Boyle.

From thee the saphire solid ether takes,
Its hue cerulean. Thomson's Summer.

CERULIFICK. adj. [from ceruleous.] Having the power to produce a blue colour.

The several species of rays, as the rubifick, cerulifick, and others are separated one from another. Grew's Cosmol. Sacra.

CERUMEN. n. f. [Latin.] The wax or excrement of the ear.

CE'RUSE. n. f. [cerussa, Lat.] White lead.

A preparation of lead with vinegar, which is of a white colour; whence many other things, resembling it in that particular, are by chymists called ceruse, as the ceruse of antimony, and the like. Quincy.

CESA'RIAN. adj. [from Cæsar.]

The Cæsarian section is cutting a child out of the womb either dead or alive, when it cannot otherwise be delivered. Which circumstance, it is said, first gave the name of Cæsar to the Roman family so called. Quincy.

CESS. n. f. [probably corrupted from cense; See CENSE; though imagined by Juvius to be derived from saisire, to seize.]

1. A levy made upon the inhabitants of a place, rated according to their property.

The like cess is also charged upon the country sometimes for victualling the soldiers, when they lie in garrison. Spenser.

2. The act of laying rates.

3. [from cesse, Fr.] It seems to have been used by Shakespeare for bounds, or limits.

I pr'ythee, Tom, beat Cutts's saddle, put a few flocks in the point; the poor jade is wrung in the withers out of all cess. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. i.

To CESS. v. a. [from the noun.] To rate; to lay charge on.

We are to consider how much land there is in all Ulster, that, according to the quantity thereof, we may cess the said rent, and allowance issuing thereout. Spenser on Ireland.

CESSA'TION. n. f. [cessatio, Lat.]

1. A stop; a rest; a vacation.

The day was yearly observed for a festival, by cessation from labour, and by resorting to church. Hayward.

True piety, without cessation toft

By theories, the practick part is lost. Denham.

There had been a mighty confusion of things, an interruption and perturbation of the ordinary course, and a cessation and suspension of the laws of nature. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

The rising of a parliament is a kind of cessation from politics. Addison. Freeholder, N° 55.

The serum, which is mixed with an alkali, being poured out to that which is mixed with an acid, raiseth an effervescence; at the cessation of which, the salts of which the acid was composed, will be regenerated. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. A pause of hostility, without peace.

When the succours of the poor protestants in Ireland were diverted, I was intreated to get them some respite, by a cessation. K. Charles.

CESSAVIT. n. f. [Latin.]

A writ that lies upon this general ground, that the person, against whom it is brought, hath, for two years, omitted to perform such service, or pay such rent, as he is obliged by his tenure, and hath not, upon his land or tenement, sufficient goods or chattels to be distrained. Cowel.

CESSIBILITY. n. f. [from cedo, cessum, Latin.] The quality of receding, or giving way, without resistance.

If the subject stricken be of a proportionate cessibility, it seems to dull and deaden the stroke; whereas if the thing stricken be hard, the stroke seems to lose no force, but to work a greater effect. Digby on the Soul.

CESSIBLE. adj. [from cedo, cessum, Lat.] Easy to give way.

If the parts of the stricken body be so easily cessible, as without difficulty the stroke can divide them, then it enters into such a body, till it has spent its force. Digby on the Soul.

CE'SSION. n. f. [cession, Fr. cessio, Lat.]

1. Retreat; the act of giving way.

Sound is not produced without some resistance either in the air or the body percussed; for if there be a mere yielding or cession, it produceth no sound. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 125.

2. Resignation; the act of yielding up or quitting to another.

A parity in their council would make and secure the best peace they can with France, by a cession of Flanders to that crown, in exchange for other provinces. Temple.

CE'SSIONARY. adj. [from cession.] As a cessionary bankrupt, one who has delivered up all his effects. Martin.

CE'SSMENT. n. f. [from cess.] An assessment or tax. Dict.

CE'SSOR. n. f. [from cesso, Lat.]

In law, he that ceaseth or neglecteth so long to perform a duty belonging to him, as that by his cess, or cessing, he incurreth the danger of law, and hath, or may have, the writ cessavit brought against him. Where it is said the tenant cesseth, such phrase is to be understood, as if it were said, the tenant cesseth to do that which he ought, or is bound to do by his land or tenement. Cowel.

CE'STUS. n. f. [Latin.] The girdle of Venus.

Venus, without any ornament but her own beauties, not so much as her own cestus. Addison. Spectator, N° 425.

CETA'CEOUS. adj. [from cete, whales, Lat.] Of the whale kind.

Such fishes as have lungs or respiration, are not without the wezzon, as whales and cetaceous animals. Brown's Vulg. Err.

He hath created variety of these cetaceous fishes, which converse chiefly in the northern seas, whose whole body being encompassed round with a copious fat or blubber, it is enabled to abide the greatest cold of the sea-water. Ray on the Creation.

C FAUT. A note in the scale of musick.

Gamut I am, the ground of all accord,

A re, to plead Hortensio's passion;

B mi Bianca, take him for thy lord,

C faut, that loves with all affection.

Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

CH has, in words purely English, or fully naturalized, the sound of tch; a peculiar pronunciation, which it is hard to describe in words. In some words derived from the French, it has the sound of sh, as chaise; and, in some derived from the Greek, the sound of k, as choleric.

CHACE. See CHASE.

CHAD. n. f. A sort of fish.

Of round fish there are brit, sprat, whiting, chad, eels, congar, millet. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

To CHAFE. v. a. [echauffer, Fr.]

1. To warm with rubbing.

They laid him upon some of their garments, and fell to rub and chafe him, till they brought him to recover both breath, the servant, and warmth, the companion of living. Sidney.

At last, recovering heart, he does begin

To rub her temples, and to chafe her skin. Fairy Q. b. i.

Soft, and more soft, at ev'ry touch it grew;

Like pliant wax, when chafing hands reduce

The former mass to form, and frame to use. Dryden.

2. To heat.

Have I not heard the sea, puff'd up with winds,

Rage like an angry boar, chafed with sweat? Shakesp.

3. To perfume.

Lilies more white than snow,

New fall'n from heav'n, with violets mix'd, did grow;

Whose scent so chaf'd the neighbour air, that you

Would surely swear Arabick spices grew. Suckling.

4. To make angry.

Her intercession chaf'd him so,

When she for thy repeal was suppliant,

That to close prison he commanded her. Shakesp.

An offer of pardon more chafed the rage of those, who were resolved to live or die together. Sir John Hayward.

For all that he was inwardly chafed with the heat of youth and indignation, against his own people as well as the Rhodians, he moderated himself betwixt his own rage, and the offence of his soldiers. Knolles's History of the Turks.

This chaf'd the boar, his nostrils flames expire,

And his red eyeballs roll with living fire. Dryden.

To CHAFE. v. n.

1. To rage; to fret; to fume; to rave; to boil.

Therewith he 'gan full terribly to roar,

And chaf'd at that indignity right sore. Spenser's Hub. Tale.

My

My husband will not rejoice so much at the abuse of Falstaff, as he will chafe at the doctor's marrying my daughter.

Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Be lion mettled, proud, and take no care,
Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are.

Shakesp. Macbeth.

How did they fume, and stamp, and roar, and chafe,
And swear; not Addison himself was safe.

Pope.

2. To fret against any thing.

Once upon a raw and gusty day,

The troubled Tyber chafing with his shores. Shakesp. J. Cæs.

The murmuring surge,

That on th' unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,

Cannot be heard so high.

CHAFE. n. f. [from the verb.] A heat; a rage; a fury; a passion; a fume; a pett; a fret; a storm.

When Sir Thomas More was speaker of the parliament, with his wisdom and eloquence, he so crossed a purpose of cardinal Wolsey's, that the cardinal, in a chafe, sent for him to Whitehall.

Camden's Remains.

At this the knight grew high in chafe,

And staring furiously on Ralph,

He trembled.

Hudibras, p. ii. c. ii.

Phillips's World of Words.

CHAFF. n. f. [ceaf, Sax. kaf, Dutch.]

1. The husks of corn that are separated by threshing and winnowing.

We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind,

That ev'n our corn shall seem as light as chaff,

And good from bad find no partition. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Pleasure with instruction should be join'd;

So take the corn, and leave the chaff behind. Dryden.

He set before him a sack of wheat, as it had been just threshed out of the sheaf; he then bid him pick out the chaff from among the corn, and lay it aside by itself. Spectator, N° 291.

2. It is used for any thing worthless.

To CHAFFER. v. n. [kauffen, Germ. to buy.] To treat about a bargain; to haggle; to bargain.

Nor rode himself to Paul's, the publick fair,

To chaffer for preferments with his gold,

Where bishopricks and sinecures are sold. Dryden's Fables.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t'other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a-jar. Swift.

In disputes with chairmen, when your master sends you to chaffer with them, take pity, and tell your master that they will not take a farthing less. Swift.

To CHAFFER. v. a. [The active sense is obsolete.]

1. To buy.

He chaffer'd chairs in which churchmen were set,

And breach of laws to privy farm did let.

Spenser.

Make proof of the incorporation of silver and tin in equal quantities, whether it will endure the ordinary fire which belongeth to chaffingdishes, posnets, and such other silver vessels.

Bacon's Physical Remains.

CHAGRIN. n. f. [chagrine, Fr.] Ill humour; vexation; fretfulness; peevishness. It is pronounced shagreen.

Hear me, and touch Belinda with chagrin;

That single act gives half the world the spleen.

Pope.

I grieve with the old, for so many additional inconveniences and chagrins, more than their small remain of life seemed destined to undergo.

Pope's Letters.

To CHAGRIN. v. a. [chagriner, Fr.] To vex; to put out of temper; to tease; to make uneasy.

CHAIN. n. f. [chaine, Fr.]

1. A series of links fastened one within another:

And Pharaoh took off his ring, and put it upon Joseph's hand, and put a gold chain about his neck. Gen. xli. 42.

2. A bond; a manacle; a fetter; something with which prisoners are bound.

Still in constraint your suff'ring sex remains,

Or bound in formal, or in real chains.

Pope.

3. A line of links with which land is measured.

A surveyour may as soon, with his chain, measure out infinite space, as a philosopher, by the quickest flight of mind, reach it, or, by thinking, comprehend it.

Locke.

4. A series linked together.

Those so mistake the Christian religion, as to think it is only a chain of fatal decrees, to deny all liberty of man's choice toward good or evil.

Hammond.

As there is pleasure in the right exercise of any faculty, so especially in that of right reasoning; which is still the greater, by how much the consequences are more clear, and the chains of them more long.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

To CHAIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten or link with a chain.

They repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich, and provide more piercing statutes daily to chain up and restrain the poor.

Shakesp. Coriolanus.

The mariners he chained in his own galleys for slaves.

Knolles's History of the Turks.

Or, march'd I chain'd behind the hostile car,

The victor's pastime, and the sport of war?

Prior.

They, with joint force oppression chaining, set

Imperial justice at the helm.

Thomson.

2. To bring into slavery.

This world, 'tis true,

Was made for Cæsar, but for Titus too:

And which more blest? who chain'd his country, say,

Or he, whose virtue sigh'd to lose a day?

Pope.

3. To put on a chain.

The admiral seeing the mouth of the haven chained, and the castles full of ordnance, and strongly manned, durst not attempt to enter.

Knolles's History of the Turks.

O Warwick, I do bend my knee with thine,

And in this vow do chain my soul with thine.

Shakesp. Henry VI. p. iii.

CHAINPUMP. n. f. [from chain and pump.] A pump used in large English vessels, which is double, so that one rises as the other falls. It yields a great quantity of water, works easily, and is easily mended, but takes up a great deal of room, and makes a disagreeable noise.

Chambers.

It is not long since the striking of the topmast, a wonderful great ease to great ships both at sea and in harbour, hath been devised, together with the chainpump, which takes up twice as much water as the ordinary did; and we have lately added the bonnet and the drabble.

Raleigh's Essays.

CHAINSHOT. n. f. [from chain and shot.] Two bullets or half bullets, fastened together by a chain, which, when they fly open, cut away whatever is before them.

In sea fights oftentimes, a buttock, the brawn of the thigh, and the calf of the leg, are torn off by the chainshot, and splinters.

CHAINWORK. n. f. [from chain and work.] Work with open spaces like the links of a chain.

Nets of chequerwork, and wreaths of chainwork, for the chapters which were upon the tops of the pillars. 1 Kings, vii. 17.

CHAIR. n. f. [chair, Fr.]

1. A moveable seat.

Whether thou choose Cervantes' serious air,

Or laugh and shake in Rab'lais' easy chair,

Or praise the court, or magnify mankind,

Or thy griev'd country's copper chains unbind.

Pope.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person, without a back.

Watts's Logick.

2. A seat of justice, or of authority.

He makes for England, here to claim the crown.—

—Is the chair empty? Is the sword unsway'd?

Is the king dead?

Shakesp. Richard III.

If thou be that princely eagle's bird,

Show thy descent by gazing 'gainst the sun;

For chair and dukedom, throne and kingdom, say;

Either that's thine, or else thou wert not his.

Shakesp. Henry VI. p. iii.

The honour'd gods

Keep Rome in safety, and the chairs of justice

Supply with worthy men.

Shakesp. Coriolanus.

The committee of the commons appointed Mr. Pym to take the chair.

Clarendon.

Her

- CHA'LICED. adj. [from calix, Lat. the cup of a flower.] Having a cell or cup; applied by Shakespeare to a flower, but now obsolete.
Hark, hark! the lark at heav'n's gate sings,
And Phœbus 'gins arise,
His steeds to water at these springs,
On chalic'd flowers that lies. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
- CHALK. n. f. [cealc; cealcstan, Sax. calck, Welch.]
Chalk is a white fossil, usually reckoned a stone, but by some ranked among the boles. It is used in medicine as an absorbent, and is celebrated for curing the heartburn. Chambers.
He maketh all the stones of the altar as chalk stones, that are beaten in sunder. Isaiah, xxvii. 9.
Chalk is of two sorts; the hard, dry, strong chalk, which is best for lime; and a soft, unctuous chalk, which is best for lands, because it easily dissolves with rain and frost. Mortimer.
With chalk I first describe a circle here,
Where these ethereal spirits must appear. Dryden.
- To CHALK. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To rub with chalk.
2. To manure with chalk.
Land that is chalked, if it is not well dunged, will receive but little benefit from a second chalking. Mortimer.
3. To mark or trace out as with chalk.
Being not propt by ancestry, whose grace
Chalks successours their way. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
His own mind chalked out to him the just proportions and measures of behaviour to his fellow creatures. South.
With these helps I might at least have chalked out a way for others, to amend my errors in a like design. Dryden.
The time falls within the compass here chalked out by nature, very punctually. Woodward's Natural History.
- CHALK-CUTTER. n. f. [from chalk and cut.] A man that digs chalk.
Shells, by the seamen called chalk eggs, are dug up commonly in the chalk-pits, where the chalk-cutters drive a great trade with them. Woodward.

That still would recommend thee more to Cæsar,
And challenge better terms. Addison's Cato.
6. To call any one to the performance of conditions.
I will now challenge you of your promise, to give me certain rules as to the principles of blazonry. Peacham on Drawing.
- CHALLENGE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A summons to combat.
I never in my life
Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly. Shakesp. H. IV.
2. A demand of something as due.
There must be no challenge of superiority, or discountenancing of freedom. Collier of Friendship.
3. In law. An exception taken either against persons or things; persons, as in assize to the jurors, or any one or more of them, by the prisoner at the bar. Challenge made to the jurors, is either made to the array, or to the polls: challenge made to the array is, when the whole number is excepted against, as partially empannelled: challenge to or by the poll, is when some one or more are excepted against, as not indifferent: challenge to the jurors is divided into challenge principal, and challenge for cause: challenge principal is that which the law allows without cause alleged, or farther examination; as a prisoner at the bar, arraigned upon felony, may peremptorily challenge to the number of twenty, one after another, of the jury empannelled upon him, alleging no cause. Cowel.
You are mine enemy, I make my challenge,
You shall not be my judge. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
- CHALLENGER. n. f. [from challenge.]
1. One that defies or summons another to combat.
Young man, have you challenged Charles the wrestler?—
No, fair prince; he is the general challenger. Shakesp. As you like it.
- Death was denounc'd;
He took the summons, void of fear,
And unconcernedly cast his eyes around,
As if to find and dare the grievously challenger. Dryden.
2. One that claims superiority.
Whose worth
Stood challenger on mount of all the age,
For her perfections. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Earnest challengers there are of trial, by some publick disputation. Hooker, Preface.
- CHALYBEATE. adj. [from chalybs, Lat. steel.] Impregnated with iron or steel; having the qualities of steel.
The diet ought to strengthen the solids, allowing spices and wine, and the use of chalybeate waters. Arbuthnot on Diet.
- CHAMADE. n. f. [French.] The beat of the drum which declares a surrender.
Several French battalions made a shew of resistance; but, upon our preparing to fill up a little fossé, in order to attack them, they beat the chamade, and sent us charte blanche. Addison. Spectator, N° 165.
- CHAMBER. n. f. [chambre, Fr. camera, Lat. stambr, Welch.]
1. An apartment in a house; generally used for those appropriated to lodging.
Welcome, sweet prince, to London, to your chamber. Shakesp. Richard III.

- Bid them come forth, and hear me,
Or at their chamber door I'll beat the drum,
Till it cry sleep to death. Shakesp. King Lear.
When we have mark'd with blood those sleepy two,
Of his own chamber. Shakesp. Hamlet.
A natural cave in a rock may have something not much unlike to parlours or chambers. Bentley.
2. Any retired room.
The dark caves of death, and chambers of the grave. Prior.
  3. Any cavity or hollow.
Petit has, from an examination of the figure of the eye, argued against the possibility of a film's existence in the posterior chamber. Sharp.
  4. A court of justice.
In the Imperial chamber this vulgar answer is not admitted, viz. I do not believe it, as the matter is propounded and alleged. Ayliffe's Parergon.
  5. The hollow part of a gun where the charge is lodged.
  6. A species of great gun.
Names given them, as cannons, demi-cannons, chambers, arquebuse, musket, &c. Camden's Remains.
  7. The cavity where the powder is lodged in a mine.
- TO CHA'MBER. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To be wanton; to intrigue.
Let us walk honestly as in the day, not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness. Rom. xiii. 13.
  2. To reside as in a chamber.
The best blood chamber'd in his bosom. Shakesp. Rich. II.
CHA'MBERER. n. f. [from chamber.] A man of intrigue.
I have not those soft parts of conversation,
That chamberers have. Shakesp. Othello.
CHA'MBERFELLOW. n. f. [from chamber and fellow.] One that lies in the same chamber.
It is my fortune to have a chamberfellow, with whom I agree very well in many sentiments. Spectator, N° 286.
CHA'MBERLAIN. n. f. [from chamber.]
1. Lord great chamberlain of England is the sixth officer of the crown; a considerable part of his function is at a coronation; to him belongs the provision of every thing in the house of lords; he disposes of the sword of state; under him are the gentleman usher of the black rod, yeomen ushers, and door-keepers. To this office the duke of Ancafter makes an hereditary claim. Chambers.
  2. Lord chamberlain of the household has the oversight of all officers belonging to the king's chambers, except the precinct of the bedchamber. Chambers.
Humbly complaining to her deity,
Got my lord chamberlain his liberty. Shakesp. Rich. II.
He was made lord steward, that the staff of chamberlain might be put into the hands of his brother. Clarendon.
A patriot is a fool in every age,
Whom all lord chamberlains allow the stage. Pope.
  3. A servant who has the care of the chambers.
Think'st thou,
That the bleak air, thy boisterous chamberlain,
Will put thy shirt on warm? Shakesp. Timon.
When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
We will with wine and wassel convince. Shakesp. Macbeth.
He serv'd at first Æmilia's chamberlain. Dryden's Fables.
  4. A receiver of rents and revenues; as, chamberlain of the exchequer, of Chester, of the city of London. Chambers.
- CHA'MBERLAINSHIP. n. f. [from chamberlain.] The office of a chamberlain.
- CHA'MBERMAID. n. f. [from chamber and maid.] A maid whose business is to dress a lady, and wait in her chamber.
Men will not hiss,
The chambermaid was named Ciss. Ben. Johnson.
Some coarse country wench, almost decay'd,
Trudges to town, and first turns chambermaid. Pope.
When he doubted whether a word were intelligible or no, he used to consult one of his lady's chambermaids. Swift.
If these nurses ever presume to entertain the girls with the common follies practised by chambermaids among us, they are publicly whipped. Swift's Gulliver's Travels.
- TO CHA'MBLET. v. a. [from camelot. See CAMELOT.] To vary; to variegate.
Some have the veins more varied and chamleted; as oak, whereof wainscot is made. Bacon's Natural History.
- CHA'MBREL of a Horse. The joint or bending of the upper part of the hinder leg. Farrier's Dict.
- CHAME'LEON. n. f. [χαμαιλεων.]
- The chameleon has four feet, and on each foot three claws.
Its tail is long; with this, as well as with its feet, it fastens itself to the branches of trees. Its tail is flat, its nose long, and made in an obtuse point; its back is sharp, its skin plaited, and jagged like a saw from the neck to the last joint of the tail, and upon its head it has something like a comb; like a fish, it has no neck. Some have asserted, that it lives only upon air; but it has been observed to feed on flies, caught with its tongue, which is about ten inches long, and three thick; made of white flesh, round, but flat at the end; or hollow and open, resembling an elephant's trunk. It also shrinks, and grows longer. This animal is said to assume the colour of those things to which it is applied; but our modern observers assure us, that its natural colour, when at rest and in the shade, is a bluish grey; though some are yellow, and others green, but both of a smaller kind.

When it is exposed to the sun, the grey changes into a darker grey, inclining to a dun colour, and its parts, which have least of the light upon them, are changed into spots of different colours. The grain of its skin, when the light doth not shine upon it, is like cloth mixed with many colours. Sometimes when it is handled, it seems to be speckled with dark spots, inclining to green. If it be put upon a black hat, it appears to be of a violet colour; and sometimes if it be wrapped up in linen, when it is taken off, it is white; but it changes colour only in some parts of the body. Calmet.

A chameleon is a creature about the bigness of an ordinary lizard; his head unproportionably big, and his eyes great; he moveth his head without writhing of his neck, which is inflexible, as a hog doth; his back crooked, his skin spotted with little tumours, less eminent nearer the belly; his tail slender and long; on each foot he hath five fingers, three on the outside, and two on the inside; his tongue of a marvellous length in respect of his body, and hollow at the end, which he will launch out to prey upon flies; of colour green, and of a dusky yellow, brighter and whiter towards the belly; yet spotted with blue, white, and red. Bacon's Natural History, N° 360.

I can add colours ev'n to the chameleon;

Change shapes with Proteus, for advantage. Shakesp. Hen VI.

One part devours the other, and leaves not so much as a mouthful of that popular air, which the chameleons gasp after.

Decay of Piety.

The thin chameleon, fed with air, receives

The colour of the thing to which he cleaves. Dryden.

TO CHA'MFER. v. a. [chambrer, Fr.] To channel; to make furrows or gutters upon a column.

CHA'MFER. } n. f. [from to chamfer.] A small furrow or gut-CHA'MFRET. } ter on a column.

CHA'MLET. n. f. [See CAMELOT.]

To make a chamlet, draw five lines, waved overthwart, if your diapering consist of a double line. Peacham on Drawing.

CHA'MOIS. n. f. [chamois, Fr.] An animal of the goat kind, whose skin is made into soft leather, called among us shammy.

These are the beasts which you shall eat; the ox, the sheep, and wild ox, and the chamois. Deut. xiv. 5.

CHA'MOMILE. n. f. [χαμαιμύλον.] The name of an odoriferous plant.

It hath a fibrose root; the cup of the flower is squamose, which expands, and appears like many leaves; the flowers are radicated; the petals of the flower are white, and the dish yellow; the leaves are cut into five segments. This plant was formerly in great request for making green walks, and is still cultivated in physick gardens for medicinal use, though it grows wild in great plenty. Miller.

Cool violets, and orpine growing still,

Embathed balm, and cheerful galingale,

Fresh costmary, and breathful chamomile,

Dull poppy, and drink-quick'ning fetuale. Spenser's Muioip.

For though the chamomile, the more it is trodden on the faster it grows; yet youth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it wears. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. i.

Watery liquours force it, as distilled waters with diureticks, posset drink with chamomile flowers. Floyer on the Humours.

TO CHAMP. v. a. [champayer, Fr.]

1. To bite with a frequent action of the teeth.

Coffee and opium are taken down, tobacco but in smoke, and betle is but champed in the mouth with a little lime. Bacon.

The fiend reply'd not, overcome with rage;

But, like a proud steed rein'd, went haughty on,

Champing his iron curb. Paradise Lost, b. iv. l. 857.

At his command,

The steeds caparison'd with purple stand,

And champ betwixt their teeth the foaming gold. Dryden.

2. To devour.

A tobacco pipe happened to break in my mouth, and the pieces left such a delicious roughness on my tongue, that I champed up the remaining part. Spectator, N° 431.

TO CHAMP. v. n. To perform frequently the action of biting.

Muttering and champing, as though his cud had troubled him, he gave occasion to Musidorus to come near him. Sidney.

They began to repent of that they had done, and irefully to champ upon the bit they had taken into their mouths. Hooker.

His jaws did not answer equally to one another; but by his frequent motion and champing with them, it was evident they were neither luxated nor fractured. Wifeman.

CHA'MPAIGN. n. f. [campagne, Fr.] A flat open country.

In the abuses of the customs, meseems, you have a fair cham- paign laid open to you, in which you may at large stretch out your discourse. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Of all these bounds,

With shadowy forests and with champaigns rich'd,

We make thee lady. Shakesp. King Lear.

If two bordering princes have their territory meeting on an open champaign, the more mighty will continually seek occasion to extend his limits unto the further border thereof. Raleigh.

Sir John Norris maintained a retreat without disarray, by the space of some miles, part of the way champaign, unto the city of Gaunt, with less loss of men than the enemy. Bacon.

From his side two rivers flow'd,

Th' one winding, th' other straight, and left between

Fair champaign, with less rivers intervene'd. Paradise Reg.

CHA'MPERTORS. n. f. [from champerty. In law.] Such as move suits, or cause them to be moved, either by their own or others procurement, and pursue, at their proper costs, to have part of the land in contest, or part of the gains. Cowel.

CHA'MPERTY. n. f. [champart, Fr. In law.] A maintenance of any man in his suit while depending, upon condition to have part of the thing when it is recovered. Cowel.

CHAMPI'GNON. n. f. [champignon, Fr.] A kind of mushroom.

He viler friends with doubtful mushrooms treats,

Secure for you, himself champignons eats. Dryden.

It has the resemblance of a large champignon before it is opened, branching out into a large round knob at one end.

Woodward on Fossils.

CHA'MPION. n. f. [champion, Fr. campio, low Lat.]

1. A man who undertakes a cause in single combat.

In many armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory would go on the one side.

Bacon's Coll. of Good and Evil.

For hot, cold, moist, and dry, four champions fierce,

Strive here for mastery, and to battle bring

Their embryon atoms. Par. Lost, b. ii. l. 898.

O light of Trojans, and support of Troy,

Thy father's champion, and thy country's joy! Dryden.

At length the adverse admirals appear,

The two bold champions of each country's right. Dryden.

2. A hero; a stout warrior.

A stouter champion never handled sword. Shakefp. H. VI.

This makes you incapable of conviction, and they applaud themselves as zealous champions for truth, when indeed they are contending for error. Locke.

3. In law.

In our common law, champion is taken no less for him that trieth the combat in his own case, than for him that fighteth in the case of another. Cowel.

To CHA'MPION. v. a. [from the noun.] To challenge to the combat.

The seed of Banquo, kings!

Rather than so, come, fate, into the list,

And champion me to th' utterance. Shakefp. Macbeth.

CHANCE. n. f. [chance, Fr.]

1. Fortune; the cause of fortuitous events.

As th' unthought accident is guilty

Of what we wildly do, so we profess

Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies

Of every wind that blows. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.

The only man of all that chance could bring,

To meet my arms, was worth the conquering. Dryden.

Chance is but a mere name, and really nothing in itself; a conception of our minds, and only a compendious way of speaking, whereby we would express, that such effects as are commonly attributed to chance, were verily produced by their true and proper causes, but without their design to produce them.

Bentley.

2. Fortune; the act of fortune, or chance.

These things are commonly not observed, but left to take their chance. Bacon's Essays.

3. Accident; casual occurrence; fortuitous event.

To say a thing is a chance or casualty, as it relates to second causes, is not profaneness, but a great truth; as signifying no more, than that there are some events besides the knowledge and power of second agents. South.

The beauty I beheld, has struck me dead;

Unknowingly she strikes, and kills by chance;

Poison is in her eyes, and death in ev'ry glance. Dryden.

All nature is but art, unknown to thee;

All chance direction, which thou canst not see. Pope.

4. Event; success; luck.

Now we'll together, and the chance of goodness

Be like our warranted quarrel! Shakefp. Macbeth.

5. Misfortune; unlucky accident.

You were us'd

To say, extremity was the trier of spirits,

That common chances common men could bear.

Shakefp. Coriolanus.

6. Possibility of any occurrence.

A chance, but chance may lead, where I may meet

Some wand'ring spirit of heav'n, by fountain side,

Or in thick shade retir'd. Paradise Lost, b. iv. l. 530.

Then your ladyship might have a chance to escape this address. Swift.

CHANCE. adj. [It is seldom used but in composition.] Happening by chance.

Now should they part, malicious tongues would say,

They met like chance companions on the way.

Dryden's Hind and Panther.

I would not take the gift,

Which, like a toy dropt from the hands of fortune,

Lay for the next chance comer. Dryden and Lee's OEdipus.

To CHANCE. v. n. [from the noun.] To happen; to fall out; to fortune.

Think what a chance thou chancest on; but think;—

Thou hast thy mistress still. Shakefp. Cymbeline.

How chance thou art not with the prince thy brother?

Shakefp. Henry IV. p. ii.

Ay, Casca, tell us what hath chanc'd today,

That Cæsar looks so sad. Shakefp. Julius Cæsar.

He chanced upon divers of the Turks victuallers, whom he easily took. Knolles's History of the Turks.

I chose the safer sea, and chanc'd to find

A river's mouth impervious to the wind. Pope's Odyssey.

CHANCE-MEDLEY. n. f. [from chance and medley. In law.]

The casual slaughter of a man, not altogether without the fault of the slayer, when ignorance or negligence is joined with the chance; as if a man lop trees by an highway-side, by which many usually travel, and cast down a bough, not giving warning to take heed thereof, by which bough one passing by is slain: in this case he offends, because he gave no warning, that the party might have taken heed to himself. Cowel.

If such an one should have the ill hap, at any time, to strike a man dead with a smart saying, it ought, in all reason and conscience, to be judged but a chancemedley. South.

CHA'NCEABLE. adj. [from chance.] Accidental.

The trial thereof was cut off by the chanceable coming thither of the king of Iberia. Sidney, b. ii.

CHANCEL. n. f. [from cancelli, Lat. lettings, with which the chancel was inclosed.] The eastern part of the church, in which the altar is placed.

Whether it be allowable or no, that the minister should say service in the chancel. Hooker, b. v. § 30.

The chancel of this church is vaulted with a single stone of four feet in thickness, and an hundred and fourteen in circumference. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

CHA'NCELLOR. n. f. [cancellarius, Lat. chancelier, Fr. from cancellare, litteras vel scriptum linea per medium ducta damnare, and seemeth of itself likewise to be derived à cancellis, which signify all one with κινελαίδες, a lettuce; that is, a thing made of wood or iron bars, laid crossways one over another, so that a man may see through them in and out. It may be thought that judgment seats were compassed in with bars, to defend the judges and other officers from the press of the multitude, and yet not to hinder any man's view.]

Quæsitus regni tibi cancellarius Angli,

Primus solliciti mente petendus erit.

Hic est, qui regni leges cancellat iniquas,

Et mandata pii principis æqua facit.

Verbes of Nigel de Wetekre to the bishop of Ely, chancellor to Richard I.

1. Cancellarius, at the first, signified the registers or actuaries in court; grapharios, scil. qui conscribendis & excipiendis judicium actis dant operam. But this name is greatly advanced, and not only in other kingdoms but in this, is given to him that is the chief judge in causes of property; for the chancellor hath power to moderate and temper the written law, and subjecteth himself only to the law of nature and conscience. Cowel.

Turn out, you rogue, how like a beast you lie:

Go, buckle to the law: Is this an hour

To stretch your limbs? you'll ne'er be chancellor. Dryd. jun.

Aristides was a person of the strictest justice, and best acquainted with the laws, as well as forms of their government; so that he was in a manner chancellor of Athens. Swift.

2. CHANCELLOR in the Ecclesiastical Court. A bishop's lawyer; a man trained up in the civil and canon law, to direct the bishops in matters of judgment, relating as well to criminal as to civil affairs in the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. CHANCELLOR of a Cathedral. A dignitary, whose office it is to superintend the regular exercise of devotion.

4. CHANCELLOR of the Exchequer. An officer who sits in that court, and in the exchequer chamber, and, with the rest of the court, ordereth things to the king's best benefit. He has power, with others, to compound for forfeitures on penal statutes, bonds and recognizances entered into by the king. He has great authority in managing the royal revenue, and in matters of first-fruits. The court of equity is in the exchequer chamber, and is held before the lord treasurer, chancellor, and barons, as that of common law before the barons only. Cowel. Chamb.

5. CHANCELLOR of an University. The principal magistrate, who, at Oxford, holds his office during life, but, at Cambridge, he may be elected every three years.

6. CHANCELLOR of the Order of the Garter, and other military orders, is an officer who seals the commissions and mandates of the chapter and assembly of the knights, keeps the register of their deliberations, and delivers their acts under the seal of the order. Chambers.

CHA'NCELLORSHIP. n. f. The office of chancellor.

The next Sunday after he gave up his chancellorship of England, he came himself to his wife's pew, and used the usual words of his gentleman-usher, Madam, my lord is gone. Camd.

CHA'NCERY.

CHA'NCERY. n. f. [from chancellor; probably chancellery; then shortened.] The court of equity and conscience, moderating the rigour of other courts, that are tied to the letter of the law; whereof the lord chancellor of England is the chief judge, or the lord keeper of the great seal. Corvel.

The contumacy and contempt of the party must be signified in the court of chancery, by the bishops letters under the seal episcopal. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CHANCRE. n. f. [chancre, Fr.] An ulcer usually arising from venereal maladies.

It is possible he was not well cured, and would have relapsed with a chancre. Wifeman.

CHANCROUS. adj. [from chancre.] Having the qualities of a chancre; ulcerous.

You may think I am too strict in giving so many internals in the cure of so small an ulcer as a chancre, or rather a chan-crous callus. Wifeman.

CHANDELI'ER. n. f. [chandelier, Fr.] A branch for candles.

CHANDLER. n. f. [chandelier, Fr.] An artisan whose trade it is to make candles, or a person who sells them.

The sack that thou hast drunken me, would have bought me lights as good cheap at the dearest chandlers in Europe.

Shakefp. Henry IV. p. i.

But whether black or lighter dies are worn,

The chandler's basket, on his shoulder born,

With tallow spots thy coat.

Gay's Trivia.

CHANFRIN. n. f. [old French.] The forepart of the head of a horse, which extends from under the ears, along the interval between the eyebrows, down to his nose. Farrier's Dict.

TO CHANGE. v. a. [changer, Fr. cambio, Lat.]

1. To put one thing in the place of another.

He that cannot look into his own estate, had need choose well whom he employeth, and change them often; for new are more timorous, and less subtle. Bacon's Essays.

2. To resign any thing for the sake of another, with for before the thing taken or received.

Persons grown up in the belief of any religion, cannot change that for another, without applying their understanding duly to consider and compare both. South.

The French and we still change; but here's the curse,

They change for better, and we change for worse.

Dryden's Spanish Friar, Prologue.

3. To discount a larger piece of money into several smaller.

A shopkeeper might be able to change a guinea, or a moi-dore, when a customer comes for a crown's worth of goods.

Swift's Intelligencer, N° 19.

4. To give and take reciprocally, with the particle with before the person to whom we give, and from whom we take.

To secure thy content, look upon those thousands, with whom thou wouldst not, for any interest, change thy fortune and condition.

Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

5. To alter.

Thou shalt not see me blush,

Nor change my countenance for this arrest;

A heart unspotted is not easily daunted. Shakefp. Henry VI.

Whatsoever is brought upon thee, take cheerfully, and be patient when thou art changed to a low estate. Eccus, ii. 4.

For the elements were changed in themselves by a kind of harmony, like as in a psaltery notes change the name of the tune, and yet are always sounds. Wisdom, xix. 18.

6. To mend the disposition or mind.

I would she were in heaven, so she could

Intreat some pow'r to change this curriish Jew.

Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.

7. To change a horse, or to change hand, is to turn or bear the horse's head from one hand to the other, from the left to the right, or from the right to the left. Farrier's Dict.

TO CHANGE. v. n.

1. To undergo change; to suffer alteration; as, his fortune may soon change, though he is now so secure.

One Julia, that his changing thought forgot,

Would better fit his chamber. Shakefp. Two Gent. of Verona.

2. To change, as the moon; to begin a new monthly revolution.

I am weary of this moon; would he would change.

Shakefp. Midsummer Night's Dream.

CHANGE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An alteration of the state of any thing.

Since I saw you last,

There is a change upon you. Shakefp. Antony and Cleopatra.

2. A succession of one thing in the place of another.

O wond'rous changes of a fatal scene,

Still varying to the last!

Dryden.

Nothing can cure this part of ill breeding, but change and variety of company, and that of persons above us. Locke.

Empires by various turns shall rise and set;

While thy abandon'd tribes shall only know

A diff'rent master, and a change of time.

Prior.

Hear how Timotheus' various lays surprize,

And bid alternate passions fall and rise!

While, at each change, the son of Libyan Jove

Now burns with glory, and then melts with love. Pope.

3. The time of the moon in which it begins a new monthly revolution.

Take seeds or roots, and set some of them immediately after the change, and others of the same kind immediately after the full. Bacon's Nat. History, N° 893.

4. Novelty.

The hearts

Of all his people shall revolt from him,

And kiss the lips of unacquainted change. Shakefp. K. John.

Our fathers did, for change, to France repair,

And they, for change, will try our English air.

Dryden's Spanish Friar, Prologue.

5. In ringing; an alteration of the order in which a set of bells is sounded.

Four bells admit twenty-four changes in ringing, and five bells one hundred and twenty. Holder's Elements of Speech.

Easy it may be to contrive new postures, and ring other changes upon the same bells. Norris.

6. That which makes a variety; that which may be used for another of the same kind.

I will now put forth a riddle unto you; if you can find it out, then I will give you thirty sheets, and thirty change of garments. Judges, xiv. 12.

7. Small money, which may be given for larger pieces.

Wood buys up our old halfpence, and from thence the present want of change arises; but supposing not one farthing of change in the nation, five and twenty thousand pounds would be sufficient. Swift.

CHANGEABLE. adj. [from change.]

1. Subject to change; fickle; inconstant.

A steady mind will admit steady methods and counsels; but there is no measure to be taken of a changeable humour.

L'Estrange.

As I am a man, I must be changeable; and sometimes the gravest of us all are so, even upon ridiculous accidents.

Dryden's Aurengzebe, Preface.

2. Possible to be changed.

The fibrous or vascular parts of vegetables seem scarce changeable in the alimentary duct. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Having the quality of exhibiting different appearances.

Now the taylor make thy doublet of changeable taffata; for thy mind is a very opal. Shakefp. Twelfth Night.

CHANGEABLENESS. n. f. [from changeable.]

1. Inconstancy; fickleness.

At length he betrothed himself to one worthy to be liked, if any worthiness might excuse so unworthy a changeableness.

Sidney, b. ii.

There is no temper of mind more unmanly than that changeableness with which we are too justly branded by all our neighbours.

Addison. Freeholder, N° 23.

2. Susceptibility of change.

If how long they are to continue in force, be no where expressed, then have we no light to direct our judgment concerning the changeableness or immutability of them, but considering the nature and quality of such laws. Hooker, b. iii. § 10.

CHANGEABLY. adv. [from changeable.] Inconstantly.

CH'ANGEFUL. adj. [from change and full.] Full of change; inconstant; uncertain; mutable; subject to variation; fickle.

Unsound plots, and changeful orders, are daily devised for her good, yet never effectually prosecuted or performed.

Spenser on Ireland.

Britain, changeful as a child at play,

Now calls in princes, and now turns away.

Pope.

CH'ANGELING. n. f. [from change; the word arises from an odd superstitious opinion, that the fairies steal away children, and put others that are ugly and stupid in their places.]

1. A child left or taken in the place of another.

And her base elfin breed there for thee left;

Such, men do changelings call, so chang'd by fairies theft.

Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. i. c. x. stanza. 65.

She, as her attendant, hath

A lovely boy stol'n from an Indian king;

She never had so sweet a changeling.

Shakefp. Midsummer Night's Dream.

2. An idiot; a fool; a natural.

Changelings and fools of heav'n, and thence shut out,

Wildly we roam in discontent about. Dryden's Tyr. Love.

Would any one be a changeling, because he is less determined by wise considerations than a wise man? Locke.

3. One apt to change; a waverer.

'Twas not long

Before from world to world they swung;

As they had turn'd from fide to fide,

And as they changelings liv'd, they died.

Hudibras.

CH'ANGER. n. f. [from change.] One that is employed in changing or discounting money.

CHANNEL. n. f. [canal, Fr. canalis, Lat.]

1. The hollow bed of running waters.

It is not so easy, now that things are grown into an habit, and have their certain course, to change the channel, and turn their streams another way.

Spenser's State of Ireland.

Draw them to Tyber's bank, and weep your tears
Into the channel, till the lowest stream
Do kiss the most exalted shores of all. Shakefp. J. Caesar.

So th' injur'd sea, which, from her wonted course,
To gain some acres, avarice did force;
If the new banks, neglected once, decay,
No longer will from her old channel stay. Waller.

Had not the said strata been dislocated, some of them elevated, and others depressed, there would have been no cavity or channel to give reception to the water of the sea. Woodward.

The tops of mountains and hills will be continually washed down by the rains, and the channels of rivers abraded by the streams. Bentley.

2. Any cavity drawn longways.

Complaint and hot desires, the lover's hell,
And scalding tears, that wore a channel where they fell.

Dryden's Fables.

3. A strait or narrow sea, between two countries; as the British Channel between Britain and France; St. George's Channel between Britain and Ireland.

4. A gutter or furrow of a pillar.

To CHA'NNEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut any thing in channels.

No more shall trenching war channel her fields,
Nor bruise her flowrets with the armed hoofs

Of hostile paces.

Shakefp. Henry IV. p. i.

The body of this column is perpetually channelled, like a thick plaited gown. Wotton's Architecture.

Torrents, and loud impetuous cataracts,

Roll down the lofty mountain's channel'd fides,

And to the vale convey their foaming tides.

Blackmore.

To CHANT. v. a. [chanter, Fr.]

1. To sing.

Wherein the chearful birds of sundry kind

Do chant sweet musick.

Fairy Queen, b. i. c. vii.

2. To celebrate by song.

The poets chant it in the theatres, the shepherds in the mountains. Bramhall.

3. To sing in the cathedral service.

To CHANT. v. n. To sing; to make melody with the voice.

They chant to the sound of the viol, and invent to themselves instruments of musick. Amos, vi. 7.

Heav'n heard his song, and hasten'd his relief;

And chang'd to snowy plumes his hoary hair,

And wing'd his flight, to chant aloft in air.

Dryden.

CHANT. n. f. [from the verb.] Song; melody.

A pleasant grove,

With chant of tuneful birds resounding loud.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 290.

CHA'NTER. n. f. [from chant.] A singer; a songster.

You curious chanters of the wood,

That warble forth dame Nature's lays.

Wotton.

Jove's ethereal lays, resistless fire,

The chanter's soul, and raptur'd song inspire,

Instinct divine! nor blame severe his choice,

Warbling the Grecian woes with harp and voice.

Pope.

CHA'NTICLEER. n. f. [from chanter and clair, Fr.] The name given to the cock, from the clearness and loudness of his crow.

And chearful chanticleer, with his note shrill,

Had warn'd once, that Phœbus' fiery car

In haste was climbing up the eastern hill. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Hark, hark, I hear

The strain of strutting chanticleer.

Shakefp. Tempest.

Stay, the chearful chanticleer

Tells you that the time is near.

Ben. Johnson's Mask.

These verses were mentioned by Chaucer, in the description of the sudden stir, and panical fear, when Chanticleer the cock was carried away by Reynold the fox. Camden's Remains.

Within this homestead liv'd without a peer,

For crowing loud, the noble chanticleer.

Dryden's Fab.

CHA'NTRESS. n. f. [from chant.] A woman singer.

Sweet bird, that shun'st the noise of folly,

Most musical, most melancholy,

Thee, chantress of the woods among,

I woo to hear thy even-song.

Milton.

CHA'NTRY. n. f. [from chant.]

Chantry is a church or chapel endowed with lands, or other yearly revenue, for the maintenance of one or more priests, daily to sing mass for the souls of the donors, and such others as they appoint. Cowel.

Now go with me, and with this holy man,

Into the chantry by; to those before him,

And, underneath that consecrated roof,

Plight me the full assurance of your faith. Shakefp. T. Night.

CHA'OS. n. f. [chaos, Lat. χάος.]

1. The mass of matter supposed to be in confusion before it was divided by the creation into its proper classes and elements.

The whole universe would have been a confused chaos, without beauty or order. Bentley.

2. Confusion; irregular mixture.

Had I followed the worst, I could not have brought church and state to such a chaos of confusions, as some have done.

Their reason sleeps, but mimic fancy wakes,

Supplies her parts, and wild ideas takes

From words and things, ill sorted, and misjoin'd,

The anarchy of thought, and chaos of the mind. Dryden.

3. Any thing where the parts are undistinguished.

We shall have nothing but darkness and a chaos within, whatever order and light there be in things without us. Locke.

Pleas'd with a work, where nothing's just or fit,

One glaring chaos and wild heap of wit.

Pope.

CHAO'TICK. adj. [from chaos.] Resembling chaos; confused.

When the terraqueous globe was in a chaotick state, and the earthy particles subside, then those several beds were, in all probability, reposit in the earth. Derham's Physico-Theology.

To CHAP. v. a. [kappen, Dutch, to cut. This word seems originally the same with chop; nor were they probably distinguished at first, otherwise than by accident; but they have now a meaning something different, though referable to the same original sense.] To break into hiatus, or gapings.

It also weakened more and more the arch of the earth, drying it immoderately, and chapping it in sundry places.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Then would unbalanc'd heat licentious reign,

Crack the dry hill, and chap the ruffet plain.

Blackmore.

CHAP. n. f. [from the verb.] A cleft; an aperture; an opening; a gaping; a chink.

What moisture the heat of the summer sucks out of the earth, it is repaid in the rains of the next winter; and what chaps are made in it, are filled up again. Burnet's Theory.

CHAP. n. f. [This is not often used, except by anatomists, in the singular.] The upper or under part of a beast's mouth.

Froth fills his chaps, he sends a grunting found,

And part he churns, and part befoams the ground. Dryden.

The nether chap in the male skeleton is half an inch broader than in the female, as being made to accommodate a bigger muscle for the motion of the teeth. Grew's Museum.

CHAPE. n. f. [chappe, Fr.]

1. The catch of any thing by which it is held in its place; as the hook of a scabbard by which it sticks in the belt; the point by which a buckle is held to the back strap.

This is Monsieur Parolles, that had the whole theory of the war in the knot of his scarf, and the practice in the chape of his dagger. Shakefp. All's well that ends well.

2. A brass or silver tip or case, that strenghtens the end of the scabbard of a sword. Phillips's World of Words.

CHAPEL. n. f. [capella, Lat.]

A chapel is of two sorts, either adjoining to a church, as a parcel of the same, which men of worth build, or else separate from the mother church, where the parish is wide, and is commonly called a chapel of ease, because it is built for the ease of one or more parishioners, that dwell too far from the church, and is served by some inferior curate, provided for at the charge of the rector, or of such as have benefit by it, as the composition or custom is. Cowel.

She went in among those few trees, so closed in the tops together, as they might seem a little chapel. Sidney.

Will you dispatch us here under this tree, or shall we go with you to your chapel? Shakefp. As you like it.

Where truth erecteth her church, he helps error to rear up a chapel hard by. Howel's Vocal Forest.

A chapel will I build with large endowment. Dryden.

A free chapel is such as is founded by the king of England.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

CHA'PELESS. adj. [from chape.] Without a chape.

An old rusty sword, with a broken hilt, and chapeless, with two broken points. Shakefp. Taming of the Shrew.

CHAPE'LLANY. n. f. [from chapel.]

A chapellany is usually said to be that which does not subsist of itself, but is built and founded within some other church, and is dependent thereon. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CHA'PELRY. n. f. [from chapel.] The jurisdiction or bounds of a chapel.

CHAPERON. n. f. [French.] A kind of hood or cap worn by the knights of the garter in their habits.

I will omit the honourable habiliments, as robes of state, parliament robes, chaperons, and caps of state. Camden.

CHA'PFALN. adj. [from chap and faln.] Having the mouth shrunken.

A chappaln beaver loosely hanging by

The cloven helm.

Dryden's Juv. sat. 10.

CHA'PITER. n. f. [chapiteau, Fr.] The upper part or capital of a pillar.

He overlaid your chapiters and your fillets with gold.

Exodus, xxxvi. 38.

CHA'PLAIN. n. f. [capellanus, Latin.] He that performs divine service in a chapel, and attends the king, or other person, for the instruction of him and his family, to read prayers, and preach. Cowel.

Wishing me to permit

John de la Court, my chaplain, a choice hour,

To hear from him a matter of some moment.

Shakefp.

Chaplain, away! thy priesthood saves thy life.

Shakefp. Henry VI. p. iii.

A chief

C H A

A chief governour can never fail of some worthless illiterate chaplain, fond of a title and precedence. Swift.

CHA'PLAINSHIP. n. f. [from chaplain.]

1. The office or business of a chaplain.
2. The possession or revenue of a chapel.

CHA'PLESS. adj. [from chap.] Without any flesh about the mouth.

Now my lady Worm's chapless, and knocked about the muzzard with a sexton's spade. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Shut me nightly in a charnel-house,
With reeky thanks and yellow chapless bones. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

CHA'PLET. n. f. [chapelet, Fr.]

1. A garland or wreath to be worn about the head.
Upon old hyems' chin, and icy crown,
An od'rous chaplet of sweet summer's buds,
Is, as in mockery, set. Shakesp. Midsum. Night's Dream.
I strangely long to know,
Whether they nobler chaplets wear,
Those that their mistresses' scorn did bear,
Or those that were us'd kindly. Suckling.
All the quire was grac'd
With chaplets green, upon their foreheads plac'd. Dryden.
The winding ivy chaplet to invade,
And folded fern, that your fair forehead shade. Dryden.
They with joyful nimble wing,
Flew dutifully back again,
And made an humble chaplet for the king. Swift.
2. A string of beads used in the Romish church for keeping an account of the number rehearsed of pater noster and ave marias. A different sort of chaplets is also used by the Mahometans.
3. [In architecture.] A little moulding carved into round beads, pearls, or olives.
4. [In horsemanship.] A couple of stirrup leathers, mounted each of them with a stirrup, and joining at top in a sort of leather buckle, which is called the head of the chaplet, by which they are fastened to the pommel of a saddle, after they have been adjusted to the length and bearing of the rider. They are made use of both to avoid the trouble of taking up or letting down the stirrups, every time a person mounts on a different horse and saddle, and to supply the want of academy saddles, which have no stirrups to them. Farrier's Dict.
5. A tuft of feathers on the peacock's head.

CHA'PMAN. n. f. [ceapman, Sax.] A cheapner; one that offers as a purchaser.

Fair Diomede, you do as chapmen do,
Dispraise the thing that you intend to buy. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

Yet have they seen the maps, and bought 'em too,
And understand 'em as most chapmen do. Ben. Johnson.

There was a collection of certain rare manuscripts, exquisitely written in Arabick; these were upon sale to the Jesuits at Antwerp, liquorish chapmen of such wares. Wotton.

He dressed two, and carried them to Samos, as the likeliest place for a chapman. L'Estrange.

Their chapmen they betray,
Their shops are dens, the buyer is their prey. Dryden.

CHAPS. n. f. [from chap.]

1. The mouth of a beast of prey.
So on the downs we see
A hasten'd hare from greedy greyhound go,
And past all hope, his chaps to frustrate so. Sidney.
Open your mouth; this will shake your shaking, I can tell you, and that soundly; you cannot tell who's your friend; open your chaps again. Shakesp. Tempest.
Their whelps at home expect the promis'd food,
And long to temper their dry chaps in blood. Dryden.
2. It is used in contempt for the mouth of a man.

CHAPT. }

CHA'PPED. } particip. pass. [from to chap.]

Like a table upon which you may run your finger without rubs, and your nail cannot find a joint; not horrid, rough, wrinkled, gaping, or chapt. Ben. Johnson's Discovery.

Cooling ointment made,
Which on their sun-burnt cheeks and their chapt skins they laid. Dryden's Fab.

CHAPTER. n. f. [chapitre, Fr. from capitulum, Lat.]

1. A division of a book.
The first book we divide into three sections; whereof the first is these three chapters. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
If these mighty men at chapter and verse, can produce then no scripture to overthrow our church ceremonies, I will undertake to produce scripture enough to warrant them. South.
2. From hence comes the proverbial phrase, to the end of the chapter; throughout; to the end.
Money does all things; for it gives and it takes away, it makes honest men and knaves, fools and philosophers; and so forward, mutatis mutandis, to the end of the chapter. L'Estrange.
3. Chapter, from capitulum, signifieth, in our common law, as in the canon law, whence it is borrowed, an assembly of the clergy of a cathedral or collegiate church. Cowel.

C H A

The abbot takes the advice and consent of his chapter, before he enters on any matters of importance. Addison on Italy.

4. The place in which assemblies of the clergy are held.
Though the canonical constitution does not strictly require it to be made in the cathedral, yet it matters not where it be made, either in the choir or chapter house. Ayliffe's Parergon.
5. The place where delinquents receive discipline and correction. Ayliffe's Parergon.
6. A decretal epistle. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CHA'PTREL. n. f. [probably from chapiter.] The capitals of pillars, or pilasters, which support arches, commonly called impost.

Let the keystone break without the arch, so much as you project over the jaums with the chaptrels. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

CHAR. n. f. [of uncertain derivation.] A fish found only in Winander meer in Lancashire.

TO CHAR. v. a. [See CHARCOAL.] To burn wood to a black cinder.

Spraywood, in charring, parts frequently into various cracks. Woodward on Fossils.

CHAR. n. f. [cynne, work, Sax. Lye. It is derived by Skinner, either from charge, Fr. business, or capc, Sax. care, or keeren, Dutch, to sweep.] Work done by the day; a single job or task.

But a meer woman, and commanded
By such poor passion, as the maid that milks,
And does the meanest chars. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.
Harvest done, to char work did aspire;
Meat, drink, and twopence, were her daily hire. Dryden.

TO CHAR. v. n. [from the noun.] To work at others houses by the day, without being a hired servant.

CHA'R-WOMAN. n. f. [from char and woman.] A woman hired accidentally for odd work, or single days.

Get three or four char-women to attend you constantly in the kitchen, whom you pay only with the broken meat, a few coals, and all the cinders. Swift's Directions to the Cook.

CHARACTER. n. f. [character, Lat. χαρακτήρ.]

1. A mark; a stamp; a representation.
In outward also her resembling less
His image, who made both; and less expressing
The character of that dominion giv'n
O'er other creatures. Paradise Lost, b. viii. l. 542.
2. A letter used in writing or printing.
But his neat cookery! —
He cut our roots in characters. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
The purpose is perspicuous even as substance,
Whose grossness little characters sum up. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.
It were much to be wished, that there were throughout the world but one sort of character for each letter, to express it to the eye; and that exactly proportioned to the natural alphabet formed in the mouth. Holder's Elements of Speech.
3. The hand or manner of writing.
I found the letter thrown in at the casement of my closet. —
You know the character to be your brother's. Shak. King Lear.
4. A representation of any man as to his personal qualities.
Each drew fair characters, yet none
Of these they feign'd, excels their own. Denham.
5. An account of any thing as good or bad.
This subterraneous passage is much intended, since Seneca gave so bad a character of it. Addison on Italy.
6. The person with his assemblage of qualities.
In a tragedy, or epick poem, the hero of the piece must be advanced foremost to the view of the reader or spectator; he must outline the rest of all the characters; he must appear the prince of them, like the sun in the Copernican system, encompassed with the less noble planets. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
Homer has excelled all the heroick poets that ever wrote, in the multitude and variety of his characters; every god that is admitted into his poem, acts a part which would have been suitable to no other deity. Addison. Spectator, N° 273.
7. Personal qualities; particular constitution of the mind.
Nothing so true as what you once let fall,
Most women have no characters at all. Pope.
8. Adventitious qualities impressed by a post or office.
The chief honour of the magistrate consists in maintaining the dignity of his character by suitable actions. Atterbury.

TO CHA'RACTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To inscribe; to engrave.

These few precepts in thy memory
See thou character. Shakesp. Hamlet.
Shew me one scar character'd on thy skin. Shakesp. H. VI.
O Rosalind! these trees shall be my books,
And in their barks my thoughts I'll character. Shakesp. As you like it.

CHARACTERISTICAL. } adj. [from characterize.] That which

CHARACTERISTICK. } constitutes the character, or marks the peculiar properties of any person or thing.

There are several others that I take to have been likewise such, to which yet I have not ventured to prefix that characteristical distinction. Woodward on Fossils.

The shining quality of an epick hero, his magnanimity, his constancy, his patience, his piety, or whatever characteristical virtue his poet gives him, raises our admiration. Dryden.

CHARACTERISTICALNESS. n. f. [from characteristical.] The quality of being peculiar to a character.

CHARACTERISTICK. n. f. That which constitutes the character; that which distinguishes any thing or person from others.

I shall here endeavour to shew, how this vast invention exerts itself, in a manner superiour to that of any poet, as it is the great and peculiar characteristick which distinguishes him from all others. Pope's Essay on Homer.

CHARACTERISTICK of a Logarithm. The same with the index or exponent.

TO CHARACTERIZE. v. a. [from character.]

1. To give a character or an account of the personal qualities of any man.

It is some commendation, that we have avoided publickly to characterize any person, without long experience. Swift.

2. To engrave, or imprint.

They may be called anticipations, prenotions, or sentiments characterized and engraven in the soul, born with it, and growing up with it. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. To mark with a particular stamp or token.

There are faces not only individual, but gentilitious and national; European, Asiatick, Chinese, African, and Grecian faces are characterized. Arbutnot on Air.

CHARACTERLESS. adj. [from character.] Without a character.

When water drops have worn the stones of Troy,

And blind oblivion swallowed cities up,

And mighty states characterless are grated,

To dusty nothing. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

CHARACTERY. n. f. [from character.] Impression; mark; distinction.

Fairies use flowers for their charactery.

Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

All my engagements I will construe to thee,

All the charactery of my sad brows. Shakesp. Julius Caesar.

CHARCOAL. n. f. [imagined by Skinner to be derived from char, business; but, by Mr. Lye, from to chark, to burn.] Coal made by burning wood under turf. It is used in preparing metals.

Seacoal lasts longer than charcoal; and charcoal of roots, being coaled into great pieces, lasts longer than ordinary charcoal. Bacon's Natural History, N° 779.

Love is a fire that burns and sparkles,

In men as nat'rally as in charcoals,

Which footy chymists stop in holes,

When out of wood they extract coals. Hudibras.

Is there, who, lock'd from ink and paper, scrawls

With desp'rate charcoal round his darken'd walls? Pope.

CHARD. n. f. [charde, Fr.]

1. Chards of artichokes are the leaves of fair artichoke plants, tied and wrapped up all over but the top, in straw, during the autumn and winter; this makes them grow white, and lose some of their bitterness. Chambers.

2. Chards of beet, are plants of white beet transplanted, producing great tops, which, in the midst, have a large white, thick, downy, and cotton-like main shoot, which is the true chard. Mortimer.

TO CHARGE. v. a. [charger, Fr. caricare, Ital. from carrus, Lat.]

1. To entrust; to commission for a certain purpose. It has with before the thing entrusted.

And the captain of the guard charged Joseph with them, and he served them. Genesis, xl. 4.

What you have charged me with, that I have done.

2. To impute as a debt, with on before the debtor.

My father's, mother's, brother's death, I pardon:

That's somewhat sure; a mighty sum of murder,

Of innocent and kindred blood struck off,

My prayers and penance shall discount for these,

And beg of heav'n to charge the bill on me. Dryden.

It is not barely the ploughman's pains, the reaper's and thresher's toil, and the baker's sweat, is to be counted into the bread we eat; the plough, mill, oven, or any other utensils, must all be charged on the account of labour. Locke.

3. To impute; with on before the person to whom any thing is imputed.

No more accuse thy pen, but charge the crime

On native sloth, and negligence of time. Dryden.

It is easy to account for the difficulties he charges on the peripatetick doctrine. Locke.

Perverse mankind! whose wills, created free,

Charge all their woes on absolute decree;

All to the dooming gods their guilt translate,

And follies are miscall'd the crimes of fate. Pope.

We charge that upon necessity, which was really desired and chosen. Watts's Logick.

4. To impose as a task. It has with before the thing imposed.

The gospel chargeth us with piety towards God, and justice and charity to men, and temperance and chastity in reference to ourselves. Tillotson.

5. To accuse; to censure.

Speaking thus to you, I am so far from charging you as guilty in this matter, that I can sincerely say, I believe the exhortation wholly needless. Wake's Preparation for Death.

6. To accuse. It has with before the crime.

And his angels he charged with folly. Job, iv. 18.

7. To challenge.

The priest shall charge her by an oath. Numb. v. 19.

Thou canst not, cardinal, devise a name

So slight, unworthy, and ridiculous,

To charge me to an answer as the pope. Shakesp. K. John.

8. To command.

I may not suffer you to visit them;

The king hath strictly charg'd the contrary. Shakesp. R. III.

Why dost thou turn thy face? I charge thee, answer

To what I shall enquire. Dryden and Lee's OEdipus.

I charge thee, stand,

And tell thy name and business in the land. Dryden.

9. To fall upon; to attack; to make an onset.

With his prepared sword he charges home

My unprovided body, lanc'd my arm. Shakesp. King Lear.

The Grecians rally, and their pow'rs unite;

With fury charge us, and renew the fight. Dryden.

Like your heroes of antiquity, he charges in iron, and seems to despise all ornament, but intrinsic merit. Granville.

10. To burden; to load.

Here's the smell of blood still; all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand. Oh! oh! oh! — What a sigh is there? the heart is sorely charged. Shakesp. Macbeth.

When often urg'd, unwilling to be great,

Your country calls you from your lov'd retreat,

And sends to senates, charg'd with common care,

Which none more shuns, and none can better bear. Dryden.

Like meat swallowed down for pleasure and greediness, which only charges the stomach, or fumes into the brain. Temple.

A fault in the ordinary method of education, is the charging of childrens memories with rules and precepts. Locke.

11. To fill.

It is pity the obelisks in Rome had not been charged with several parts of the Egyptian histories, instead of hieroglyphicks. Addison on Italy.

12. To load a gun with powder and bullets.

CHARGE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Care; trust; custody.

One of the Turks laid down letters upon a stone, saying, that in them was contained that they had in charge.

Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

A hard division, when the harmless sheep

Must leave their lambs to hungry wolves in charge. Fairfax.

CHASE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Hunting; pursuit of any thing as game.

Whilst he was hast'ning, in the chase, it seems,

Of this fair couple, meets he on the way

The father of this seeming lady. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

There is no chase more pleasant, methinks, than to drive a thought, by good conduct, from one end of the world to another, and never to lose sight of it till it fall into eternity.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. Fitness to be hunted, appropriation to chase or sport.

Concerning the beasts of chase, whereof the buck is the first, he is called the first year a fawn. Shakesp. Love's L. Lost.

A maid I am, and of thy virgin train;

Oh! let me still that spotless name retain,

Frequent the forests, thy chaste will obey,

And only make the beasts of chase my prey.

Dryden.

3. Pursuit of an enemy, or of something noxious.

The admiral, with such ships only as could suddenly be put in readiness, made forth towards them; insomuch as of one hundred ships, there came scarce thirty to work: howbeit, with them, and such as came daily in, we set upon them, and gave them chase.

Bacon.

One day, upon the sudden, he sallied out upon them with certain troops of horsemen, with such violence, that, at the first onset, he overthrew them, and, having them in chase, did speedy execution.

Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

They seek that joy, which us'd to glow,

Expanded on the hero's face;

When the thick squadrons press the foe,

And William led the glorious chase.

Prior.

She, seeing the towering of her pursued chase, went circling about, rising so with the less sense of rising.

Sidney, b. ii.

Hold, Warwick: seek thee out some other chase,

For I myself must put this deer to death. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Honour's the noblest chase; pursue that game,

And recompence the loss of love with fame.

Granville.

7. Open ground stored with such beasts as are hunted.

A receptacle for deer and game, of a middle nature between a forest and a park; being commonly less than a forest, and not endued with so many liberties; and yet of a larger compass, and stored with greater diversity of game than a park. A chase differs from a forest in this, because it may be in the hands of a subject, which a forest, in its proper nature, cannot; and from a park, in that it is not inclosed, and hath not only a larger compass, and more store of game, but likewise more keepers and overseers.

Cowel.

He and his lady both are at the lodge,

Upon the northside of this pleasant chase. Shakesp. Tit. And.

8. The CHASE of a gun, is the whole bore or length of a piece, taken within side.

Mean time the Belgians tack upon our rear,

And raking chase-guns through our stern they send. Dryden.

CHA'SER. n. f. [from chase.] Hunter; pursuer; driver.

Then began

A stop i' th' chaser, a retire; anon

A rout, confusion thick.

Shakesp. Cymbeline.

So fast he flies, that his reviewing eye

Has lost the chasers, and his ear the cry.

Denham.

Stretch'd on the lawn, his second hope survey,

At once the chaser, and at once the prey.

Lo Rufus tugging at the deadly dart,

Bleeds in the forest like a wounded hart.

Pope.

CHASM. n. f. [χασμα.]

1. A breach unclosed; a cleft; a gape; an opening.

He must avenge the world, and give it peace.

Prior.

2. To reduce to order, or obedience.

Hie thee hither,

That I may pour my spirits in thine ear,

And chastise, with the valour of my tongue,

All that impedes thee.

Know, Sir, that I

Will not wait pinion'd at your master's court,

Nor once be chastis'd with the sober eye

Of dull Octavia.

Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

The gay social sense

By decency chastis'd.

Thomson.

CHASTISEMENT. n. f. [chastiment, Fr.] Correction; punishment. These words are all commonly, though not always, used of domestick or parental punishment.

Shall I so much dishonour my fair stars,

On equal terms to give him chastisement? Shakesp. R. II.

He held the chastisement of one which molested the see of Rome, pleasing to God.

Raleigh's Essays.

For seven years what can a child be guilty of, but lying, or ill-natur'd tricks; the repeated commission of which shall bring him to the chastisement of the rod.

Locke.

He receives a fit of sickness as the kind chastisement and discipline of his heavenly father, to wean his affections from the world.

Bentley.

CHA'STITY. n. f. [castitas, Lat.]

1. Purity of the body.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow,

To force a spotless virgin's chastity? Shakesp. Henry VI.

Chastity is either abstinence or continence: abstinence is that of virgins or widows; continence of married persons: chaste marriages are honourable and pleasing to God.

Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

Ev'n here where frozen chastity retires,

Love finds an altar for forbidden fires.

Pope.

2. Freedom from obscenity.

There is not chastity enough in language,

Without offence to utter them. Sh. Much ado about Nothing.

3. Freedom from bad mixture of any kind.

CHASTISER. n. f. [from chastise.] The person that chastises; a punisher; a corrector.

CHA'STLY. adv. [from chaste.] Without incontinence; purely; without contamination.

You should not pass here: no, though it were as virtuous to lie as to live chastely.

Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Make first a song of joy and love,

Which chastely flame in royal eyes.

Wotton.

Succession of a long descent,
Which chastly in the channels ran,
And from our demi-gods began.

Dryden.

CHA'STNESS. n. f. [from chaste.] Chastity; purity.

To CHAT. v. n. [from caqueter, Fr. Skinner; perhaps from a-chat, purchase or cheapening, on account of the prate naturally produced in a bargain; or only, as it is most likely, contracted from chatter.] To prate; to talk idly; to prattle; to cackle; to chatter; to converse at ease.

Thus chatten the people in their steads,
Ylike as a monster of many heads.

Spenser's Pastorals.

Because that I familiarly sometimes,
Do use you for my fool, and chat with you,
Your sauciness will jest upon my love.

Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors.

All tongues speak of him, and the bleared fights
Are spectacled to see him. Your prattling nurse
Into a rapture lets her baby cry,
While she chats him.

Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

The shepherds on the lawn
Sat simply chatting in a rustick row.

Milton.

With much goodwill the motion was embrac'd,
To chat a while on their adventures pass'd.

Dryden.

CHAT. n. f. [from the verb.] Idle talk; prate; flight or negligent tattle.

Lords that can prate
As amply and unnecessarily,
As this Gonzalo, I myself would make
A chough of as deep chat.

Shakespeare. Tempest.

The time between before the fire they sat,
And shorten'd the delay by pleasing chat.
The least is no inconsiderable good, but such as he confesses is far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine, or the idle chat of a smoking club.

Locke.

Snuff, or the fan, supplies each pause of chat,
With fingering, laughing, ogling, and all that.

Pope.

CHAT. n. f. The keys of trees are called chats, as ash chats.

CHA'TELLANY. n. f. [châtelanie, Fr.] The district under the dominion of a castle.

Here are about twenty towns and forts of great importance, with their chatellanies and dependencies.

Dryden.

CHA'TTEL. n. f. [See CATTLE.] Any moveable possession: a term now scarce used but in forms of law.

Nay, look not big, nor stamp, nor stare, nor fret;

I will be master of what is mine own;

She is my goods, my chattels.

Shakespeare. Taming of the Shrew.

Honour's a lease for lives to come,
And cannot be extended from
The legal tenant: 'tis a chattle

Not to be forfeited in battle.

Hudibras, p. i. c. iii.

To CHA'TTER. v. n. [caqueter, Fr.]

1. To make a noise as a pie, or other unharmonious bird.

Nightingales seldom sing, the pie still chattereth.

Sidney.

So doth the cuckow, when the mavis sings,

Begin his witless note apace to chatter.

Spenser's Sonnets.

There was a crow sat chattering upon the back of a sheep;
Well, sirrah, says the sheep, you durst not have done this to a dog.

L'Estrange.

Your birds of knowledge, that in dusky air
Chatter futurity.

Dryden and Lee's OEdipus.

2. To make a noise by collision of the teeth.

Stood Theodore surpriz'd in deadly fright,

With chat'ring teeth, and bristling hair upright.

Dryden.

Dip but your toes into cold water,
Their correspondent teeth will chatter.

Prior.

3. To talk idly or carelessly.

Suffer no hour to pass away in a lazy idleness, an impertinent chattering, or useless trifles.

Watts's Logick.

CHA'TTER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Noise like that of a pie or monkey.

The mimick ape began his chatter,

How evil tongues his life bespatter.

Swift.

2. Idle prate.

CHA'TTERER. n. f. [from chatter.] An idle talker; a pratler.

CHA'TWOOD. n. f. Little sticks; fuel.

CHA'VENDER. n. f. [Chevesne, Fr.] The chub; a fish.

These are a choice bait for the chub, or chavender, or indeed any great fish.

Walton's Angler.

CHAUMONTE'LLIE. n. f. [Fr.] A sort of pear; which see.

To CHAW. v. a. [kawen, Germ.] To champ between the teeth; to masticate; to chew.

I home returning, fraught with foul despoight,

And chawing vengeance all the way I went.

Fairy Q. b. ii.

They come to us, but us love draws;

He swallows us, and never chaws;

He is the tyrant pike, and we the fry.

Donne.

Whether he found any use of chawing little sponges, dipt in oil, in his mouth, when he was perfectly under water, and at a distance from his engine.

Boyle.

The man who laugh but once to see an ass

Mumbling to make the cross-grain'd thistles pass,

Might laugh again, to see a jury chaw

The prickles of unpalatable law.

Dryden.

CHAW. n. f. [from the verb.] The chap; the upper or under part of a beast's mouth.

I will turn thee back, and put hocks into thy claws, and will bring thee forth and all thine army.

Ezek. xxxviii. 4.

CHA'WDRON. n. f. Entrails.

Add thereto a tyger's chawdron,

For the ingredients of our cauldron.

Shakespeare. Macbeth.

CHEAP. adj. [ceapan, Sax. koopēn, Dutch, to buy.]

1. To be had at a low rate; purchased for a small price.

Where there are a great many sellers to a few buyers, there the thing to be sold will be cheap. On the other side, raise up a great many buyers for a few sellers, and the same thing will immediately turn dear.

Locke.

2. Of small value; easy to be had; not respected.

The goodness, that is cheap in beauty, makes

Beauty brief in goodness.

Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.

Had I so lavish of my presence been,

So common hackney'd in the eyes of men,

So stale and cheap to vulgar company.

Shakespeare. Henry IV.

He that is too much in any thing, so that he giveth another occasion of society, maketh himself cheap.

Bacon.

May your sick fame still languish till it die,

And you grow cheap in every subject's eye.

Dryden.

The usual titles of distinction, which belong to us, are turned into terms of derision and reproach, and every way is taken by profane men, towards rendering us cheap and contemptible.

Atterbury.

CHEAP. n. f. [chepeing is an old word for market; whence East-cheap, Cheapside.] Market; purchase; bargain; as good cheap;
[a bon marche, Fr.]

The same wine that comes out of Candia, which we pay so dear for now a days, in that good world was very good cheap.

Sidney, b. ii.

It is many a man's case to tire himself out with hunting after that abroad, which he carries about him all the while, and may have it better cheap at home.

L'Estrange.

Some few insulting cowards, who love to vapour good cheap, may trample on those who give least resistance.

Decay of Piety.

To CHE'APEN. v. a. [ceapan, Sax. to buy.]

1. To attempt to purchase; to bid for any thing; to ask the price of any commodity.

Rich she shall be, that's certain; wise, or I'll none; virtuous, or I'll never cheapen her; fair, or I'll never look on her.

Shakespeare. Much ado about Nothing.

The first he cheapened was a Jupiter, which would have come at a very easy rate.

L'Estrange.

So in a morning, without bodice,

Slept sometimes out to Mrs. Thody's,

To cheapen tea.

Prior.

To shops in crouds the daggled females fly,

Pretend to cheapen goods, but nothing buy.

Swift.

2. To lessen value.

My hopes pursue a brighter diadem.

Can any brighter than the Roman be?

I find my profer'd love has cheapen'd me.

Dryden. Tyrrel. Love.

CHE'APLY. adv. [from cheap.] At a small price; at a low rate.

By these I see

So great a day as this is cheaply bought.

Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Blood, rapines, massacres, were cheaply bought,

So mighty recompence your beauty brought.

Dryden.

CHE'APNESS. n. f. [from cheap.] Lowness of price.

Ancient statutes incite merchant strangers to bring in commodities; having for end cheapness.

Bacon's Henry VII.

The discredit which is grown upon this kingdom, has been the great discouragement to other nations to transplant themselves hither, and prevailed farther than all the invitations which the cheapness and plenty of the country has made them.

Temple.

CHEAR. See CHEER.

To CHEAT. v. a. [of uncertain derivation; probably from acheter, Fr. to purchase, alluding to the tricks used in making bargains. See the noun.]

1. To defraud; to impose upon; to trick. It is used commonly of low cunning.

It is a dangerous commerce, where an honest man is sure at first of being cheated; and he recovers not his losses, but by learning to cheat others.

Dryden.

There are a sort of people who find that the most effectual way to cheat the people, is always to pretend to infallible cures.

Tillotson, Preface.

2. It has of before the thing taken away by fraud.

I that am curtail'd by this fair proportion,

Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,

Deform'd, unfinish'd.

Shakespeare. Richard III.

CHEAT. n. f. [from the verb. Some think abbreviated from escheat, because many fraudulent measures being taken by the lords of manours in procuring eschcats, cheat the abridgment was brought to convey a bad meaning.]

1. A fraud; a trick; an imposture.

The pretence of publick good is a cheat that will ever pass, though so abused by ill men, that I wonder the good do not grow ashamed to use it.

Temple.

C H E

Emp'rick politicians use deceit,
Hide what they give, and cure but by a cheat. Dryden.
When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat;
Yet, fool'd with hope, men favour the deceit.
Trust on, and think tomorrow will repay;
Tomorrow's falser than the former day;
Lyes worse; and while it says, we shall be blest,
With some new joys cuts off what we possess. Dryden.

2. A person guilty of fraud.
Diffimulation can be no further useful than it is concealed;
for as much as no man will trust a known cheat. South.

Like that notorious cheat, vast sums I give,
Only that you may keep me while I live. Dryden's Cleomenes.
CHE'ATER. n. f. [from cheat.] One that practises fraud.

I will be cheater to them both, and they shall be exchequers to me. [It is here for eschearer.] Shakesp. M.W. of W.

They say this town is full of couzenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye;
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin. Shakesp. Comedy of Err.
He is no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheater i' faith.

Cheater, call you him? I will bar no honest man my house, nor no cheater. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.

All sorts of injurious persons, the sacrilegious, the detainers of tithes, cheaters of mens inheritances, false witnesses and accusers. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

TO CHECK. v. a. [from the French echecs, chess; from whence we use, at that game, the term checkmate, when we stop our adversary from carrying on his play any farther.]

1. To repress; to curb.
Reserve thy state; with better judgment check
This hideous rashness. Shakesp. K. Lear.
How fumes may be sown and raised, how they may be spread and multiplied, and how they may be checked and laid dead.
Bacon's Essays.

I hate when vice can bolt her arguments,
And virtue has no tongue to check her pride. Milton.
He who sat at a table, richly and deliciously furnished, but with a sword hanging over his head by one single thread or hair, surely had enough to check his appetite. South.

2. To reprove; to chide.
Richard, with his eye brimful of tears,
Then check'd and rated by Northumberland,
Did speak these words, now prov'd a prophecy. Shakesp.
His fault is much, and the good king his master
Will check him for't. Shakesp. King Lear.

3. To compare a bank note or other bill, with the correspondent cipher.

4. To control by a counter reckoning.
TO CHECK. v. n.

1. To stop; to make a stop; with at.
With what wing the stanyel checks at it. Shakesp.
He must observe their mood on whom he jests,
The quality of the persons, and the time;
And, like the haggard, check at every feather
That comes before his eye. Shakesp. Hamlet.
The mind, once jaded by an attempt above its power, either is disabled for the future, or else checks at any vigorous undertaking ever after. Locke.

2. To clash; to interfere.
If love check once with business, it troubleth mens fortunes.
Bacon's Essays.

I'll avoid his presence;
It checks too strong upon me. Dryden's All for Love.
CHECK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Repressure; stop; rebuff.
I do know, the state,
However this may gall him with some check,
Cannot with safety cast him. Shakesp. Othello.

Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway,
Meeting the check of such another day. Shakesp. Henry IV.
We see, also, that kings that have been fortunate conquerors in their first years, must have some check or arrest in their fortunes. Bacon's Essay.

God hath of late years manifested himself in a very dreadful manner, as if it were on purpose to give a check to this insolent impiety. Tillotson.

It was this viceroy's zeal, which gave a remarkable check to the first progress of christianity. Addison. Freeholder, N° 32.

God put it into the heart of one of our princes, to give a check to that sacrilege, which had been but too much winked at. Atterbury.

The great struggle with his passions is in the first check.
Rogers.

2. Restraint; curb; government.
They who come to maintain their own breach of faith, the check of their consciences much breaketh their spirit. Hayw.

The impetuosity of the new officer's nature needed some restraint and check, for some time, to his immoderate pretences and appetite of power. Clarendon.

Some free from rhyme or reason, rule or check,
Break Priscian's head, and Pegasus's neck. Pope.

C H E

While such men are in trust, who have no check from within, nor any views but towards their interest. Swift.

3. A reproof; a slight.
Oh! this life
Is nobler than attending for a check;
Richer than doing nothing for a bauble. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

4. A dislike; a sudden disgust; something that stops the progress.

Say I should wed her, would not my wife subjects
Take check, and think it strange? perhaps revolt? Dryden.

5. In falconry, is when a hawk forsakes her proper game to follow rooks, pies, or other birds that cross her in her flight. Chambers.

A young woman is a hawk upon her wings; and if she be handsome, she is the more subject to go out on check. Suckling.

When whistled from the fist,
Some falcon stoops at what her eye design'd,
And with her eagerness, the quarry miss'd,
Streight flies at check, and clips it down the wind. Dryden.

6. The person checking; the cause of restraint; a stop.
He was unhappily too much used as a check upon the lord Coventry. Clarendon.

A satyrical poet is the check of the laymen on bad priests.
Dryden's Fables, Preface.

The letters have the natural production by several checks or stops, or, as they are usually called, articulations of the breath or voice. Holder's Elements of Speech.

7. The correspondent cipher of a bank bill.

8. A term used in the game of chess, when one party obliges the other either to move or guard his king.

9. Clerk of the CHECK, in the king's household, has the check and controulment of the yeomen of the guard, and all the ushers belonging to the royal family.

10. Clerk of the CHECK, in the king's navy at Plymouth, is also the name of an officer invested with like powers. Chambers.

TO CHE'CKER. } v. a. [from echecs, chess, Fr.] To variegate or
TO CHE'QUER. } diversify, in the manner of a chess-board, with alternate colours, or with darker and brighter parts.

The grey-ey'd morn smiles on the frowning night,
Check'ring the eastern clouds with streaks of light.
Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind,
And make a chequer'd shadow on the ground. Shakesp.
As the snake roll'd in the flow'ry bank,
With shining checker'd slough doth sting a child,
That for the beauty thinks it excellent. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

The wealthy spring yet never bore
That sweet, nor dainty flower,
That damask'd not the checker'd floor
Of Cynthia's summer bower. Drayton's Cynthia.

Many a youth and many a maid,
Dancing in the checker'd shade. Milton.

In the chess-board, the use of each chess-man is determined only within that chequered piece of wood. Locke.

In our present condition, which is a middle state, our minds are, as it were, chequered with truth and falsehood. Addison.

The ocean intermixing with the land, so as to checker it into earth and water. Woodward's Natural History.

Here waving groves a checker'd scene display,
And part admit, and part exclude the day. Pope.

CHE'CKER. } Work varied alternately as to its colours or
CHECKER-WORK. } materials.

Nets of checker-work and wreaths of chain-work for the chapeters which were upon the top of the pillars. 1 Kings, vii. 17.

CHE'CKMATE. n. f. [echec et mat, Fr.] The movement on the chess-board, that kills the opposite men, or hinders them from moving.

Love they him called, that gave me the checkmate,
But better might they have behote him hate. Spenser.

CHE'CKROLL. n. f. [from check and roll.] A roll or book, containing the names of such as are attendants on, and in pay to great personages, as their household servants. It is otherwise called the chequer-roll. Cowel.

Not daring to extend this law further than to the king's servants in checkroll, lest it should have been too harsh to the gentlemen and other commons of the kingdom. Bacon's Hen. VII.

CHEEK. n. f. [ceac, Saxon.]

1. The side of the face below the eye.
And now and then an ample tear trill'd down
Her delicate cheek. Shakesp. King Lear.

Her beauty hangs upon the cheek of night,
Like a rich jewel in an Æthiop's ear. Shakesp. Rom. and Ju.

I shall survey and spy
Death in thy cheeks, and darkness in thy eye. Donne.

Daughter of the rose, whose cheeks unite
The diff'ring titles of the red and white,
Who heaven's alternate beauty well display
The blush of morning and the milky way. Dryden.

2. A general name among mechanicks for almost all those pieces of their machines and instruments that are double, and perfectly alike. Chambers.

CHEEK-

CHEEKBONE. n. f. [from cheek and bone.]
I cut afterwards into the tumour, and felt the slug: it lay partly under the os jugale, or cheekbone. Weseman.

CHEEKTOOTH. n. f. [from cheek and tooth.] The hinder tooth or tusk.
He hath the cheekteeth of a great lion. Joel, i. 6.

CHEER. n. f. [chere, Fr. entertainment; cara, Sp. the countenance. It seems to have, in English, some relation to both these senses.]

- Entertainment; provisions served at a feast.
But though my cates be mean, take them in good part;
Better cheer you may have, but not with better heart.
Shakesp. Comedy of Errors.
His will was never determined to any pursuit of good cheer, poignant sauces, and delicious wines. Locke.
- Invitation to gaiety.
My royal lord,
You do not give the cheer; the feast is sold
That is not often vouched, while 'tis making 'Tis given with welcome. Shakesp. Macbeth.
- Gaiety; jollity.
I have not that alacrity of spirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have. Shakesp. R. III.
- Air of the countenance.
Right faithful true he was in deed and word,
But of his cheer did seem too solemn sad.
Nothing did he dread, but ever was ydrad. Stens. Fairy Q.
Which publick death, receiv'd with such a cheer,
As not a sigh, a look, a shrink bewrays
The least felt touch of a degenerate fear,
Gave life to envy, to his courage praise. Daniel's Civil W.
He ended; and his words their drooping cheer
Enlighten'd, and their languish'd hope reviv'd. Milton.
At length appear
Her grisly brethren stretch'd upon the bier:
Pale at the sudden sight, she chang'd her cheer.
Dryden's Fables.
- Perhaps temper of mind in general.
Then were they all of good cheer, and they also took some meat. Acts, xxvii. 36.

TO CHEER. v. a. [from the noun.]

- To incite; to encourage; to inspirit.
He complain'd in vain, that he was betrayed: yet, for all that, he was nothing discouraged, but cheered up the footmen.
Knolles's History of the Turks.
He cheer'd the dogs to follow her who fled,
And vow'd revenge on her devoted head. Dryden's Fables.
- To comfort; to console.
I died, ere I could lend thee aid;
But cheer thy heart, and be thou not dismay'd.
Shakesp. Richard III.
Displeas'd at what, not suffering, they had seen,
They went to cheer the faction of the green. Dryden.
- To gladden.
Hark! a glad voice the lonely desert cheers;
Prepare the way, a god, a god appears. Pope's Messiah.
The sacred sun, above the waters rais'd,
Thro' heaven's eternal brazen portals blaz'd,
And wide o'er earth diffus'd his cheering ray. Pope.

TO CHEER. v. n. To grow gay or gladsome.
At sight of thee my gloomy soul cheers up;
My hopes revive, and gladness dawns within me.
A. Philips's Distress Mother.

CHEERER. n. f. [from to cheer.] Gladner; giver of gaiety.
To thee alone be praise,
From whom our joy descends,
Thou cheerer of our days. Wotton.
Angling was, after tedious study, a rest to his mind, a cheerer of his spirits, a diverter of sadness, a calmer of unquiet thoughts. Walton's Angler.
Saffron is the safest and most simple cordial, the greatest reviver of the heart, and cheerer of the spirits. Temple.
Prime cheerer, light,
Of all material beings first and best. Thomson's Summer.

CHEERFUL. adj. [from cheer and full.]

- Gay; full of life; full of mirth.
The cheerful birds of sundry kind
Do chaunt sweet music to delight his mind. Fairy Q. b. ii.

A merry heart maketh a cheerful countenance: but by sorrow of the heart the spirit is broken. Prov. xv. 13.

CHEERFULLY. adv. [from cheerful.] Without dejection; with willingness; with gaiety.
Pluck up thy spirits, look cheerfully upon me.
Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.
To their known stations cheerfully they go. Dryden.
Doctrine is that which must prepare men for discipline; and men never go on so cheerfully, as when they see where they go.
May the man
That cheerfully recounts the female's praise,
Find equal love, and love's untainted sweets
Enjoy with honour. Philips.

CHEERFULNESS. n. f. [from cheerful.]

- Freedom from dejection; alacrity.
With what resolution and cheerfulness, with what courage and patience did vast numbers of all sorts of people, in the first ages of christianity, encounter all the rage and malice of the world, and embrace torments and death? Tillotson.
- Freedom from gloominess.
I remember, then I marvelled to see her receive my commandments with sighs, and yet do them with cheerfulness.
Sidney, b. ii.

CHEERLESS. adj. [from cheer.] Without gaiety, comfort, or gladness.
For since mine eye your joyous sight did miss,
My cheerful day is turn'd to cheerless night. Fairy Q. b. i.
On a bank, beside a willow,
Heav'n her cov'ring, earth her pillow,
Sad Amynta sigh'd alone,
From the cheerless dawn of morning
Till the dews of night returning. Dryden.
Cheerless towns, far distant, never blest'd. Thomson.

CHEERLY. adj. [from cheer.]

- Gay; cheerful.
They are useful to mankind, in affording them convenient situations of houses and villages, reflecting the benign and cherishing sun beams, and so rendering their habitations both more comfortable and more cheerly in winter. Ray on Creation.
Under heavy arms the youth of Rome
Their long laborious marches overcome;
Cheerly their tedious travels undergo. Dryden's Virgil.
- Not gloomy.
CHEERLY. adv. [from cheer.] Cheerfully.
In God's name, cheerly on, courageous friends,
To reap the harvest of perpetual peace,
By this one bloody trial of sharp war. Shakesp. Richard III.
Oft listening how the hounds and horn
Cheerly rouse the slumb'ring morn. Milton.

CHEERY. adj. [from cheer.] Gay; sprightly; having the power to make gay.
Come, let us hie, and quaff a cheery bowl;
Let cider new wash sorrow from thy soul. Gay's Pastorals.

CHEESE. n. f. [caseus, Lat. cýre, Saxon.] A kind of food made by pressing the curd of coagulated milk, and suffering the mass to dry.
I will rather trust a Fleming with my butter, parson Hugh the Welchman with my cheese, than my wife with herself.
Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

CHEESECAKE. n. f. [from cheese and cake.] A cake made of soft curds, sugar and butter.
Effeminate he sat, and quiet;
Strange product of a *cheese*cake diet. Prior.
Where many a man at variance with his wife,
With soft'ning mead and *cheese*cake ends the strife.
King's Art of Cookery.

CHEESEMONGER. n. f. [from cheese and monger.] One who deals in cheese.
A true owl of London,
That gives out he is undone,
Being a cheesemonger,
By trusting. Ben Johnson's Owls.

CHEESEPRESS. n. f. [from cheese and press.] The press in which the curds are pressed.
The cleanly *cheese*press she could never turn,
Her aukward fist did ne'er employ the churn. Gay's Past.

CHEESEVAT. n. f. [from cheese and vat.] The wooden case in which the curds are confined when they are pressed into cheese.
His sense occasions the careless rustick to judge the sun no bigger than a cheesevat. Glanville's Scepssis, c. 10.

CHEESY. adj. [from cheese.] Having the nature or form of cheese.
Acids mixed with them precipitate a tophaceous chalky matter, but not a cheesy substance. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CHE'LY. n. f. [chela, Lat.] The claw of a shell fish.
It happeneth often, I confess, that a lobster hath the chely, or great claw, of one side longer than the other.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 5.

CHEMISTRY. See CHYMISTRY.

CHEQUER. See CHECKER.

TO CHE'RISH. v. a. [cherir, Fr.] To support and forward with encouragement, help, and protection; to shelter; to nurse up.
Whenever Buckingham doth turn his hate
Upon your grace, and not with duteous love
Doth cherish you and yours, God punish me
With hate in those where I expect most love. Shak. R. III.
I would I were thy bird.
Sweet, so would I;
But I should kill thee with too much cherishing.
Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.
What doth cherish weeds but gentle air? Shakesp. H. VI.
Magistrates have always thought themselves concerned to cherish religion, and to maintain in the minds of men the belief of a God and another life. Tillotson.
But

But old god Saturn, which doth all devour,
Doth cherish her, and still augments her might. Davies.
He that knowingly commits an ill, has the upbraidings of his own conscience; those who act by error, have its cherish- ings and encouragements to confirm and animate them.

Decay of Piety.

CHE'RISHER. n. f. [from cherish.] An encourager; a supporter.

One of their greatest praises it is to be the maintainers and cherishers of a regular devotion, a reverend worship, a true and decent piety. Sprat's Serm.

CHE'RISHMENT. n. f. [from cherish.] Encouragement; support; comfort. It is now obsolete.

The one lives, her age's ornament,
That with rich bounty and dear cherishment,
Supports the praise of noble poeſie.

Spenser's Tears of the Muses.

CHE'RRY. n. f. } [cerise, Fr. cerasus, Lat.]
CHE'RRY-TREE. n. f. }

The tree hath large shining leaves: the fruit grows on long pedicles, and is roundish or heart-shaped: the stone is short, tumid, and roundish. The species are; 1. The common red or garden cherry. 2. Large Spanish cherry.
3. The red heart cherry. 4. The white heart cherry.
5. The bleeding heart cherry. 6. The black heart cherry.
7. The May cherry. 8. The black cherry, or mazard.
9. The archduke cherry. 10. The yellow Spanish cherry.
11. The Flanders cluster cherry. 12. The carnation cherry.
13. The large black cherry. 14. The bird cherry. 15. The red bird or Cornish cherry. 16. The largest double flowered cherry. 17. The double flowered cherry. 18. The common wild cherry. 19. The wild northern English cherry, with late ripe fruit. 20. The shock or perfumed cherry.
21. The cherrytree with striped leaves. And many other sorts of cherries; as the amber cherry, lukeward, corone, Gascoigne, and the morello; which is chiefly planted for preserving.

This fruit was brought out of Pontus at the time of the Mithridatick victory, by Lucullus, in the year of Rome 680; and was brought into Britain about 120 years afterwards, which was An. Dom. 55; and was soon after spread through most parts of Europe. It is generally esteemed for its ear-liness, being of the first tree-fruits that appears to welcome in the fruit-season. Miller.

Some devils ask but the parings of one's nail, a pin, a nut,
a cherry stone; but she, more covetous, would have a chain.

Shakeſp. Com. of Errors.

July I would have drawn in a jacket of light-yellow eating cherries, with his face and bosom sun-burnt. Peacham.

All this done by a little spark of life, which, in its first appearance, might be inclosed in the hollow of a cherry stone.

Hale's Orig. of Mankind.

All the ideas of all the sensible qualities of a cherry come into my mind by sensation. Locke.

CHE'RRY. adj. [from the substantive.] Resembling a cherry in colour.

Shore's wife hath a pretty foot,

A cherry lip, a passing pleasing tongue. Shakeſp. Rich. III.

CHE'RRY BAY. See LAUREL.

which they throw cherry stones into a small hole.

What! man, 'tis not for gravity to play at cherrypit.

Shakeſp. Twelfth Night.

CHERSONE'SE. n. f. [χερσώνησος.] A peninsula; a tract of land almost surrounded by the sea, but joined to the continent by a narrow neck or isthmus.

CHE'RT. n. f. [from quartz, Germ.] A kind of flint.

Flint is most commonly found in form of nodules; but 'tis sometimes found in thin strata, when 'tis called chert. Woodw.

CHE'RUB. n. f. [כרוב plur. כרובים.] It is sometimes written in the plural, improperly, cherubims.]

A celestial spirit, which, in the hierarchy, is placed next in order to the seraphim. All the several descriptions which the Scripture gives us of cherubin, differ from one another; as they are described in the shapes of men, eagles, oxen, lions, and in a composition of all these figures put together. The hieroglyphical representations in the embroidery upon the curtains of the Tabernacle, were called by Moses, Exod. xxvi. 1.
cherubim of cunning work. Calmet.

The roof o' th' chamber

With gold cherubims is fretted. Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

Heav'n's cherubin hors'd,

Upon the flightless coursers of the air,

Shall blow the horrid deed in ev'ry eye,

That tears shall drown the wind.

Shakeſp. Macbeth.

Some cherub finishes what you begun,

And to a miracle improves a tune.

Prior.

CHE'RUBICK. adj. [from cherub.] Angelick; relating to the cherubim.

Thy words

Attentive, and with more delighted ear,
Divine instructor! I have heard, than when
Cherubick songs by night from neighb'ring hills
Aerial musick send. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v. l. 547.

And on the east side of the garden place,
Where entrance up from Eden easiest climbs,
Cherubick watch. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 120.

CHE'RUBIN. adj. [from cherub.] Angelical.

This fell whore of thine,

Hath in her more destruction than thy sword,

For all her cherubin look. Shakeſp. Timon.

CHE'RVIL. n. f. [chærophyllum, Lat.] It is an umbelliferous plant, whose leaves are divided into many segments: the petals of the flower are bifid and heart-shaped; and each flower is succeeded by two long seeds, not furrowed. The species are;
1. Garden chervil. 2. Wild perennial chervil, or cow-weed.
The first of these species is cultivated for fallads. Miller.

To CHE'RUP. v. n. [from cheer; perhaps from cheer up; corrupted to cherip.] To chirp; to use a cheerful voice.

The birds

Frame to thy song their cheerful cheriping;

Or hold their peace for shame of thy sweet lays. Spens. Past.

CHE'SLIP. n. f. A small vermin, that lies under stones or tiles. Skinner.

CHESS. n. f. [echec, Fr.] A nice and abstruse game, in which two sets of men are moved in opposition to each other.

This game the Persian magi did invent,
The force of Eastern wisdom to express;
From thence to busy Europeans sent,
And styl'd by modern Lombards pensive chefs. Denham.

So have I seen a king on chefs,
(His rooks and knights withdrawn,
His queen and bishops in distress)
Shifting about, grow less and less,
With here and there a pawn. Dryden.

CHE'SS-APPLE. n. f. See WILD SERVICES, of which it is a species.

CHE'SS-BOARD. n. f. [from chefs and board.] The board or table on which the game of chess is plaid.

And cards are dealt, and chessboards brought;

To ease the pain of coward thought. Prior.

CHE'SS-MAN. n. f. [from chefs and man.] A puppet for chess.

A company of chessmen, standing on the same squares of the chessboard where we left them: we say, they are all in the same place, or unmoved. Locke.

CHE'SS-PLAYER. n. f. [from chefs and player.] A gamester at chess.

Thus like a skilful chessplayer, by little and little, he draws out his men, and makes his pawns of use to his greater persons. Dryden on Dramatick Poesy.

CHE'SSOM.

The tender chessom and mellow earth is the best, being mere mould, between the two extremes of clay and sand; especially if it be not loomy and binding. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N°. 665.

CHEST. n. f. [cyrt, Sax. cista, Lat.]

1. A box of wood or other materials, in which things are laid up.

He will seek there, on my word: neither press, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places. Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

But more have been by avarice oppress,

And heaps of money crowded in the chest. Dryd. Juu. Sat.

2. A CHEST of Drawers. A case with boxes or drawers.

3. The trunk of the body, or cavity from the shoulders to the belly.

Such as have round faces, or broad chests, or shoulders, have seldom or never long necks. Brown's Vul. Err. b. vii. c. 14.

He describes another by the largeness of his chest, and breadth of his shoulders. Pope's Notes on the Iliad.

To CHEST. v. a. [from the noun.] To repose in a chest;
to hoard.

CHEST-FOUNDING. n. f. A disease in horses. It comes near to a pleurisy, or peripneumony, in a human body. Far. Dict.

chested, narrow-chested.

CHE'STER. See CASTOR.

CHE'STNUT. n. f.

CHE'STNUT-TREE. n. f. } [chastaigne, Fr. castanea, Lat.]

1. The tree hath katkins, which are placed at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree. The outer coat of the fruit is very rough, and has two or three nuts included in each husk or covering. This tree was formerly in greater plenty, as may be proved by the old buildings in London, which were, for the most part, of this timber; which is equal in value to the best oak, and, for many purposes, far exceeds it, particularly for making vessels for liquors; it having a property, when once thoroughly seasoned, to maintain its bulk constantly, and is not subject to shrink or swell, like other timber. Miller.

2. The fruit of the chestnut-tree.

A woman's tongue,

That gives not half so great a blow to th' ear,

As will a chestnut in a farmer's fire. Shakeſp. Tam. of the Shrew.

October has a basket of services, medlars and chestnuts, and fruits that ripen at the latter time. Peacham on Drawing.

3. The name of a brown colour.

His hair is of a good colour. —

—An excellent colour: your chestnut was ever the only colour.

Merab's long hair was glossy chestnut brown. Cowl. Dav.

CHE'TON. n. f. See PLUM, of which it is a species.

CHEVALIER. n. f. [chevalier, Fr.] A knight; a gallant strong man.

Renowned Talbot doth expect my aid;

And I am lowted by a traitor-villain,

And cannot help the noble chevalier. Shakesp. Hen. VI. p. 1.

CHEVAUX de Frise. n. f. [Fr. The singular Cheval de Frise is seldom used.] The Friesland horse, which is a piece of timber, larger or smaller, and traversed with wooden spikes, pointed with iron, five or six feet long; used in defending a passage, stopping a breach, or making a retrenchment to stop the cavalry. It is also called a turnpike, or tourniquet.

Chamb. rs.

CHE'VEN. n. f. [chevesne, Fr.] A river fish; the same with chub.

CHE'VERIL. n. f. [cheverau, Fr.] A kid; kidleather.

A sentence is but a cheveril glove to a good wit: how quickly the wrong side may be turned outward. Shakesp. Twelf. Night.

Which gifts the capacity

Of your soft cheveril conscience would receive,

If you might please to stretch it. Shakespeare's Henry VII.

O, here's a wit of cheveril, that stretches from an inch narrow to an ell broad. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

CHE'VISANCE. n. f. [chevisance, Fr.] Enterprize; atchievement; A word now not in use.

Fortune, the foe of famous chevisance,

Seldom, said Guyon, yields to virtue's aid,

But in her way throws mischief and mischance.

Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 9. stan. 8.

CHEVRON. n. f. [French.] One of the honourable ordinaries in heraldry. It represents two rafters of a house, set up as they ought to stand.

Harris.

To CHEW. v. a. [ceopyan, Sax. kauwen, Dutch. It is very frequently pronounced chaw, and perhaps properly.]

1. To grind with the teeth; to masticate.

If little faults, proceeding on distemper,

Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,

When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested, Appear before us. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Pacing through the forest,

Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy. Sh. As you like it.

This pious cheat, that never suck'd the blood,

Nor chew'd the flesh of lambs.

Dryden's Fables.

The vales

Descending gently, where the lowing herd

Chews verd'rous pasture.

Philips.

By chewing, solid aliment is divided into small parts: in a human body, there is no other instrument to perform this action but the teeth. By the action of chewing, the spittle and mucus are squeezed from the glands, and mixed with the aliment; which action, if it be long continued, will turn the aliment into a sort of chyle.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. To meditate; or ruminare in the thoughts.

While the fierce monk does at his trial stand,

He chews revenge, abjuring his offence:

Guile in his tongue, and murder in his hand,

He stabs his judge, to prove his innocence.

Prior.

3. To taste without swallowing.

Heav'n's in my mouth,

As if I did but only chew its name. Shakesp. Meas. for Meas.

Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested: that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not curiously; and some few to be read wholly, with diligence and attention.

Bacon, Essay 51.

To CHEW. v. n. To champ upon; to ruminate.

I will with patience hear, and find a time;

'Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this. Shak. Jul. Caf.

Inculcate the doctrine of disobedience, and then leave the multitude to chew upon't.

L'Estrange, Fab. 67.

Old politicians chew on wisdom past,

And blunder on in business to the last. Pope's Epist. 1. l. 244.

CHICANE. n. f. [chicane, Fr. derived by Menage from the Spanish word chico, little.]

1. The art of protracting a contest by petty objection and artifice.

The general part of the civil law concerns not the chicane of private cafes, but the affairs and intercourse of civilized nations, grounded upon the principles of reason. Locke on Educ.

His attornies have hardly one trick left; they are at an end of all their chicane.

Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

2. Artifice in general. This sense is only in familiar language.

Unwilling then in arms to meet,

He strove to lengthen the campaign,

And save his forces by chicane.

Prior.

To CHICANE. v. n. [chicaner, Fr.] To prolong a contest by tricks.

CHICA'NER. n. f. [chicaneur, Fr.] A petty sophister; a trifling disputant; a wrangler.

This is the only way to distinguish the two most different things I know in the world, a logical chicaner from a man of reason.

Locke on Human Understanding, S. 3.

CHICA'NERY. n. f. [chicanerie, Fr.] Sophistry; mean arts of wrangle.

His anger at his ill success, caused him to destroy the greatest part of these reports; and only to preserve such as discovered most of the chicanery and futility of the practice.

Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

CHICHES. n. f. See CHICKPEAS.

CHICHLING VETCH. n. f. [lathyrus, Lat.] The plants of this species produce abundance of flowers, which are very ornamental in basons or pots of flowers to place in chimnies, and other parts of large rooms. In Germany they are cultivated, and eaten as peas, though neither so tender nor well tasted.

Miller.

CHICK. n. f. } [cicen, Sax. kiecken, Dut.]

CHICKEN. n. f. }

1. The young of a bird, particularly of a hen, or small bird. All my pretty ones?

What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,

At one fell swoop!

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

For when the shell is broke, out comes a chick. Davies.

While it is a chick, and hath no spurs, nor cannot hurt, nor yet hath seen the like motion, yet he readily practiseth it.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Ev'n since she was a se'n-night old, they say,

Was chaste and humble to her dying day;

Nor chick, nor hen, was known to disobey. Dryd. Fables.

Having the notion that one laid the egg out of which the other was hatched, I have a clear idea of the relation of dam and chick.

Locke.

On rainy days alone I dine,

Upon a chick and pint of wine:

On rainy days I dine alone,

And pick my chicken to the bone.

Swift's Miscellanies.

2. A word of tendernefs.

My Ariel, chick,

This is thy charge.

Shakespeare's Tempest.

3. A term for a young girl.

Then, Chloe, still go on to prate

Of thirty-six and thirty-eight;

Pursue your trade of scandal-picking,

Your hints, that Stella is no chicken.

Swift.

CHI'CKENHEARTED. adj. [from chicken and heart.] Cowardly; timorous; fearful.

Now we set up for tilting in the pit,

Where 'tis agreed by bullies, chickenhearted,

To fright the ladies first, and then be parted. Prot. to Sp. Fr.

The CHI'CKENPOX. n. f. An exanthematous distemper, so called from its being of no very great danger.

CHI'CKLING. n. f. [from chick.] A small chicken.

CHI'CKPEAS. n. f. [from chick and pea.]

It hath a papilionaceous flower, succeeded by short swelling pods, like the inflated bladder of a fish: the seeds are shaped like a ram's head. It is seldom cultivated in England; where peas will do well, which are much preferable.

Miller.

CHI'CKWEED. n. f. [chick and weed.] The name of a plant.

Green mint, or chickweed, are common applications, and of good use, in all the hard swellings of the breast, occasioned by milk.

Wiseman of Tumours.

To CHIDE. v. a. preter. chid or chode, part. chid or chidden. [ciban, Sax.]

1. To reprove; to check; to correct with words: applied to persons.

Chide him for faults, and do it reverently,

When you perceive his blood inclin'd to mirth. Sh. Hen. VI.

If he do set

The very wings of reason to his heels,

And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove. Sh. Troil. & Cres.

Those, that do teach your babes,

Do it with gentle means, and easy tasks;

He might have chid me so: for, in good faith,

I am a child to chiding.

Shakespeare's Othello.

Scylla wept,

And chid her barking waves into attention.

Milton.

Above the waves as Neptune shew'd his face,

To chide the winds, and save the Trojan race.

Waller.

You look, as if yon stern philosopher

Had just now chid you.

Addison's Cato.

If any woman of better fashion in the parish happened to be absent from church, they were sure of a visit from him, to chide and to dine with her.

Swift.

2. To drive away with reproof.

Margaret my queen, and Clifford too,

Have chid me from the battle.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

3. To blame; to reproach: applied to things.

Winds murmur'd through the leaves your long delay,

And fountains, o'er the pebbles, chid your stay.

Dryden.

I chid the folly of my thoughtless haste;

For, the work perfected, the joy was past.

Prior.

To CHIDE, v. n.

1. To clamour; to scold.

2

What

What had he to do to chide at me. Shakesp. As you like it.

Next morn, betimes, the bride was missing:

The mother scream'd, the father chid,

Where can this idle wench be hid?

Swift.

2. To quarrel with.

The business of the state does him offense,

And he does chide with you.

Shakespeare's Othello.

3. To make a noise.

My duty,

As doth a rock against the chiding flood,

Should the approach of this wild river break,

And stand unshaken yours.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

CHIDER. n. f. [from chide.] A rebuker; a reprover.

Not her that chides, sir, at any hand, I pray.—

I love no chide s, sir.

Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

CHIEF. adj. [chef, the head, Fr.]

1. Principal; most eminent; above the rest in any respect.

These were the chief of the officers that were over Solomon's works.

1 Kings ix. 23.

The hand of the princes and rulers hath been chief in this trespass.

Ezra ix. 2.

Your country, chief in arms, abroad defend;

At home, with morals, arts, and laws amend.

Pope's Epist.

2. Eminent; extraordinary.

A froward man soweth strife, and a whisperer separateth chief friends

Proverbs xvi. 28.

3. Capital; of the first order; that to which other parts are inferior, or subordinate.

I came to have a good general view of the apostle's main purpose in writing the epistle, and the chief branches of his discourse wherein he prosecuted it.

Locke's Pref. to St. Paul's Ep.

4. It is used by some writers in the superlative degree; but, I think, improperly: the comparative is never found.

We beseech you, bend you to remain

Here in the cheer and comfort of our eye,

Our chiefest courtier, cousin, and our son.

Shakesp. Hamlet.

Doeg an Edomite, the chiefest of the herdmen.

1 Sa xxii. 7.

He sometimes denied admission to the chiefest officers of the army.

Clarendon, b. viii.

CHIEF. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A commander; a leader.

Is pain to them

Less pain, less to be fled? or thou than they

Less hardy to endure? courageous chief!

The first in flight from pain.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.

After or before were never known

Such chiefs; as each an army seem'd alone.

Dryden's Fab.

A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod;

An honest man's the noblest work of God.

Pope's Ess. on Man.

A prudent chief not always must display

His pow'rs in equal ranks, and fair array;

But with th' occasion and the place comply,

Conceal his force, may seem sometimes to fly.

Po. Ess. Crit.

2. In CHIEF, in law. In capite, without a superior lord.

All fums demandable, either for licence of alienation to be made of lands holden in chief, or for the pardon of any such alienation already made without licence, have been stayed in the way to the hanaper.

Bacon's Off. Alienations.

I shall be proud to hold my dependance on you in chief, as I do part of my small fortune in Wiltshire.

Dryd. Ded. to Cleom.

3. In Spenser it seems to signify somewhat like achievement; a mark of distinction.

Where be the nosegays that she dight for thee?

The coloured chaplets wrought with a chief,

The knottish rush-rings, and gilt rosemary.

Spens. Past.

4. In heraldry.

The chief is so called of the French word chef, the head or upper part: this possesses the upper third part of the escutcheon.

Peacham on Drawing.

CHIEFLESS. adj. [from chief.] Without a head; without a leader.

And chiefless armies doz'd out the campaign,

And navies yawn'd for orders on the main.

Dunciad, b. iv.

CHIEFLY. adv. [from chief.] Principally; eminently; more than common.

Any man who will seriously consider the nature of an epic poem, what actions it describes, and what persons they are chiefly whom it informs, will find it a work full of difficulty.

Dryden's Juven. Preface.

Those parts of the kingdom, where the number and estates of the dissenters chiefly lay.

Swift.

CHIEFRIE. n. f. [from chief.] A small rent paid to the lord Paramount.

They shall be well able to live upon those lands, to yield her majesty reasonable chiefrie; and also give a competent maintenance unto the garrisons.

Spenser's Ireland.

Would the reserved rent at this day be any more than a small chiefrie.

Swift.

CHIEFTAN. n. f. [from chief, n. f. captain.]

1. A leader; a commander.

That forc'd their chieftain, for his safety's sake,

(Their chieftain Humber named was aright)

Unto the mighty stream him to betake,

Where he an end of battle and of life did make.

Fairy Qu.

2. The head of a clan.

It broke, and absolutely subdued all the lords and chieftains of the Irishry.

Dowies on Ireland.

CHIEVANCE. n. f. [probably from achevance, Fr. purchase.] Traffick, in which money is extorted; as discount. Now obsolete.

There were good laws against usury, the bastard use of money; and against unlawful chievances and exchanges, which is bastard usury.

Bacon's Henry VII.

CHILBLAIN. n. f. [from chill, cold, and blain; so that Temple seems mistaken in his etymology, or has written it wrong to serve a purpose.] Sores made by frost.

I remembered the cure of chilblanes when I was a boy, (which may be called the children's gout) by burning at the fire

Temple.

CHILD. n. f. in the plural CHILDREN [cilb, Sax.]

1. An infant, or very young person.

In age, to wish for youth is full as vain;

As for a youth to turn a child again.

Denham.

We should no more be kinder to one child than to another, than we are tender of one eye more than of the other.

L'Estr.

The young lad must not be ventured abroad at eight or ten, for fear of what may happen to the tender child; though he then runs ten times less risque than at sixteen.

Locke.

The stroak of death is nothing: children endure it, and the greatest cowards find it no pain.

Waller's Prep for Death.

2. One in the line of filiation, opposed to the parent.

Where children have been exposed, or taken away young, and afterwards have approached to their parents presence, the parents, though they have not known them, have had a secret joy, or other alteration thereupon.

Bacon's Nat. Hist. N<sup>o</sup>. 239.

I shall see

The winged vengeance overtake such children.

So unexhausted her perfections were,

That for more children, she had more to spare.

Dryden.

He in a fruitful wife's embraces old,

A long increase of children's children told.

Add. Ovid's Met.

3. In the language of Scripture.

One weak in knowledge.

Isa. x. 19. 1 Cor. xiii. 11.

Such as are young in grace.

1 John, ii. 13.

Such as are humble and docile.

Matt. xvii. 3, 4.

The descendants of a man, how remote soever, are called children; as the children of Edom, the children of Israel.

The children of light, the children of darkness; who follow light, who remain in darkness

The elect, the blessed, are also called the children of God.

How is he numbered among the children of God, and his lot is among the saints!

Wisdom, v. 5.

In the New Testament, believers are commonly called children of God.

Ye are all the children of God, by faith in Jesus Christ.

Gal. iii. 26.

Calmet.

4. A girl child.

Mercy on's, a bearne! a very pretty bearne!

A boy, or child, I wonder!

Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

5. Any thing, the product or effect of another.

Macduff, this noble passion,

Child of integrity, hath from my soul

Wip'd the black scruples.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

6. To be with CHILD. To be pregnant.

If it must stand still, let wives with child,

Pray that their burthen may not fall this day,

Lest that their hopes prodigiously be cross.

Shakesp. K. John.

To CHILD. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring children.

The spring, the summer,

The childing autumn, angry winter change

Their wonted liveries.

Shakesp. Midsummer Night Dream.

As to childing women, young vigorous people, after irregularities of diet, in such it begins with hæmorrhages.

Arbuthnot.

CHILDBEARING, participial substantive. [from child and bear.]

The act of bearing children.

To thee,

Pains only in childbearing were foretold,

And, bringing forth, soon recompens'd with joy,

Fruit of thy womb.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 1051.

The timorous and irresolute Sylvia has demurred 'till she is past childbearing.

Addison's Spectat. N<sup>o</sup>. 89.

Sidney, b. ii.

A kernel void of any taste, but not so of virtue, especially for women travailling in childbirth. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

In the whole sex of women, God hath decreed the sharpest pains of childbirth; to shew, that there is no state exempt from sorrow.
Taylor's Holy Living.

He to his wife, before the time assign'd

For childbirth came, thus bluntly spoke his mind. Dryden.

CHILDED. adj. [from child.] Furnished with a child.

How light and portable my pain seems now,

When that which makes me bend, makes the king bow;

He childed as I father'd. Shakespeare's King Lear.

CHILDERMAS DAY. [from child and mas.]

The day of the week, throughout the year, answering to the day on which the feast of the holy Innocents is solemnized, which weak and superstitious persons think an unlucky day.

So you talk not of hares, or such uncouth things; for that proves as ominous to the fisherman, as the beginning of a voyage on the day when childermas day fell, doth to the mariner.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

CHILDHOOD. n. f. [from child, cildhad, Sax.]

1. The state of infants; or, according to some, the time in which we are children.

Now I have stain'd the childhood of our joy

With blood, remov'd but little from our own. Sh. R. & J.

The sons of lords and gentlemen should be trained up in learning from their childhoods.
Spenser on Ireland.

Seldom have I ceas'd to eye

Thy infancy, thy childhood, and thy youth. Milt. Pa. Reg.

The same authority that the actions of a man have with us in our childhood, the same, in every period of life, has the practice of all whom we regard as our superiours. Rogers's Ser.

2. The time of life between infancy and puberty.

Infancy and childhood demand thin, copious, nourishing aliment.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. The properties of a child.

Their love in early infancy began,

And rose as childhood ripen'd into man. Dryden's Fables.

CHILDISH. adj. [from child.]

1. Having the qualities of a child; trifling; ignorant; simple. Learning hath its infancy, when it is but beginning and almost childish: then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile.
Bacon's Essay, 58.

2. Becoming only children; trivial; puerile.

Musidorus being elder by three or four years, by the difference there was taken away the occasion of childish contentions.
Sidney, b. ii.

The lion's whelps she saw how he did bear,

And lull in rugged arms withouten childish fear. Fairy Qu.

When I was yet a child, no childish play

To me was pleasing; all my mind was set

Serious to learn and know. Paradise Regained, b. i.

The fathers looked on the worship of images as the most silly and childish thing in the world. Stillingfleet's Defence.

One that hath newly learn'd to speak and go,

Loves childish plays. Roscommon.

They have spoiled the beauty of the walls with abundance of childish sentences, that consist often in a jingle of words.
Addison on Italy.

By conversation the childish humours of their younger days might be worn out. Arbuthnot's History of J. Bull.

CHILDISHLY. adv. [from childish.] In a childish trifling way; like a child.

Together with his fame their infamy was spread, who had so rashly and childishly ejected him. Hooker's Preface.

It is a thick misty error, supported by some men of excellent judgment in their own professions, but childishly unskilful in any thing besides. Hayward on Edward VI.

CHILDISHNESS. n. f. [from childish.]

1. Puerility; triflingness.

The actions of childishness, and unfashionable carriage, time and age will of itself be sure to reform. Locke.

Nothing in the world could give a truer idea of the superstition, credulity, and childishness of the Roman catholick religion. Addison on Italy.

2. Harmlessness.

Speak thou, boy;

Perhaps thy childishness will move him more

Than can our reasons. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

CHILDLESS. adj. [from child.] Without children; without offspring.

As thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be childless among women. Samuel, xv. 33.

A man shall see the noblest works and foundations have proceeded from childless men; which have sought to express the images of their minds, where those of their bodies have failed: so the care of posterity is most in them that have no posterity. Bacon's Essay, 7.

Childless thou art, childless remain: so death

Shall be deceiv'd his glut. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 989.

She can give you the reason why such a one died childless.

Spectator, No. 403.

CHILDLIKE. adj. [from child and like.] Becoming or becom-ing a child.

Who can owe no less than childlike obedience to her that hath more than motherly care. Hooker, b. v. f. 8.

I thought the remnant of mine age

Should have been cherish'd by her childlike duty. Shakespeare.

CHILIAID. n. f. [from χιλιας.] A thousand; a collection or sum containing a thousand.

We make cycles and periods of years; as decads, centuries, chiliads, &c. for the use of computation in history. Holder.

CHILIAEDRON. n. f. [from χιλια.] A figure of a thousand sides.

In a man, who speaks of a chiliaedron, or a body of a thousand sides, the idea of the figure may be very confused, though that of the number be very distinct. Locke.

CHILIFA'CTVE. adj. [from chile.] That which makes chile.

Whether this be not effected by some way of corrosion, rather than any proper digestion, chilifa'ctive mutation, or alimantal conversion. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 23.

CHILIFA'CTORY. adj. [from chile.] That which has the quality of making chile.

We should rather rely upon a chilifa'ctory menstruum, or digestive preparation drawn from species or individuals, whose stomachs peculiarly dissolve lapideous bodies. Brown's Vul. Er.

CHILIFICATION. n. f. [from chile.] The act of making chile.

Nor will we affirm that iron is indigested in the stomach of the Ostriche; but we suspect this effect to proceed not from any liquid reduction, or tendence to chylification, by the power of natural heat. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 22.

CHILL. adj. [cele, Sax.]

1. Cold; that which is cold to the touch.

And all my plants I save from nightly ill,

Of noisom winds, and blasting vapours chill. Milton.

2. Cold; having the sensation of cold; shivering with cold.

My heart, and my chill veins, now freezing with despair.

Rowe's Royal Convert.

3. Depressed; dejected; discouraged.

CHILL. n. f. [from the adjective.] Chilness; cold.

I very well know one to have a sort of chill about his præcordia and head. Derham's Physico-Theology.

To CHILL. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make cold.

Age has not yet

So shrunk my sinews, or so chill'd my veins,

But conscious virtue in my breast remains. Dryd. Aurengzeb:

Heat burns his rise, frost chills his setting beams,

And vex the world with opposite extremes. Creech's Manil.

Each changing season does its poison bring;

Rheums chill the winter, agues blast the spring. Prior.

Now no more the drum

Provokes to arms; or trumpet's clangor shrill

Affrights the wives, or chills the virgin's blood. Philips.

2. To depress; to deject; to discourage.

Every thought on God chills the gaiety of his spirits, and awakens terrors, which he cannot bear. Rogers's Sermons.

3. To blast with cold.

The fruits perish on the ground,

Or soon decay, by snows immoderate chill'd,

By winds are blasted, or by lightning kill'd. Blackm. Creat.

CHILLINESS. n. f. [from chilly.] A sensation of shivering cold.

If the patient survives three days, the acuteness of the pain abates, and a chilliness or shivering affects the body. Arbuthnot.

CHILLY. adj. [from chill.] Somewhat cold.

A chilly sweat bedews

My shudd'ring limbs. Philips.

CHILNESS. n. f. [from chill.] Coldness; want of warmth.

If you come out of the sun suddenly into a shade, there followeth a chilness or shivering in all the body. Bac. Nat. Hist.

This, while he thinks, he lifts aloft his dart,

A gen'rous chilness seizes ev'ry part,

The veins pour back the blood, and fortify the heart. Dryd.

CHIMB. n. f. [kime, Dut.] The end of a barrel or tub.

CHIME. n. f. [The original of this word is doubtful. Junius and Minshew suppose it corrupted from cimbal; Skinner from gamme, or gamut; Henshaw from chiamare, to call, because the chime calls to church. Perhaps it is only softened from chirme, or churme, an old word for the sound of many voices, or instruments making a noise together.]

1. The consonant or harmonick sound of many correspondent instruments.

Hang our shaggy thighs with bells;

That, as we do strike a tune,

In our dance, shall make a chime. Ben Johnson's Fairy Pr.

The sound

Of instruments, that made melodious chime,

Was heard, of harp and organ. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Love virtue, she alone is free;

She can teach you how to climb

Higher than the sphery chime.

Milton.

2. The

2. The correspondence of sound.

Love first invented verse, and form'd the rhyme,
The motion measur'd, harmoniz'd the chime. Dryden's Fob.

3. The sound of bells, not rung by ropes, but struck with hammers. In this sense it is always used in the plural, chimes.

We have heard the chimes at midnight. Shakefp. Henry IV.

4. The correspondence of proportion or relation.

The conceptions of things are placed in their several degrees of similitude; as in several proportions, one to another: in which harmonious chimes, the voice of reason is often drowned.

Grew's C. smol. b. ii. c. 6. f. 51.

To CHIME. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To sound in harmony or consonance.

To make the rough recital aptly chime,
Or bring the sum of Gallia's loss to rhyme,
'Tis mighty hard.

Prior.

2. To correspond in relation or proportion.

Father and son, husband and wife, and such other correlative terms, do belong one to another; and, through custom, do readily chime, and answer one another, in people's memories.

Locke.

3. To agree; to fall in with.

He not only sat quietly and heard his father railed at, but often chimed in with the discourse. Arbuth. Hist. of J. Bull.

4. To suit with; to agree.

Any sect, whose reasonings, interpretation, and language, I have been used to, will, of course, make all chime that way; and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, seem harsh, strange and uncouth to me. Locke.

5. To jingle; to clatter.

But with the meaner tribe I'm forc'd to chime,

And, wanting strength to rise, descend to rhyme. Smith.

To CHIME. v. a. To move, or strike, or sound harmonically, or with just consonancy.

With lifted arms they order ev'ry blow,

And chime their sounding hammers in a row:

With labour'd anvils Ætna groans below. Dryd. Georg.

2. To strike a bell with a hammer.

CHIMERA, n. f. [Chimæra, Lat.] A vain and wild fancy, as remote from reality as the existence of the poetical chimera, a monster feigned to have the head of a lion, the belly of a goat, and the tail of a dragon.

In short, the force of dreams is of a piece,

Chimeras all; and more absurd, or less. Dryden's Fables.

No body joins the voice of a sheep with the shape of a horse, to be the complex ideas of any real substances, unless he has a mind to fill his head with chimeras, and his discourse with unintelligible words. Locke.

CHIMERICAL. adj. [from chimera.] Imaginary; fanciful; wildly, vainly, or fantastically conceived; fantastick.

Notwithstanding the fineness of this allegory may atone for it in some measure, I cannot think that persons of such a chimerical existence are proper actors in an epic poem. Spectat.

CHIMERICALLY. adv. [from chimerical.] Vainly; wildly; fantastically.

CHIMINAGE. n. f. [from chimin, an old law word for a road.]

A toll for passage through a forest.

Cowel.

CHIMNEY. n. f. [cheminée, French.]

1. The passage through which the smoke ascends from the fire in the house.

Chimnies, with scorn, rejecting smoke,

Swift.

2. The turret raised above the roof of the house, for conveyance of the smoke.

The night has been unruly: where we lay,

Our chimnies were blown down.

Shakefp. Macbeth.

3. The fireplace.

The chimney

Is south the chamber; and the chimneypiece,

Chaste Dian bathing.

Shakefp. Cymbeline.

The fire which the Chaldeans worshipped for a god, is crept into every man's chimney. Raleigh's Hist. b. i. c. 68.

Low offices, which some neighbours hardly think it worth stirring from their chimney sides to obtain. Swift on Sac. Test.

CHIMNEY-CORNER. n. f. [from chimney and corner.] The fireside; the seat on each end of the firegrate; usually noted in proverbial language for being the place of idlers.

Yet some old men

Tell stories of you in their chimney-corner.

Derb. Sophy.

CHIMNEYPIECE. n. f. [from chimney and piece.] The ornamental piece of wood, or stone, that is set round the fireplace.

Polish and brighten the marble hearths and chimneypieces with a clout dipt in grease; nothing maketh them shine so well. Swift's Directions to the Housemaid.

CHIMNEYSWEEPER. n. f. [from chimney and sweeper.]

1. One whose trade it is to clean foul chimnies of soot.

To look like her, are chimney sweepers black:

And since her time are colliers counted bright.

Shakefp.

The little chimney sweeper skulks along,

And marks with sooty stains the heedless throng. Gay's Triv.

Even lying Ned the chimney sweeper of Savoy, and Tom the Portugal dustman, put in their claims. Arb. Hist. of J. Bull.

2. It is used proverbially for one of a mean and vile occupation.

VOL. I.

Golden lads and girls, all must,

As chimney sweepers, come to dust.

Shakefp. Cymbeline.

CHIN. n. f. [cinne, Sax. kinn, Germ.] The part of the face beneath the under lip.

But all the words I could get of her, was wrying her waist, and thrusting out her chin. Sidney.

With his amazonian chin he drove

The bristled lips before him.

Shakefp. Coriolanus.

He rais'd his hardy head, which sunk again,

And, sinking on his bosom, knock'd his chin. Dryd. Fables.

CHINA. n. f. [from China, the country where it is made.]

China ware; porcelain; a species of vessels made in China, dimly transparent, partaking of the qualities of earth and glass. They are made by mingling two kinds of earth, of which one easily vitrifies; the other resists a very strong heat: when the vitrifiable earth is melted into glass, they are completely burnt.

Spleen, vapours, or small pox, above them all,

And mistress of herself, tho' china fall. Pope's Epist. ii.

After supper, carry your plate and china together in the same basket.

Swift's Directions to the Butler.

CHINA-ORANGE. n. f. [from China and orange.] The sweet orange; supposed originally of China.

Not many years has the China-orange been propagated in Portugal and Spain. Mortimer's Art of Husbandry.

CHINA-ROOT. n. f. [from China and root.] A medicinal root, brought originally from China.

CHINCUGH. n. f. [perhaps more properly kinough, from kincken, to pant, Dut. and cough.] A violent and convulsive cough, to which children are subject.

I have observed a chincough, complicated with an intermitting fever.

Floer on the Humours.

CHINE. n. f. [eschine, Fr. schiena, Ital. spina, Lat. cein, Arm.]

1. The part of the back, in which the spine or backbone is found.

She strake him such a blow upon his chine, that she opened all his body. Sidney, b. i.

He presents her with the tusked head,

And chine, with rising bristles roughly spread. Dryd. Fables.

2. A piece of the back of an animal.

Cut out the burly boned clown in chines of beef ere thou sleep.

Shakefp. Henry IV. p. 2.

He had killed eight fat hogs for this season, and he had dealt about his chines very liberally amongst his neighbours. Spectat.

To CHINE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut into chines.

He that in his line did chine the long rib'd Apennine. Dry.

CHINK. n. f. [cinan, to gape, Sax.] A small aperture longwise; an opening or gap between the parts of any thing.

Pyramus and Thisby did talk through the chink of a wall.

Shakefp. Midsummer Night's Dream.

Plagues also have been raised by anointing the chinks of doors, and the like.

Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 916.

Though birds have no epiglottis, yet they so contract the chink of their larynx, as to prevent the admission of wet or dry indigested.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

In vain she search'd each cranny of the house,

Each gaping chink, impervious to a mouse.

Swift.

Other inventions, false and absurd, that are like so many chinks and holes to discover the rottenness of the whole fabric.

South.

To CHINK. v. a. [derived by Skinner from the sound.] To shake so as to make a sound.

He chinks his purse, and takes his seat of state:

With ready quills the dedicators wait. Pope's Dunciad, b. ii.

To CHINK. v. n. To sound by striking each other.

Lord Strutt's money shines as bright, and chinks as well, as 'quire South's.

Arbuthnot's Hist. of J. Bull.

When not a guinea chink'd on Martin's boards,

And Atwill's self was drain'd of all his hoards

Swift.

CHINKY. adj. [from chink.] Full of holes; gaping; opening into narrow clefts.

But plaister thou the chinky hives with clay. Dryd. Virg. Geo.

Grimalkin, to domestick vermin sworn

An everlasting foe, with watchful eye

Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap,

Protending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice

Sure ruin.

Philips's Poems.

CHINTS. n. f. Cloath of cotton made in India, and printed with colours.

Let a charming chints, and Brussels lace,

Wrap my cold limbs, and shade my lifeless face. Pope's Ep.

CHIOPPINE. n. f. [from chapin, Span.] A high shoe, formerly worn by ladies.

Your ladyship is nearer heaven than when I saw you last, by the altitude of a chioppine.

Shakefp. Hamlet.

The woman was a giantess, and yet walked always in chioppines.

Cowley.

CHIP, CHEAP, CHIPPING, in the names of places, imply a market; from the Sax. cyppan ceapan, to buy. Gibson's Cam.

To CHIP. v. a. [probably corrupted from chop.] To cut into small pieces; to diminish, by cutting away a little at a time.

To return to our statue in the block of marble, we see it sometimes only begun to be chipped; sometimes rough hewn, and just sketched into an human figure. Addis. Spectat.

The critick strikes out all that is not just;
And 'tis ev'n so the butler chips his crust. King's Cookery.
Industry

Taught him to chip the wood, and hew the stone. Thomf.

CHIP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A small piece taken off by a cutting instrument.

Cucumbers do extremely affect moisture, and over-drink themselves, which chaff or chips forbideth. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
That chip made the iron swim, not by any natural power.

Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

The straw was laid below;

Of chips and serewood was the second row. Dryd. Fables.

2. A small piece, however made.

The manganese lies in the vein in lumps wrecked, in an irregular manner, among clay, coarse spar, and chips of stone.

Woodward on Fossils.

CHIPPING. n. f. [from to chip.] A fragment cut off.

They dung their land with the chippings of a sort of soft stone.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

The chippings and filings of these jewels, could they be preserved, are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors.

Felton on the Classics.

CHIRAGRICAL. adj. [chiragra, Lat.] Having the gout in the hand; subject to the gout in the hand.

Chiragrical persons do suffer in the finger as well as in the rest, and sometimes first of all. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 5.

CHIROGRAPHER. n. f. [χῆρ, the hand, γράφω, to write.] He that exercises or professes the art or business of writing.

Thus passeth it from this office to the chirographer's, to be engrossed.

Bacon's Office of Alienation.

CHIROGRAPHIST. n. f. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] This word is used in the following passage, I think improperly, for one that tells fortunes, by examining the hand: the true word is chiroscopist, or chiromancer.

Let the physiognomists examine his features; let the chirographists behold his palm; but, above all, let us consult for the calculation of his nativity. Arbuth. and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

CHIROGRAPHY. n. f. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] The art of writing.

CHIROMANCER. n. f. [See CHIROMANCY.] One that foretells future events by inspecting the hand.

The middle sort, who have not much to spare,

To chiromancers' cheaper art repair,

Who clap the pretty palm, to make the lines more fair. }
Dryden's Juvenal, sat. vi.

CHIROMANCY. n. f. [χῆρ, the hand, and μαντις, a prophet.] The art of foretelling the events of life, by inspecting the hand.

There is not much considerable in that doctrine of chiromancy that spots in the top of the nails, do signify things past; in the middle, things present; and at the bottom, events to come.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 22.

TO CHIRP. v. n. [perhaps contracted from cheer up.] The Dutch have circken.] To make a cheerful noise; as birds, when they call without singing.

She chirping ran, he peeping flew away,

'Till hard by them both he and she did stay. Sidney.

Came he right now to sing a raven's note;

And thinks he, that the chirping of a wren

Can chase away the first conceived fount. Shak. Hen. VI.

No chirping lark the welkin sheen invokes. Gay's Past.

The careful hen

Calls all her chirping family around. Thomson's Spring.

TO CHIRP. v. a. [This seems apparently corrupted from cheer up.] To make cheerful.

Let no sober bigot here think it a sin,

To push on the chirping and moderate bottle. Johnf. Tav. Ac.

Sir Balaam now, he lives like other folks;

He takes his chirping pint, he cracks his jokes. Pope.

CHIRP. [from the verb.] The voice of birds or insects.

Winds over us whisper'd, flocks by us did bleat,

And chirp went the grasshopper under our feet. Spectat.

CHIRPER. n. f. [from chirp.] One that chirps; one that is cheerful.

TO CHIRRE. v. n. [ceopian, Sax.] See CHURME.

To coo as a pigeon.

Junius.

CHIRURGEON. n. f. [χειρουργός, from χῆρ, the hand, and εργον, work.] One that cures ailments, not by internal medicines, but outward applications. It is now generally pronounced, and by many written, surgeon.

When a man's wounds cease to smart, only because he has lost his feeling, they are nevertheless mortal, for his not seeing his need of a chirurgion.

South's Sermons.

CHIRURGERY. n. f. [from chirurgion.] The art of curing by external applications.

Gynecia having skill in chirurgery, an art in those days much esteemed.

Sidney, b. i.

Nature could do nothing in her case without the help of chirurgery, in drying up the luxurious flesh, and making way to pull out the rotten bones.

Wifeman.

C H I

CHIRURGICAL. } adj. See CHIRURGEON.
CHIRURGICK. }

1. Having qualities useful in outward applications to hurts.

As to the chirurgical or physical virtues of wax, it is reckoned a mean between hot and cold. Mortim. Husbandry.

2. Relating to the manual part of healing.

3. Manual in general, consisting in operations of the hand. This sense, though the first, according to etymology, is now scarce found.

The chirurgical or manual, doth refer to the making instruments, and exercising particular experiments. Wilkins.

CHI'SEL. n. f. [ciseau, Fr. of scissum, Lat.] An instrument with which wood or stone is pared away.

What fine chisel

Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me,

For I will kiss her.

Shakefp. Winter's Tale.

There is such a seeming softness in the limbs, as if not a chisel had hewed them out of stone, but a pencil had drawn and stroaked them in oil.

Wotton's Architecture.

Imperfect shapes: in marble such are seen,

When the rude chisel does the man begin.

Dryden.

TO CHI'SEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut with a chisel.

CHIT. n. f. [according to Dr. Hickes, from kind, Germ. child; perhaps from chico, little, Span.]

1. A child; a baby. Generally used of young persons in contempt.

These will appear such chits in story,

'Twill turn all politicks to jest.

Anonymous.

2. The shoot of corn from the end of the grain. A cant term with maltsters.

Barley, couched four days, will begin to shew the chit or sprit at the root-end.

Mortimer's Husbandry

3. A freckle, [from chick-pease.] In this sense it is seldom used.

TO CHIT. v. n. [from the noun.] To sprout; to shoot at the end of the grain.

I have known barley chit in seven hours after it had been thrown forth.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

CHI'TCHAT. n. f. [corrupted by reduplication from chat.]

Prattle; idle prate; idle talk. A word only used in ludicrous conversation.

I am a member of a female society, who call ourselves the chitchat club.

Spectat. No. 560.

CHI'TTERLINGS. n. f. without singular. [from schysterlingh, Dut. Minshew; from kutten, Germ. Skinner.] The guts; the bowels. Skinner.

CHI'TTY. adj. [from chit.] Childish; like a baby.

CHI'VALROUS. adj. [from chivalry.] Relating to chivalry, or errant knighthood; knightly; warlike; adventurous; daring. A word now out of use.

And noble minds of yore allied were.

In brave pursuit of chivalrous emprise. Fairy Queen, b. i.

CHI'VALRY. n. f. [chevalerie, Fr. knighthood, from cheval, a horse; as eques in Latin.]

1. Knighthood; a military dignity.

There be now, for martial encouragement, some degrees and orders of chivalry; which, nevertheless, are conferred promiscuously upon soldiers and no soldiers. Bacon's Essay, 30.

2. The qualifications of a knight; as valour; dexterity in arms. Thou hast slain

The flow'r of Europe for his chivalry. Shakefp. Henry VI.

I may speak it to my shame,

I have a truant been to chivalry. Shakefp. Hen. IV. part i.

3. The general system of knighthood.

Solemnly he swore,

That by the faith which knights to knighthood bore,

And whate'er else to chivalry belongs,

He would not cease 'till he reveng'd their wrongs. Dryd. Fab.

4. An adventure; an exploit.

They four doing acts more dangerous, though less famous, because they were but private chivalries.

Sidney, b. ii.

5. The body or order of knights.

And by his light

Did all the chivalry of England move

To do brave acts.

Shakefp. Henry IV. part ii.

6. In law.

Servitium militare, of the French, chevalier; a tenure of land by knights service. There is no land but is holden mediately or immediately of the crown, by some service or other; and therefore are all our freeholds, that are to us and our heirs, called feuda, fees, as proceeding from the benefit of the king. As the king gave to the nobles large possessions for this or that rent and service, so they parcelled out their lands, so received for rents and services as they thought good: and those services are by Littleton divided into chivalry and socage. The one is martial and military; the other, clownish and rustick. Chivalry, therefore, is a tenure of service, whereby the tenant is bound to perform some noble or military office unto his lord, and is of two sorts; either regal, that is, such as may hold only of the king; or such as may also hold of a common person as well as of the king. That which may hold only of the king is properly called fergeantry, and is again divided into grand or petit, i. e. great or small. Chivalry that may may hold of a common person, as well as of the king, is called scutagium. Cowel.

C H O

7. It ought properly to be written chevalry. It is a word not much used, but in old poems or romances.

CHIVES. n. f. [cive, Fr. Skinner.]

1. The threads or filaments rising in flowers, with seeds at the end.

The masculine or prolific seed contained in the chives, or apices of the stamina. Ray on the Creation.

2. A species of small onion. Skinner.

CHLOROSIS. n. f. [from χλωρός, green.] The green-sickness. To CHOAK. See CHOKER.

CHOCOLATE. n. f. [chocolate, Span.]

1. The nut of the cacao-tree.

The tree hath a rose flower, of a great number of petals, from whose empalement arises the pointal, being a tube cut into many parts, which becomes a fruit shaped somewhat like a cucumber, and deeply furrowed, in which are contained several seeds, collected into an oblong heap, and slit down, somewhat like almonds. It is a native of America, and is found in great plenty in several places between the Tropicks, and grows wild. See COCOA. Miller.

2. The cake or mass, made by grinding the kernel of the cacao-nut with other substances, to be dissolved in hot water.

The Spaniards were the first who brought chocolate into use in Europe, to promote the consumption of their cacao-nuts, achiote, and other drugs, which their West Indies furnish, and which enter the composition of chocolate. Chambers.

3. The liquor, made by a solution of chocolate in hot water.

Chocolate is certainly much the best of these three exotic liquors: its oil seems to be both rich, alimentary, and anodyne. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

In fumes of burning chocolate shall glow,

And tremble at the sea that froths below! Pope.

CHOCOLATE-HOUSE. n. f. [chocolate and house.] A house where company is entertained with chocolate.

Ever since that time, Lisander has been twice a day at the chocolate-house. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 54.

CHODE. [the old preterite, from chide] See CHIDE.

And Jacob was wroth, and chode with Laban. Gen. xxxi.

CHOICE. n. f. [choix, French.]

1. The act of choosing; determination between different things proposed; election.

If you oblige me suddenly to chuse,

The choice is made; for I must both refuse. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

Soft elocution doth thy style renown,

Gentle or sharp, according to thy choice,

To laugh at follies, or to lash at vice. Dryd. Pers. sat. v.

2. The power of choosing; election.

Choice there is not, unless the thing which we take to be so in our power, that we might have refused it. If fire consume the stable, it chooseth not so to do, because the nature thereof is such that it can do no other. Hooker, b. i. f. 7.

There's no liberty like the freedom of having it at my own choice, whether I will live to the world, or to myself. L'Estr.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice. Whereas all moral goodness consisteth in the elective act of the understanding will. Grew's Cosmol. b. iii. c. 2. f. 23.

Whether he will remove his contemplation from one idea to another, is many times in his choice. Locke.

3. Care in choosing; curiosity of distinction.

Julius Cæsar did write a collection of apophthegms: it is pity his book is lost; for I imagine they were collected with judgment and choice. Bacon's Apophthegms.

4. The thing chosen; the thing taken or approved, in preference to others.

Your choice is not so rich in birth as beauty:

That you might well enjoy her. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Take to thee, from among the cherubim,

Thy choice of flaming warriors. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.

Now Mars, she said, let fame exalt her voice;

Nor let thy conquests only be her choice. Prior.

5. The best part of any thing, that is more properly the object of choice.

The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the psalms do both more briefly contain, and more movingly also express. Hooker, b. v. f. 37.

Thou art a mighty prince: in the choice of our sepulchres bury thy dead. Gen. xxiii. 6.

Their riders, the flow'r and choice

Of many provinces, from bound to bound. Milt. Par. Reg.

6. Several things proposed at once, as objects of judgment and election.

A braver choice of dauntless spirits,

Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shakesp. K. John.

7. To make CHOICE of. To choose; to take from several things proposed.

Wisdom, of what herself approves, makes choice,

Nor is led captive by the common voice. Denham.

CHOICE. adj. [choisi, French]

1. Select; of extraordinary value.

After having set before the king the choicest of wines and

C H O

fruits, told him the best part of his entertainment was to come. Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 167.

Thus in a sea of folly tofs'd,

My choicest hours of life are lost. Swift.

2. Chary; frugal; careful. Used of persons.

He that is choice of his time, will also be choice of his company, and choice of his actions. Taylor's Holy Living.

CHOICELESS. adj. [from choice.] Without the power of choosing; without right of choice; not free.

Neither the weight of the matter, of which the cylinder is made, nor the round voluble form of it, are any more imputable to that dead choiceless creature, than the first motion of it was supposed to be; and, therefore, it cannot be a fit resemblance to shew the reconcileableness of fate with choice. Hammond on Fundamentals.

CHOICELY. adv. [from choice.]

1. Curiously; with exact choice.

A band of men,

Collected choicely from each county some. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

2. Valuably; excellently.

It is certain it is choicely good.

Walton's Angler.

CHOICENESS. n. f. [from choice.] Nicety; particular value.

Contending troops. Waller.

2. To stop up; to obstruct; to block up a passage.

Men troop'd up to the king's capacious court,

Whose portico's were chok'd with the resort. Chapm. Odyssey.

They are at a continual expence to cleanse the ports, and keep them from being choked up, by the help of several engines. Addison on Italy.

While prayers and tears his destin'd progress stay,

And crowds of mourners choke their sov'reign's way. Tickell.

3. To hinder by obstruction.

As two spent swimmers, that do cling together,

And choke their art. Shakesp. Macbeth.

She cannot lose her perfect pow'r to see,

Tho' mists and clouds do choke her window-light. Davies.

It seemeth the fire is so choked, as not to be able to remove the stone. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N<sup>o</sup>. 361.

You must make the mould big enough to contain the whole fruit, when it is grown to the greatest; for else you will choke the spreading of the fruit. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The fire, which chok'd in ashes lay,

A load too heavy for his soul to move,

Was upward blown below, and brush'd away by love. Dryd.

4. To suppress.

And yet we ventur'd; for the gain propos'd

Chok'd the respect of likely peril fear'd. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

Confess thee freely of thy sin:

For to deny each article with oath,

Cannot remove nor choke the strong conception

That I do groan withal. Shakesp. Othello.

5. To overpower; to suppress.

And that which fell among thorns are they, which, when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with cares, and riches, and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection. Luke, viii. 14.

No fruitful crop the sickly fields return;

But oats and darnel choke the rising corn. Dryden's Past.

Marcilius Ficinus increases these proportions, adding two more of pure choler. Motion on Education.

There would be a main defect, if such a feeding animal, and so subject unto diseases from bilious causes, should want a proper conveyance for choler. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. The humour, which, by its super-abundance, is supposed to produce irascibility.

It engenders choler, planteth anger;

And better 'twere that both of us did fast,

Since, of ourselves, ourselves are cholerick,

Than feed it with such over-roasted flesh. Sh. Tam. of Shrew.

3. Anger; rage.

Put him to choler straight: he hath been used

Ever to conquer, and to have his word

Off contradiction.

Shakefp. Coriolanus.

He, methinks, is no great scholar,

Who can mistake desire for choler.

Prior.

CHO'LERICK. adj. [cholericus, Latin.]

I'll undertake to land them on our coast. Shakesp. Hen. VI.
- CHOUGH. n. f. [ceo, Sax. choucas, Fr.] A bird which frequents the rocks by the sea side, like a jackdaw, but bigger. Hanmer.
In birds, kites and kestrels have a resemblance with hawks, crows with ravens, daws and choughs. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
To crows the like impartial grace affords,
And choughs and daws, and such republick birds. Dryden.
- CHOULE. n. f. [commonly pronounced and written jowl.] The crop of a bird.
The choule or crop, adhering unto the lower side of the bill, and so descending by the throat, is a bag or sachel. Br. Vul. Er.
- To CHOUSE. v. a. [The original of this word is much doubted by Skinner, who tries to deduce it from the French goffer, to laugh at; or joncher, to wheedle; and from the Teutonick

C H R

- kosen*, to prattle. It is perhaps a fortuitous and cant word, without etymology.]
1. To cheat; to trick; to impose upon.
Freedom and zeal have chous'd you o'er and o'er;
Pray give us leave to bubble you once more. Dryd. Pr. to Alb.
From London they came, silly people to chouse,
Their lands and their faces unknown. Swift.
2. It has of before the thing taken away by fraud.
When geese and pullen are seduc'd,
And fows of sucking pigs are chous'd. Hud. part ii. cant. 3.
- A CHOUSE. n. f. [from the verb. This word is derived by Henshaw from kiaus, or chiaus, a messenger of the Turkish court; who, says he, is little better than a fool.]
1. A bubble; a tool; a man fit to be cheated.
A sottish chouse,
Who, when a thief has robb'd his house,
Applies himself to cunning men. Hudib. part iii. cant. 3.
2. A trick or sham.
- To CHO'WTER. v. n. To grumble or mutter like a froward child. Philips.
- CHRISM. n. f. [χρίσμα, an ointment.] Unguent; or unction: it is only applied to sacred ceremonies.
One act never to be repeated, is not the thing that Christ's eternal priesthood, denoted especially by his unction or chrism, refers to. Hammond's Pract. Catech.
- CHRISOM. n. f. [See CHRISM.] A child that dies within a month after its birth. So called from the chrisom-cloath, a cloath anointed with holy unguent, which the children anciently wore till they were christened.
When the convulsions were but few, the number of chrisoms and infants was greater. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.
- To CHRIS'TEN. adj. [χριστιαν, Sax.]
1. To baptize; to initiate into christianity by water.
2. To name; to denominate.
Where such evils as these reign, christen the thing what you will, it can be no better than a mock millenium. Burnet.
- CHRIS'TENDOM. n. f. [from Christ and dom.] The collective body of christianity; the regions of which the inhabitants profess the christian religion.
What hath been done, the parts of Christendom most afflicted can best testify. Hooker, b. iv. f. 14.
An older and a better soldier, none
That Christendom gives out. Shakesp.
His computation is universally received over all Christendom. Holder on Time.
- CHRIS'TENING. n. f. [from the verb.] The ceremony of the first initiation into christianity.
The queen was with great solemnity crowned at Westminster, about two years after the marriage; like an old christening, that had staid long for godfathers. Bacon's H. VII.
We shall insert the causes, why the account of christenings hath been neglected more than that of burials. Graunt's B. M.
The day of the christening being come, the house was filled with gossips. Arbuth. and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.
- CHRISTIAN. n. f. [Christianus, Lat.] A professor of the religion of Christ.
We christians have certainly the best and the holiest, the wisest and most reasonable religion in the world. Tillotson.
- CHRISTIAN. adj. Professing the religion of Christ.
I'll not be made a soft and dull-ey'd fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To christian intercessors. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

- CHRIS'TMAS. n. f. [from Christ and mas.] The day on which the nativity of our blessed Saviour is celebrated, by the particular service of the church.
- A CHRISTMAS-BOX. n. f. [from christmas and box.] A box in which little presents are collected at Christmas.
When time comes round, a Christmas-box they bear,
And one day makes them rich for all the year. Gay's Trivia.
- CHRISTMAS-FLOWER. n. f. See HELLEBORE.
- CHRIST'S-THORN. n. f. [So called, as Skinner fancies, because the thorns have some likeness to a cross.]
It hath long sharp spines: the flower has five leaves, in form of a rose: out of the flower-cup, which is divided into several segments, rises the pointal, which becomes a fruit, shaped like a bonnet, having a shell almost globular, which is divided into three cells, in each of which is contained a roundish seed. This is by many persons supposed to be the plant from which our Saviour's crown of thorns was composed. Miller.

C H R

CHROMA'TICK. adj. [χρῶμα, colour.]

1. Relating to colour.

I am now come to the third part of painting, which is called the chromatick, or colouring. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. Relating to a certain species of antient music, now unknown.

It was observed he never touched his lyre in such a truly chromatick and enharmonick manner, as upon that occasion. Arbuth. and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.

CHRONICAL. } adj. [from χρόνος, time.]

CHRONICK. } A chronical distemper is of length; as dropfies, Asthma's, and the like. Quincy.

Of diseases some are chronical, and of long duration; as quartane agues, scurvy, &c. wherein we defer the cure unto more advantageous seasons. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The lady's use of all these excellencies is to divert the old man, when he is out of the pangs of a chronical distemper. Spectat. No. 449.

CHRONICLE. n. f. [chronique, Fr. from χρόνος, time.]

1. A register or account of events in order of time.

No more yet of this;

For 'tis a chronicle of day by day,

Not a relation for a breakfast. Shakef. Tempest.

2. A history.

You lean too confidently on those Irish chronicles, which are most fabulous and forged. Spenser on Ireland.

If from the field I should return once more,

I and my sword will earn my chronicle. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

I'm traduc'd by tongues, which neither knows

My faculties nor person, yet will be

The chronicles of my doing. Shakef. Henry VIII.

I give up to historians the generals and heroes which crowd their annals, together with those which you are to produce for the British chronicle. Dryden.

TO CHRONICLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To record in chronicle, or history.

This to rehearse, should rather be to chronicle times than to search into reformation of abuses in that realm. Spens. Irel.

2. To register; to record.

For now the devil, that told me I did well,

Says that this deed is chronicled in hell. Shakef. Rich. III.

Love is your master; for he masters you:

And he that is so yoked by a fool,

Methinks, should not be chronicled for wife. Shakef.

I shall be the jest of the town; nay, in two days I expect to be chronicled in ditty, and sung in woful ballad. Cong. Old Bat.

CHRONICLER. n. f. [from chronicle.]

1. A writer of chronicles; a recorder of events in order of time.

Here gathering chroniclers, and by them stand

Giddy fantastick poets of each land. Donne.

2. A historian; one that keeps up the memory of things past.

I do herein rely upon these bards, or Irish chroniclers. Spens.

This custom was held by the druids and bards of our antient Britons, and of latter times by the Irish chroniclers, called rimers. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

CHRONOGRAM. n. f. [χρόνος, time, and γράφω, to write.] An inscription including the date of any action.

Of this kind the following is an example:

Gloria lausque Deo, sæCLorVM in sæCVla sunt.

A chronogrammatical verse, which includes not only this year 1660, but numerical letters enough to reach above a thousand years further, until the year 2867. Howel's Parley.

CHRONOGRAMMATICAL. adj. [from chronogram] Belonging to a chronogram. See the last example.

CHRONOGRAMMATIST. n. f. [from chronogram] A writer of chronograms.

There are foreign universities, where, as you praise a man in England for being an excellent philosopher or poet, it is an ordinary character to be a great chronogrammatist. Addison.

CHRONOLOGER. n. f. [χρόνος, time, and λόγος, doctrine.] He that studies or explains the science of computing past time, or of ranging past events according to their proper years.

Chronologers differ among themselves about most great epocha's. Holder on Time.

CHRONOLOGICAL. adj. [from chronology.] Relating to the doctrine of time.

Thus much touching the chronological account of some times and things past, without confining myself to the exactness of years. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CHRONOLOGICALLY. adv. [from chronological.] In a chronological manner; according to the laws or rules of chronology; according to the exact series of time.

CHRONOLOGIST. n. f. [See CHRONOLOGER.] One that studies or explains time; one that ranges past events according to the order of time; a chronologer.

According to these chronologists, the prophecy of the Rabin that the world should last but six thousand years; has been long disproved. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

C H U

All that learned noise and dust of the chronologist is wholly to be avoided. Locke on Education.

CHRONO'LOGY. n. f. [χρόνος, time, and λόγος, doctrine.] The science of computing and adjusting the periods of time; as the revolution of the sun and moon; and of computing time past, and referring each event to the proper year.

And the measure of the year not being so perfectly known to the ancients, rendered it very difficult for them to transmit a true chronology to succeeding ages. Holder on Time.

Where I allude to the customs of the Greeks, I believe I may be justified by the strictest chronology; though a poet is not obliged to the rules that confine an historian. Prior.

A CHRONO'METER. n. f. [χρόνος and μέτρον.] An instrument for the exact mensuration of time.

According to observation made with a pendulum chronometer, a bullet, at its first discharge, flies five hundred and ten yards in five half seconds. Derham's Physico-Theology.

CHRY'SALIS. n. f. [from χρυσός, gold, because of the golden colour in the nymphæ of some insects.]

A term used by some naturalists for aurelia, or the first apparent change of the maggot of any species of insects. Chamib.

CHRY'SOLITE. n. f. [χρυσός, gold, and λίθος, a stone.]

A precious stone of a dusky green, with a cast of yellow. Woodward's Meth. Fissi.

Such another world,

Of one intire and perfect chrysolite,

I'd not have sold her for. Shakef. Othello.

If metal, part seem'd gold, part silver clear:

If stone, carbuncle most, or chrysolite. Milt. Par. Lost, b. iii.

CHRYSO'PRASUS. n. f. [χρυσός, gold, and prasinus, green] A precious stone of a yellow colour, approaching to green.

The ninth a topaz, the tenth a chrysoprasus. Rev. xxi. 20.

CHUB. n. f. [from cop, a great head, Skinner.] A river fish. The chevin.

The chub is in prime from Midmay to Candlemas, but best in winter. He is full of small bones: he eats waterish; not firm, but limp and tasteless: nevertheless, he may be so dressed as to make him very good meat. Walton's Angler.

CHU'BBED. adj. [from chub.] Big-headed like a chub.

TO CHUCK. v. n. [A word probably formed in imitation of the sound that it expresses; or perhaps corrupted from chick.]

To make a noise like a hen, when she calls her chickens.

TO CHUCK. v. a.

1. To call as a hen calls her young.

Then crowing, clapp'd his wings, th' appointed call,

To chuck his wives together in the hall. Dryden's Fables.

2. To give a gentle blow under the chin, so as to make the mouth strike together.

Come, chuck the infant under the chin, force a smile, and cry, ay, the boy takes after his mother's relations. Cong. O. B.

CHUCK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The voice of a hen.

He made the chuck four or five times, that people use to make to chickens when they call them. Temple.

CHUM. n. f. [chom, Armorick, to live together.] A chamber fellow; a term used in the universities.

CHUMP. n. f. A thick heavy piece of wood, less than a block. When one is battered to shivers, they can quickly, of a chump of wood, accommodate themselves with another.

Moxon's Mech. Exer.

CHURCH. n. f. [cyrce, Sax. kyrkian.]

1. The collective body of christians, usually termed the catholic church.

The church being a supernatural society, doth differ from natural societies in this; that the persons unto whom we associate ourselves in the one, are men, simply considered as men; but they to whom we be joined in the other, are God, angels, and holy men.

Hooker, b. i. p. 45.

2. The body of christians adhering to one particular opinion, or form of worship.

The church is a religious assembly, or the large fair building where they meet; and sometimes the same word means a synod of bishops, or of presbyters; and in some places it is the pope and a general council.

Watts's Logick.

3. The place which christians consecrate to the worship of God.

That churches were consecrated unto none but the Lord only, the very general name chiefly doth sufficiently shew: church doth signify no other thing than the Lord's house.

Tho' you unty the winds, and let them fight

Against the churches.

Shakesp. Macbeth.

4. It is used frequently in conjunction with other words; as church-member, the member of a church; church-power, spiritual or ecclesiastical authority.

TO CHURCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To perform with any one the office of returning thanks in the church; after any signal deliverance, as from the danger of childbirth.

CHURCH-ALE. n. f. [from church and ale.] A wake, or feast, commemorative of the dedication of the church.

For the church-ale, two young men of the parish are yearly chosen to be wardens, who make collection among the parishioners of what provision it pleaseth them to bestow.

CHURCH-ATTIRE. n. f. The habit in which men officiate at divine service.

These and such like were their discourses, touching that church-attire, which with us for the most part is used in publick prayer.

Hooker, b. v. f. 29.

CHURCH-AUTHORITY. n. f. Ecclesiastical power; spiritual jurisdiction.

In this point of church-authority, I have sifted all the little scraps alleged.

Atterbury.

CHURCH-BURIAL. n. f. Burial according to the rites of the church.

The bishop has the care of seeing that all christians, after their deaths, be not denied church-burial, according to the usage and custom of the place.

Ayliffe's Paargon.

CHURCH-FOUNDER. n. f. He that builds or endows a church.

Whether emperors or bishops in those days were church-founders, the solemn dedication of churches they thought not to be a work in itself either vain or superstitious.

Hooker.

CHURCHMAN. n. f. [church and man.]

1. An ecclesiastic; a clergyman; one that ministers in sacred things.

If any thing be offered to you touching the church and churchmen, or church-government, rely not only upon yourself.

Bacon's Advice to Villers.

A very difficult work to do, to reform and reduce a church into order, that had been so long neglected, and that was so ill filled by many weak and more wilful churchmen.

Clarend.

Patience in want, and poverty of mind,

These marks of church and churchmen he design'd,

And living taught, and dying left behind.

Dryden's Fables.

2. An adherent to the church of England.

CHURCH-WARDENS. n. f. [See WARDEN.] Are officers yearly chosen, by the consent of the minister and parishioners, according to the custom of each place, to look to the church, church-yard, and such things as belong to both; and to observe the behaviour of the parishioners, for such faults as appertain to the jurisdiction or censure of the ecclesiastical court. They are a kind of corporation, enabled by law to sue for any thing belonging to their church, or poor of their parish.

Cowel.

There should likewise church-wardens, of the gravest men in the parish, be appointed, as they be here in England.

Spens.

Our church-wardens

Feast on the silver, and give us the farthings.

Gav.

CHURCHYARD. n. f. The ground adjoining to the church, in which the dead are buried; a cemetery.

I am almost afraid to stand alone

Here in the churchyard, yet I will adventure.

Shakespeare.

In churchyards, where they bury much, the earth will consume the corps in far shorter time than other earth will.

Bacon.

No place so sacred from such fops is barr'd;

Nor is Paul's church more safe than Paul's churchyard.

CHURL. n. f. [ceopl, Sax. carl, in German, is strong, rusticks being always observed to be strong bodied.]

C H Y

Where no churlish rub says nay.

Craspaw.

CHURLISHLY. adv. [from churlish.] Rudely; brutally.

To the oak, now regnant, the olive did churlishly put over the son for a reward of the service of his fire.

Howel's Voc. For.

CHURLISHNESS. n. f. [from churlish; cynhencnesse, Saxon.]

Brutality; ruggedness of manner.

Better is the churlishness of a man than a courteous woman.

Ecclus. xlii. 14.

In the churlishness of fortune, a poor honest man suffers in this world.

L'Estrange.

CHURME. n. f. [more properly chirm, from the Saxon cýrme, a clamour or noise; as to chirre is to coo as a turtle.] A confused sound; a noise.

He was conveyed to the Tower with the churme of a thousand taunts and reproaches.

Bacon's Henry VII.

A CHURN. n. f. [properly chern, from kern, Dut. cenene, Sax.]

The vessel in which the butter is, by long and violent agitation, coagulated and separated from the serous parts of the milk.

Her aukward fist did ne'er employ the churn.

Gay's Past.

TO CHURN. v. a. [kernen, Dutch.]

1. To agitate or shake any thing by a violent motion.

Perchance he spoke not; but

Like a full acorn'd boar, a churning on,

Cried Oh.

Shakesp.

Froth fills his chaps, he sends a grunting sound,

And part he churns, and part befoams the ground.

Churn'd in his teeth, the foamy venom rose.

The mechanism of nature, in converting our aliment, consists in mixing with it animal juices, and, in the action of the solid parts, churning them together.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To make butter by agitating the milk.

The churning of milk bringeth forth butter.

CHYLOPOETICK. adj. [χυλός, and ποιέω.] Having the power, or the office, of forming chyle.

According to the force of the chylopoetick organs, more or less chyle may be extracted from the same food. Arbuthnot.

CHYLOUS. adj. [from chyle.] Consisting of chyle; partaking of chyle.

Milk is the chylous part of an animal, already prepared. Arb.

CHYMICAL. } adj. [chymicus, Latin.]

CHYMICK. }

1. Made by chymistry.

I'm tir'd with waiting for this chymick gold,

Which fools us young, and beggars us when old. Dryden.

The medicines are ranged in boxes, according to their distinct natures, whether chymical or Galenical preparations.

Watts's Improvement of Mind, p. i. c. 17.

2. Relating to chymistry.

Methinks already, from this chymick flame,

I see a city of more precious mold. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.

With chymic art exalts the min'ral pow'rs,

And draws the aromattick souls of flow'rs. Pope's Windsor Forest.

CHYMICALLY. adv. [from chymical.] In a chymical manner.

CHYMIST. n. f. [See CHYMISTRY.] A professor of chymistry; a philosopher by fire.

The starving chymist, in his golden views

Supremely blest. Pope's Essay on Man, Epist. ii.

CHYMISTRY. n. f. [derived by some from χυμός, juice, or χρῶμα, to melt; by others from an oriental word, kema, black. According to the etymology, it is written with y or e.]

An art whereby sensible bodies contained in vessels, or capable of being contained therein, are so changed, by means of certain instruments, and principally fire, that their several powers and virtues are thereby discovered, with a view to philosophy, or medicine. Boerhaave.

Operations of chymistry fall short of vital force: no chymist can make milk or blood of grass. Arbuthnot on Aliment.

CIBARIOUS. adj. [cibarius, Lat. from cibus, food.] Relating to food; useful for food; edible.

CIBOL. n. f. [ciboule, Fr.] A small sort of onion used in salads. See ONION. This word is common in the Scotch dialect; but the l is not pronounced.

One captain Spurio with his cicatrice, an emblem of war, here on his sinister cheek. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

2. A mark; an impressure: so used by Shakespeare less properly. Lean but upon a ruff

The cicatrice and capable impressure

Thy palm some moment keeps. Shakesp. As you like it.

CICATRISANT. n. f. [from cicatrice.] An application that induces a cicatrice.

CICATRISIVE. adj. [from cicatrice.] Having the qualities proper to induce a cicatrice.

CICATRIZATION. n. f. [from cicatrice.]

1. The act of healing the wound.

A vein bursted, or corroded in the lungs, is looked upon to be for the most part incurable, because of the continual motion and coughing of the lungs, tearing the gap wider, and hindering the conglutination and cicatrization of the vein.

Harvey on Consumptions.

2. The state of being healed, or skinned over.

TO CICATRIZE. v. a. [from cicatrix.]

1. To apply such medicines to wounds, or ulcers, as heal and skin them over. Quincy.

2. To heal and induce the skin over a sore.

We incarned, and in a few days cicatrized it with a smooth cicatrix. Wiseman on Tumours.

CICELY. n. f. A sort of herb. See SWEET CICELY.

CICHORACEOUS. adj. [from cichorium, Lat.] Having the qualities of succory.

Diureticks plentifully evacuate the salt serum; as all acid diureticks, and the testaceous and bitter cichoraceous plants.

Floyer on the Humours.

TO CICURATE. v. a. [cicuro, Lat.] To tame; to reclaim from wildness; to make tame and tractable.

After carnal conversation poisons may yet retain some portion of their natures; yet are so refracted, cicured, and subdued, as not to make good their destructive malignities.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. 7. c. 18.

CICURATION. n. f. [from cicurate.] The act of taming or reclaiming from wildness.

C I N

This holds not only in domestick and mansuete birds; for then it might be the effect of cicuration or institution; but in the wild.

Ray on the Creation.

CIDER. n. f. [cidre, Fr. sidra, Ital. ficera, Lat. σικερα, שכר.]

1. All kind of strong liquors, except wine. This sense is now wholly obsolete.

2. Liquor made of the juice of fruits pressed.

We had also drink, wholesome and good wine of the grape, a kind of cider made of a fruit of that country; a wonderful pleasing and refreshing drink. Bacon's New Atlant.

3. The juice of apples expressed and fermented.

To the utmost bounds of this

Wide universe Silurian cider born,

Shall please all tastes, and triumph o'er the vine. Philips.

CIDERIST. n. f. [from cider.] A maker of cider.

When the ciderists have taken care for the best fruit, and ordered them after the best manner they could; yet hath their cider generally proved pale, sharp, and ill tasted. Mortimer.

CIDERKIN. n. f. [from cider.]

A low word used for the liquor made of the murk or gross matter of apples, after the cider is pressed out, and a convenient quantity of boiled water added to it; the whole infusing for about forty-eight hours. Philips's World of Words.

Ciderkin is made for common drinking, and supplies the place of small beer. Mortimer.

CIELING. n. f. See CEILING.

CIERGE. n. f. [French.] A candle carried in processions.

CILIARY. adj. [cilium, Lat.] Belonging to the eyelids.

The ciliary processes, or rather the ligaments, observed in the inside of the sclerotic tunics of the eye, do serve instead of a muscle, by the contraction, to alter the figure of the eye. Ray on Creation.

CILICIOUS. adj. [from cilicium, hair-cloth, Lat.] Made of hair.

A garment of camel's hair; that is, made of some texture of that hair, a coarse garment, a cilicious or sackcloth habit, suitable to the austerities of his life. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CIMA. See CYMATIUM.

CIMAR. See SIMAR.

CIME'LIARCH. n. f. [from κεφαλαιάρχης.] The chief keeper of plate, vestments, and things of value belonging to a church; a church-warden. Diët.

CIMETER. n. f. [cimitarra, Span. and Portug. from chimeteir, Turkish. Bluteau's Portuguese Dictionary.] A sort of sword used by the Turks; short; heavy; and recurved, or bent backward. This word is sometimes erroneously spelt scimitar, and scymeter; as in the following examples.

By this scimitar,

That slew the sophy and a Persian prince,

That won three fields of sultan Solyman. Shak. Mer. of Ven.

Our armours now may rust, our idle scymeters

Hang by our sides for ornament, not use. Dryd. Don Sebast.

CINCTURE. n. f. [cinctura, Latin.]

1. Something worn round the body.

Now happy he, whose cloak and cincture

Hold out this tempest. Shakesp. King John.

Columbus found th' American, so girt

With feather'd cincture, naked else, and wild. Milt. Pa. Lost.

He binds the sacred cincture round his breast. Pope's Odyssey.

2. An inclosure.

The court and prison being within the cincture of one wall.

Bacon's Henry VII.

3. [In architecture.] A ring or list at the top and bottom of the shaft of a column; separating the shaft at one end from the base, at the other from the capital. It is supposed to be in imitation of the girths or ferrils anciently used, to strengthen and preserve the primitive wood-columns. Chambers.

CINDER. n. f. [ceindre, Fr. from cineres, Latin.]

1. A mass ignited and quenched, without being reduced to ashes.

I should make very forges of my cheeks,

That would to cinders burn up modesty,

Did but I speak thy deeds. Shakesp. Othello.

There is in smiths cinders, by some adhesion of iron, sometimes to be found a magnetical operation. Brown's Vul. Err.

So snow on Ætna does unmelted lie,

Whose rolling flames and scatter'd cinders fly. Waller.

2. A hot coal that has ceased to flame.

If from adown the hopeful chops

The fat upon a cinder drops,

To stinking smoke it turns the flame. Swift.

CINDER-WENCH. } n. f. [cinder and woman.] A woman

CINDER-WOMAN. } whose trade is to rake in heaps of ashes for cinders.

'Tis under so much nasty rubbish laid,

To find it out's the cinder-woman's trade. Essay on Satire.

She had above five hundred suits of fine cloaths, and yet went abroad like a cinder-wench. Arbuth. Hist. of John Bull.

In the black form of cinder-wench she came,

When love, the hour, the place had banish'd shame. Gay.

CINERATION. n. f. [from cineres, Lat.] The reduction of any thing by fire to ashes. A term of chymistry.

CINERITIOUS.

CINERITIOUS. adj. [cinericius, Lat.] Having the form or state of ashes.

The nerves arise from the glands of the cineritious part of the brain, and are terminated in all the parts of the body.

Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

CINERULENT. adj. [from cineres, Lat.] Full of ashes. Dict.

CINGLE. n. f. [from cingulum, Lat.] A girth for a horse. Dict.

CINNABAR. n. f. [cinnabaris, Latin.] Cinnabar is native or factitious: the factitious cinnabar is called vermilion.

Cinnabar is the ore out of which quicksilver is drawn, and consists partly of a mercurial, and partly of a sulphureo-ochreous matter.

Woodward's Meth. Fossi.

The particles of mercury uniting with the particles of sulphur, compose cinnabar.

Newt. Opt.

CINNABAR of Antimony, is made of mercury, sulphur, and crude antimony.

CINNAMON. n. f. [cinnamomum, Lat.] The fragrant bark of a low tree in the island of Ceylon, possessed by the Dutch, in the East Indies. Its leaves resemble those of the olive, both as to substance and colour. The fruit resembles an acorn or olive, and has neither the smell nor taste of the bark. When boiled in water, it yields an oil, which, as it cools and hardens, becomes as firm and white as tallow; the smell of which is agreeable in candles. The trees are chiefly propagated by a sort of pigeons which feed on the fruit, and, carrying it to their young, drop it where it takes root. Cinnamon is chiefly used in medicine as an astringent. The cinnamon of the ancients was different from ours. Chambers.

Let Araby extol her happy coast,

Her cinnamon and sweet amomum boast. Dryden's Fables.

CINNAMON Water is made by distilling the bark, first infused in barley water, in spirit of wine or white wine. Chambers.

CINQUE. n. f. [Fr.] A Five. It is used in games alone; but is often compounded with other words.

CINQUE-FOIL. n. f. [cinque feuille, Fr.] A kind of five leaved clover.

CINQUE-PACE. n. f. [cinque pas, Fr.] A kind of grave dance.

Wooring, wedding, and repenting is a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque pace. The first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding, mannerly and modest, as a measure, full of state and gravity; and then comes repentance, and, with his bad legs, falls into the cinque pace faster and faster, 'till he sinks into his grave. Shakespeare.

CINQUE-PORTS. n. f. [cinque ports, Fr.]

Those havens that lie towards France, and therefore have been thought by our kings to be such as ought most vigilantly to be observed against invasion. In which respect, the places where they are have a special governour or keeper, called by his office Lord Warden of the cinque ports; and divers privileges granted to them, as a particular jurisdiction, their warden having the authority of an admiral among them, and sending out writs in his own name. The cinque ports are Dover, Sandwich, Rye, Hastings, Winchelsea, Rummey, and Hith; some of which, as the number exceeds five, must either be added to the first institution by some later grant, or accounted as appendants to some of the rest. Cowel.

They, that bear

The cloth of state above her, are four barons

Of the cinque ports. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

CINQUE-SPOTTED. adj. Having five spots.

On her left breast

A mole, cinque spotted, like the crimson drops

I th' bottom of a cowslip. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

CION. n. f. [sion, or scion, French.]

1. A sprout; a shoot from a plant.

We have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbitted lusts; whereof I take this that you call love, to be a sect or cion. Shakespeare. Othello.

The stately Caledonian oak, newly settled in his triumphant throne, begirt with cions of his own royal stem.

Howel's Vocal Forest.

2. The shoot engrafted or inserted on a stock.

The cion over-ruleth the stock quite; and the stock is but passive only, and giveth aliment, but no motion to the graft.

Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 421.

CIPHER. n. f. [chifre, Fr. zifra, Ital. cifra, low Lat. from an oriental root.]

1. An arithmetical character, by which some number is noted; a figure.

2. An arithmetical mark, which, standing for nothing itself, increases the value of the other figures.

Mine were the very cipher of a function,

To find the faults, whose fine stands in record,

And let go by the actor. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.

If the people be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or ciphers in the privation or translation. Bac.

As, in accounts, ciphers and figures pass for real sums, so names pass for things. South's Sermons.

3. An intertexture of letters engraved usually on boxes or plate.

Troy flam'd in burnish'd gold; and o'er the throne,

Arms and the man in golden ciphers shone. Pop. Temp. of F.

Some mingling stir the melted tar, and some

VOL. I.

CIRCINATION. n. f. [circinatio, Lat.] An orbicular motion; a turning round; a measuring with the compasses. Bailey.

CIRCLE. n. f. [circulus, Latin.]

1. A line continued 'till it ends where it begun, having all its parts equidistant from a common center.

Any thing, that moves round about in a circle, in less time than our ideas are wont to succeed one another in our minds, is not perceived to move; but seems to be a perfect intire circle of that matter, or colour, and not a part of a circle in motion. Locke.

Then a deeper still,

In circle following circle, gathers round

To close the face of things. Thomson's Summer:

2. The space included in a circular line.

3. A round body; an orb.

It is he that sitteth upon the circle of the earth. Is. xi. 22.

A great magician,

Obscured in the circle of the forest. Shakes. As you like it.

5. An assembly surrounding the principal person.

To have a box where eunuchs sing,

And, foremost in the circle, eye a king. Pope's Hor. Ep. i.

6. A company; an assembly.

I will call over to him the whole circle of beauties that are disposed among the boxes. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 10.

Ever since that time, Lisander visits in every circle. Tatler.

7. Any series ending as it begins, and perpetually repeated.

There be divers fruit-trees in the hot countries, which have blossoms and young fruit, and young fruit and ripe fruit, almost all the year, succeeding one another; but this circle of ripening cannot be but in succulent plants, and hot countries.

Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 581.

Thus in a circle runs the peasant's pain,

And the year rolls within itself again. Dryd. Virg. Geor.

8. An inconclusive form of argument, in which the foregoing proposition is proved by the following, and the following proposition inferred from the foregoing.

That heavy bodies descend by gravity; and again, that gravity is a quality whereby an heavy body descends, is an impertinent circle, and teacheth nothing. Glanv. Sceps. c. 20.

That fallacy called a circle, is when one of the premisses in a syllogism is questioned and opposed, and we intend to prove it by the conclusion. Watts's Logick.

9. Circumlocution; indirect form of words.

Has he given the lye

In circ's or oblique, or semicircle,

Or direct parallel? You must challenge him. Flet. 2 of Cor.

10. CIRCLES of the German Empire. Such provinces and principalities as have a right to be present at diets. They are in number ten. Trevoux.

To CIRCLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To move round any thing.

The lords that were appointed to circle the hill, had some days before planted themselves in places convenient. Bacon.

Another Cynthia her new journey runs,

And other planets circle other suns. Pope's Dunciad, b. iii.

2. To inclose; to surround.

What stern ungente hands

Have lopp'd and hew'd, and made thy body bare

Of her two branches, those sweet ornaments,

Whose circling shadows kings have sought to sleep in. Shak.

While these fond arms, thus circling you, may prove

More heavy chains than those of hopeless love. Prior.

Unseen, he glided thro' the joyous crowd,

With darkness circled, and an ambient cloud. Pope's Odys.

3. To CIRCLE in. To confine; to keep together.

We term those things dry which have a consistence within themselves, and which, to enjoy a determinate figure, do not require the stop or hindrance of another body to limit and circle them in. Digby on Bodies.

To CIRCLE. v. n. To move circularly; to end where it begins.

The well fraught bowl

Circles incessant; whilst the humble cell

With quavering laugh, and rural jests, resounds. Philips.

Now the circling years disclose

The day predestin'd to reward his woes. Pope's Odyss.

CIR'CLE. adj. [from circle.] Having the form of a circle; round.

Th' inconstant moon,

That monthly changes in her circled orb. Shakesp. R. and J.

CIR'CLE. n. f. [from circle.] A circle; an orb.

His golden circlet in the western shade. Pope's Odyss.

CIR'CLING. participial adj. [from To circle.] Having the form of a circle; circular; round.

Round he surveys, and well might, where he stood

So high above the circling canopy

Of night's extended shade. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

CIRCUIT. n. f. [circuit, Fr. circuitus, Latin.]

1. The act of moving round any thing.

The circuits, in former times, went but round about the pole; as the circuit of the cynosura about the pole. Davies.

There are four moons also perpetually rolling round the planet Jupiter, and carried along with him in his periodical circuit round the sun. Watts's Improvement.

2. The space inclosed in a circle.

He led me up

A woody mountain, whose high top was plain

A circuit wide inclos'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

3. Space; extent; measured by travelling round.

He attributeth unto it smallness, in respect of circuit.

Hooker, b. v. f. 19.

The lake of Bolsena is reckoned one and twenty miles in circuit.

Addison on Italy.

4. A ring; a diadem; that by which any thing is incircled.

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage,

Until the golden circuit on my head

Do calm the fury of this mad-brain'd flaw. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

5. The visitations of the judges for holding assizes.

6. The tract of country visited by the judges.

7. CIRCUIT of Action. In law, is a longer course of proceeding to recover the thing sued for than is needful. Cowel.

Pining with equinoctial heat, unless

The cordial cup perpetual motion keep,

Quick circuiting.

Philips.

CIRCUITEER. n. f. [from circuit.] One that travels a circuit.

Like your fellow circuiteer the sun: you travel the round of the earth, and behold all the iniquities under the heavens. Pope.

CIRCUIT'ION. n. f. [circuitio, Lat.]

1. The act of going round any thing.

2. Compass; maze of argument; comprehension.

To apprehend by what degrees they lean to things in show, though not indeed repugnant one to another, requireth more sharpness of wit, more intricate circutions of discourse, and depth of judgment, than common ability doth yield. Hooker.

CIR'CLAR. adj. [circularis, Latin.]

1. Round, like a circle; circumscribed by a circle.

The frame thereof seem'd partly circular,

And part triangular.

Fairy Queen, b. ii.

He first inclos'd for lists a level ground;

The form was circular.

Dryd. Fables.

Nero's port, compos'd of huge moles running round it, in a kind of circular figure. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

2. Successive in order; always returning.

From whence th' innumerable race of things,

By circular successive order springs.

Roscommon.

3. Vulgar; mean; circumforaneous.

Had Virgil been a circular poet, and closely adhered to history, how could the Romans have had Dido? Dennis.

4. CIR'CLAR Letter. A letter directed to several persons, who have the same interest in some common affair; as in the convocation of assemblies.

5. CIR'CLAR Lines. Such strait lines as are divided from the divisions made in the arch of a circle; as the lines of sines, tangents, and secants on the plain scale and sector.

6. CIR'CLAR Sailing, is that performed on the arch of a great circle.

CIR'CLARITY. n. f. [from circular.] A circular form.

The heavens have no diversity or difference, but a simplicity of parts, and equiformity in motion, continually succeeding each other; so that, from what point soever we compute, the account will be common unto the whole circularity. Brown.

CIR'CLARLY. adj. [from circular.]

1. In form of a circle.

The internal form of it consists of several regions, involving one another like orbs about the same centre, or of the several elements cast circularly about each other. Burnet.

2. With a circular motion.

Trade, which, like blood, should circularly flow,

Stopp'd in their channels, found its freedom lost. Dryden.

Every body moved circularly about any center, recede, or endeavour to recede, from that center of its motion. Ray.

To CIR'CLATE. v. n. [from circulus] To move in a circle;

to run round; to return to the place whence it departed in a constant course.

If our lives motions theirs must imitate,

Our knowledge, like our blood, must circulate. Denham.

Nature is a perpetual motion; and the work of the universe circulates without any interval or repose. L'Estrange.

In the civil wars, the money spent on both sides was circulated at home; no publick debts contracted. Swift.

To CIR'CLATE. v. a. To put about.

CIR'CLATION. n. f. [from circulate.]

1. Motion in a circle; a course in which the motion tends to the point from which it began.

What more obvious, one would think, than the circulation of the blood, unknown 'till the last age? Burnet's Theory.

As much blood passeth through the lungs as through all the rest of the body: the circulation is quicker, and heat greater, and their texture extremely delicate. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. A series in which the same order is always observed, and things always return to the same state.

As for the sins of peace, thou hast brought upon us the miseries of war; so for the sins of war, thou seest fit to deny us the blessing of peace, and to keep us in a circulation of miseries. K. Charles.

God, by the ordinary rule of nature, permits this continual circulation of human things. Swift on Modern Education.

3. A reciprocal interchange of meaning.

When the apostle saith of the Jews, that they crucified the Lord of glory; and when the son of man, being on earth, affirmeth that the son of man was in heaven at the same instant, there is in these two speeches that mutual circulation before mentioned. Hooker, b. v. f. 53.

CIR'CLATORY. n. f. [from circulate.] A chymical vessel, in which that which rises from the vessel on the fire, is collected and cooled in another fixed upon it, and falls down again.

CIR'CLATORY. adj. [from circulate.] Circulatory Letters are the same with CIRCULAR Letters.

CIRCUM'AMBIENCY. n. f. [from circumambient.] The act of encompassing.

Ice receiveth its figure according unto the surface whereof it concreteth, or the circumambiency which conformeth it.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 1.

CIRCUM'AMBIENT. adj. [circum and ambio, Latin.] Surrounding; encompassing; inclosing.

The circumambient coldness towards the sides of the vessel, like the second region, cooling and condensing of it. Wilkins.

To CIRCUM'AMBULATE. v. n. [from circum and ambulo, Lat.] To walk round about.

Diët.

To CIRCUMCISE. v. a. [circumcido, Latin.] To cut the prepuce or foreskin, according to the law given to the Jews.

They came to circumcise the children.

Luke i. 59.

CIRCUMCIS'ION. n. f. [from circumcise.] The rite or act of cutting off the foreskin.

They left a race behind

Like to themselves, distinguishable scarce

From Gentiles, but by circumcision vain. Milt. Par. Reg.

To CIRCUMDU'CT. v. a. [circumduco, Lat.] To contravene; to nullify:

Acts of judicature may be cancelled and circumducted by the will and direction of the judge; as also by the consent of the parties litigant, before the judge has pronounced and given sentence. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CIRCUMDU'CTION. n. f. [from circumduct.]

1. Nullification; cancellation.

The citation may be circumducted, though the defendant should not appear; and the defendant must be cited, as a circumduction requires. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. A leading about.

CIRCUM'FERENCE. n. f. [circumferentia, Latin.]

1. The periphery; the line including and surrounding any thing.

Extend thus far thy bounds,

This be thy just circumference, O world! Milton's Par. Lost.

Because the hero is the center of the main action, all the lines from the circumference tend to him alone. Dryd. Dufres.

A coal of fire, moved nimbly in the circumference of a circle, makes the whole circumference appear like a circle of fire.

Newton's Opticks.

2. The space inclosed in a circle.

So was his will

Pronounc'd among the gods, and by an oath,

That shook heav'n's whole circumference, confirm'd. Milton.

He first inclos'd for lists a level ground,

The whole circumference a mile around. Dryden's Fables.

3. The external part of an orbicular body.

The bubble, being looked on by the light of the clouds reflected from it, seem'd red at its apparent circumference. If the clouds were viewed through it, the colour at its circumference would be blue. Newton's Opticks.

If he is in the city, he must avoid haranguing against circumvention in commerce. Collier of Popularity.

2. Prevention; pre-occupation: this sense is now out of use.

Whatever hath been thought on in this state,

That could be brought to bodily act, ere Rome

Had circumvention. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

- To CIRCUMVEST. v. a. [circumvestio, Lat.] To cover round with a garment.

Who on this base the earth didst firmly found,

And mad'st the deep to circumvest it round. Watton.

- CIRCUMVOLUTION. n. f. [from circumvolvo, Lat.] The act of flying round.

- To CIRCUMVOLVE. v. a. [circumvolvo, Lat.] To roll round; to give a circular motion.

Could solid orbs be accommodated to phænomena, yet to ascribe each sphere an intelligence to circumvolve it, were unphilosophical. Glanv. Scep. c. 20.

- CIRCUMVOLUTION. n. f. [circumvolutus, Lat.]

1. The act of rolling round.

2. The state of being rolled round.

The twisting of the guts is really either a circumvolution, or insertion of one part of the gut within the other. Arbuthnot.

3. The thing rolled round another.

Consider the obliquity or closeness of these circumvolutions; the nearer they are, the higher may be the instrument. Wilk.

- CIRCUS. } n. f. [circus, Latin.] An open space or area for CIRQUE. } sports, with seats round for the spectators.

A pleasant valley, like one of these circuses, which, in great cities somewhere, doth give a pleasant spectacle of running horses. Sidney, b. ii.

The one was about the cirque of Flora, the other upon the Tarpeian mountain. Stillingfleet.

See the cirque falls! th' unpillar'd temple nods;

Streets pav'd with heroes, Tyber choak'd with gods. Pope.

- CIST. n. f. [cista, Latin.] A case; a tegument; commonly used in medicinal language for the coat or inclosure of a tumour.

- CISTED. adj. [from cist.] Inclosed in a cist, or bag.

- CISTERN. n. f. [cisterna, Latin.]

1. A receptacle of water for domestick uses.

'Tis not the rain that waters the whole earth, but that which falls into his own cistern, that must relieve him. South.

2. A reservoir; an inclosed fountain.

Had no part as kindly staid behind,

In the wide cisterns of the lakes confin'd;

Did not the springs and rivers drench the land,

Our globe would grow a wilderness of sand. Blackmore.

3. Any watry receptacle or repository.

So half my Egypt were submerg'd, and made

A cistern for scald snakes. Shakesp. Anthony and Cleopatra.

But there's no bottom; none

In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,

Your matrons and your maids, could not fill up

The cistern of my lust. Shakesp. Macbeth.

- CISTUS. n. f. [Lat.] The name of a plant. The same with Rockrose.

- CIT. n. f. [contracted from citizen.] An inhabitant of a city, in an ill sense. A pert low townsman; a pragmatical trader.

We bring you now to show what different things,

The cits or clowns are from the courts of kings. Johnson.

Study your race, or the foil of your family will dwindle into cits or squires, or run up into wits or madmen. Tatler.

Barnard, thou art a cit, with all thy worth;

But Bug and D—l, their honours, and so forth. Pop. Hor.

- CITADEL. n. f. [citadelle, French.] A fortress; a castle, or place of arms in a city.

As he came to the crown by unjust means, as unjustly he kept it; by force of stranger soldiers in citadels, the nests of tyranny and murderers of liberty. Sidney, b. ii.

I'll to my charge, the citadel, repair. Dryd. Aureng.

- CITAL. n. f. [from cite.]

1. Reproof; impeachment.

He made a blushing cital of himself,

And chid his truant youth. Shakesp. Henry IV. P. i.

2. Summons; citation; call into a court.

3. Quotation; citation.

- CITATION. n. f. [citatio, Latin.]

The calling a person before the judge, for the sake of trying

- trying the cause of action commenced against him. Ayliffe.
2. Quotation; the adduction of any passage from another author; or of another man's words.
  3. The passage or words quoted; a quotation.
The letter-writer cannot read these citations without blushing, after the charge he hath advanced. Atterb. Pref. Serm.
View the principles of parties represented in their own authors, and not in the citations of those who would confute them. Watts's Improvement on the Mind.
  4. Enumeration; mention.
These causes effect a consumption, endemick to this island: there remains a citation of such as may produce it in any country. Harvey on Consumptions.

CITATORY. adj. [from To cite.] Having the power or form of citation.
If a judge cite one to a place, to which he cannot come with safety, he may freely appeal, though an appeal be inhibited in the letters citatory. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To CITE. v. a. [cito, Latin.]

1. To summon to answer in a court.
He held a late court, to which
She oft' was cited by them, but appear'd not. Sh. Hen. VIII.
Forthwith the cited dead
Of all past ages, to the general doom
Shall hasten. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 327.
This power of citing, and dragging the defendant into court, was taken away. Ayliffe's Parergon.
2. To enjoin; to call upon another authoritatively; to direct; summon.
I speak to you, Sir Thurio;
For Valentine, I need not cite him to it. Shakefp.
This sad experience cites me to reveal,
And what I dictate is from what I feel. Prior.

3. To quote.
Demonstrations in scripture, may not otherwise be shewed than by citing them out of the scripture. Hooker, b. ii.
That passage of Plato, which I cited before. Bacon.
In banishment he wrote those verses, which I cite from his letter. Dryden's Dedicat. to Æn.

CITER. n. f. [from cite.]
1. One who cites into a court.
2. One who quotes; a quoter.
I must desire the citer henceforward to inform us of his editions too. Atterbury.

CITESS. n. f. [from cit.] A city woman. A word peculiar to Dryden.

*Cits and citeesses raise a joyful strain;
'Tis a good omen to begin a reign.* Dryd Albion and Alba.

CITHERN. n. f. [cithara, Latin.] A kind of harp; a musical instrument.

At what time the heathen had profaned it, even in that was it dedicated with songs and citherns, and harps and cymbals. 1 Mac. iv. 54.

CITIZEN. n. f. [civis, Lat. citoyen, French.]
1. A freeman of a city; not a foreigner; not a slave.
All inhabitants within these walls are not properly citizens, but only such as are called freemen. Raleigh's Hist. World.

2. A townsman; a man of trade; not a gentleman.
When he speaks not like a citizen,
You find him like a foldier. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. An inhabitant; a dweller in any place.
Far from noisy Rome, secure, he lives;
And one more citizen to Sibyl gives. Dryden's Juvenal.

CITIZEN. adj. [This is only in Shakespeare.] Having the qualities of a citizen; as cowardice, meanness.
So sick I am not, yet I am not well;
But not so citizen a wanton, as
To seem to die ere sick. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

CITRINE. adj. [citrinus, Lat.] Lemon coloured; of a dark yellow.
The Butterfly, papilio major, has its wings painted with citrine and black, both in long streaks and spots. Grew's Mus.
By citrine urine of a thicker consistence, the saltiness of phlegm is known. Floyer on the Humours.

CITRINE. n. f. [from citrinus, Latin.]
A species of crystal of an extremely pure, clear, and fine texture, generally free from flaws and blemishes. It is ever found in a long and slender column, irregularly hexangular, and terminated by an hexangular pyramid. It is from one to four or five inches in length. These crystals are of an extremely beautiful yellow, differing in degrees from that of a strong ochre colour to that of the peel of a lemon; and they have a very elegant brightness and transparency. This stone is very plentiful in the West Indies. Our jewellers have learned from the French and Italians to call it citrine; and often cut stones for rings out of it, which are generally mistaken for topazes. Hill on Fossils.

CITRON-TREE. n. f. [from citrus, Latin.]
It hath broad stiff leaves, like those of the laurel. The flowers consist of many leaves, expanded like a rose: the cup of the flower is slender and fleshy, and is divided into five segments at the top. The pistil becomes an oblong, thick, fleshy fruit, which is very full of juice, and contains several hard seeds. Genoa is the great nursery of Europe for these sorts of trees. One sort, with a pointed fruit, is in so great esteem, that the single fruits are sold at Florence for two shillings each. This fruit is not to be had in perfection in any part of Italy, but the plain between Pisa and Leghorn. Miller.

May the sun
With citron groves adorn a distant soil. Addison.
CITRON-WATER. n. f. Aqua vitæ, distilled with the rind of citrons.

Like citron-waters matrons cheeks inflame. Pope.
CITRUL. n. f. The same with pumpion, so named from its yellow colour.

CITY. n. f. [citê, French, civitas, Latin.]

1. A large collection of houses and inhabitants.
Men seek their safety from number better united, and from walls and other fortifications; the use whereof is to make the few a match for the many, and this is the original of cities. Temple.

City, in a strict and proper sense, means the houses inclosed within the walls: in a larger sense it reaches to all the suburbs. Watts's Logick.

2. In the English law.
A town corporate, that hath a bishop and a cathedral church. Cowel.

3. The inhabitants of a certain city, as distinguished from other subjects.

What is the city but the people? —
— True, the people are the city. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
I do suspect I have done some offence,
That seems disgracious in the city's eye. Shakefp. Rich. III.

CITY. adj.

1. Relating to the city.
His enforcement of the city wives. Shakefp. Richard III.
He, I accuse,

The city ports by this hath enter'd. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

2. Resembling the manners of the citizens.
Make not a city feast of it, to let the meat cool ere we can agree upon the first cut. Shakespeare's Timon.

CIVET. n. f. [civette, Fr. zibetta, Arabic, signifying scent.] A perfume from the civet cat.

The civet, or civet cat, is a little animal, not unlike our cat, excepting that his snout is more pointed, his claws less dangerous, and his cry different. It is a native of the Indies, Peru, Brasil, Guinea. The perfume is formed like a kind of grease, or thick scum, in an aperture or bag under its tail, between the anus and pudendum. It is gathered from time to time, and abounds in proportion as the animal is fed. It is much used by perfumers and confectioners; but seldom prescribed in medicine. Trevoux.

Civet is of a baser birth than tar: the very uncleanly flux of a cat. Shakespeare's As you like it.

He rubs himself with civet: can you smell him out by that? Shakespeare's Much ado about Nothing.

Some putrefactions and excrements do yield excellent odours; as civet and musk, and, as some think, amber-grease. Bacon's Natural History.

CIVICK. adj. [civicus, Latin.] Relating to civil honours or practices; not military.

With equal rays immortal Tully shone:
Behind, Rome's genius waits with civick crowns,
And the great father of his country owns. Pop. Tem. of Fame.

CIVIL. adj. [civilis, Latin.]

1. Relating to the community; political; relating to the city or government.

CLA'RY. n. f. An herb.

It hath a labiated flower of one leaf, whose upper lip is short and crested; but the under one is divided into three parts: the middle division is hollowed like a spoon. Out of the flower-cup arises the pointal, fixed like a nail to the hinder part of the flower, and attended with four embryo's, which turn to so many roundish seeds, inclosed in the cup of the flower. It grows wild on dry banks. Miller.

Plants that have circled leaves do all abound with moisture.

The weakest kind of curling is roughness; as in clary and burr. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 651.

To CLASH. v. n. [kletsen, Dut. to make a noise.]

1. To make a noise by mutual collision; to strike one against another.

Three times, as of the clashing sound

Of arms, we heard. Denham.

Those few that should happen to clash, might rebound after the collision; or if they cohered, yet, by the real conflict with other atoms, might be separated again. Bentley.

How many candles may send out their light, without clashing upon one another; which argues the smallness of the parts of light, and the largeness of the interstices between particles of air and other bodies. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

2. To act with opposite power, or contrary direction.

Neither was there any queen-mother who might clash with his counsellors for authority. Bacon's Henry VIII.

Those that will not be convinced what a help this is to the magistracy, would find it, if they should chance to clash.

South's Sermons.

3. To contradict; oppose.

Wherever there are men, there will be clashing sometime or other; and a knock, or a contest, spoils all. L'Estrange.

The absurdity in this instance is obvious; and yet every time that clashing metaphors are put together, this fault is committed. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 595.

To CLASH. v. a. To strike one thing against another, so as to produce a noise.

The nodding statue clash'd his arms,

And with a fullen sound and feeble cry,

Half sunk, and half pronounced the word of victory. Dryd.

CLASH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A noisy collision of two bodies.

The clash of arms and voice of men we hear. Denham.

The haste of the spirit to put forth, and the closeness of the bark cause prickles in boughs. Bacon's Nat. History, N<sup>o</sup>. 559.

5. Recluseness; solitude; retirement.

I thus neglecting worldly ends, all dedicated

To closeness, and the bettering of my mind. Shakesp. Tempest.

6. Secrecy; privacy.

To his confederates he was constant and just, but not open.

VOL. I.

Such was his enquiry, and such his closeness, as they stood in the light towards him, and he stood in the dark towards them. Bacon's Henry VII.

A journey of much adventure had been not communicated with any of his majesty's counsellors, being carried with great closeness, liker a business of love than state. Wotton.

We rise not against the piercing judgment of Augustus, nor the extreme caution or closeness of Tiberius. Bacon's Essays.

This prince was so very reserved, that he would impart his secrets to no body: whereupon this closeness did a little perish his understanding. Collier of Friendship.

7. Covetousness; sly avarice.

Irus judged, that while he could keep his poverty a secret, he should not feel it: he improved this thought into an affectation of closeness and covetousness. Addison's Spectat. N<sup>o</sup>. 264.

8. Connection; dependance.

The actions and proceedings of wise men run in a much greater closeness and coherence with one another, than thus to drive at a casual issue, brought under no forecast or design. South's Sermons.

CLO'SER. n. f. [from close.] A finisher; a concluder.

CLO'SESTOOL. n. f. [close and stool.] A chamber implement.

A CLOUD. n. s. [The derivation is not known. Minshew derives it from claudo, to shut; Somner from clod; Casaubin from αχλὺς, darkness; Skinner from kladde, Dutch, a spot.]

1. The dark collection of vapours in the air.

Now are the clouds that lower'd upon our house,

In the deep bosom of the ocean buried. Shakesp. Rich. III.

As a mist is a multitude of small but solid globules, which therefore descend; so a vapour, and therefore a watry cloud, is nothing else but a congeries of very small and concave globules, which therefore ascend, to that height in which they are of equal weight with the air, where they remain suspended, 'till, by some motion in the air, being broken, they descend in solid drops; either small, as in a mist, or bigger, when many of them run together, as in rain. Grew's Cosmol.

Clouds are the greatest and most considerable of all the meteors, as furnishing water and plenty to the earth. They consist of very small drops of water, and are elevated a good distance above the surface of the earth; for a cloud is nothing but a mist flying high in the air, as a mist is nothing but a cloud here below. Locke's Elem. Nat. Philos.

How vapours, turn'd to clouds, obscure the sky;

And clouds, dissolv'd, the thirsty ground supply. Roscommon.

2. The veins, marks, or stains in stones, or other bodies.

3. Any state of obscurity or darkness.

Tho' poets may of inspiration boast,

Their rage, ill govern'd, in the clouds is lost. Waller.

How can I see the brave and young,

Fall in the cloud of war, and fall unsung? Addison.

4. Any thing that spreads wide; as a croud, a multitude.

The objection comes to no more than this, that amongst a cloud of witnesses, there was one of no very good reputation. Atterbury.

What fullen fury clouds his scornful brow. Pope's Statius.

2. To obscure; to make less evident.

If men would not exhale vapours to cloud and darken the clearest truths, no man could miss his way to heaven for want of light. Decay of Piety.

3. To variegate with dark veins.

The handle smooth and plain,

Made of the clouded olive's easy grain. Pope's Odyssey.

To CLOUD. v. n. To grow cloudy; to grow dark with clouds.

CLO'UDBERRY. n. s. [from cloud and berry.] The name of a plant, called also knotberry.

It hath a perpetual flower: the fruit is composed of many acini, in form of the mulberry. This plant is found upon the tops of the highest hills in the North of England. Miller.

CLOUDCAPT. adj. [from cloud and cap.] Topped with clouds; touching the clouds.

The cloudcapt towers, the gorgeous palaces,

The solemn temples, the great globe itself,

Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve. Shakesp. Tempest.

CLOUDCOMPELLING. adj. [A word formed in imitation of νεφεληγεγετης, ill understood.] An epithet of Jupiter, by whom clouds were supposed to be collected.

Health to both kings, attended with a roar

Of cannons, echo'd from th' affrighted shore;

With loud resemblance of his thunder, prove

Bacchus the seed of cloudcompelling Jove. Waller.

Supplicating move

Thy just complaint to cloudcompelling Jove. Dryd. Homer.

CLO'UDILY. adv. [from cloudy.]

1. With clouds; darkly.

As Moses entered into the tabernacle, the cloudy pillar descended, and stood at the door. Exod. xxxiii. 9.

2. Dark; obscure; not intelligible.

If you content yourself frequently with words instead of ideas, or with cloudy and confused notions of things, how impenetrable will that darkness be. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.

3. Gloomy of look; not open, nor cheerful.

So my storm-beaten heart likewise is cheer'd

With that sun-shine, when cloudy looks are clear'd. Spenser.

Witness my son, now in the shade of death,

Whose bright outshining beams thy cloudy wrath

Hath in eternal darkness folded up. Shakesp. Richard III.

4. Marked with spots or veins.

CLOVE. n. s. [the preterite of cleave.] See To CLEAVE.

CLOVE. n. s. [clou, Fr. a nail, from the similitude of a clove to a nail.]

1. A valuable spice brought from Ternate in the East Indies. It is the fruit or seed of a very large tree.

Clove seems to be the rudiment or beginning of a fruit growing upon clove-trees. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.

2. Some of the parts into which garlick separates, when the outer skin is torn off.

'Tis mortal sin an onion to devour;

Each clove of garlick is a sacred pow'r. Tate's Juven. Sat.

CLOVE-GILLYFLOWER. n. s. [from its smelling like cloves.]

This

C L O

This plant hath an intire, oblong, cylindrical, smooth cup, which is indented at the top: the petals of the flower are narrow at bottom, and broad at top; and are, for the most part, cut about the edges. The seed-vessel is of a cylindrical figure, containing many flat rough seeds. This genus may be divided into three classes: 1. The clove-gillyflower, or carnation. 2. The pink. 3. The sweet William. The carnation, or clove-gillyflower, are distinguished into four classes. The first, called flakes, having two colours only, and their stripes large, going quite through the leaves. The second, called bizars, have flowers striped, or variegated with three or four different colours. The third are piquettes: these flowers have always a white ground, and are spotted with scarlet, red, purple, or other colours. The fourth are called painted ladies: these have their petals of a red or purple colour on the upper side, and are white underneath. Of each of these classes there are numerous varieties. The true clove-gillyflower has been long in use for making a cordial syrup. There are two or three varieties commonly brought to the markets, which differ greatly in goodness; some having very little scent, when compared with the true sort. The varieties of the pink are; the damask pink; white shock, scarlet, pheasant-eyed pink, of which there are great varieties, both with single and double flowers; old man's head; painted lady. Among the sweet Williams are, 1. The broad-leaved sweet William, with red flowers. 2. The broad-leaved sweet William, with variegated flowers. 3. The double sweet William, with red flowers, which burst their pods. 4. The rose-coloured double sweet William. 5. The narrow-leaved sweet William, called sweet John. Miller.

Crytal is a mineral body, in the difference of stones, made of a lentous percolation of earth, drawn from the most pure and limpid juice thereof, owing to the coldness of the earth some concurrence and coadjuvancy, but not immediate determination and efficiency.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b ii.

COADUNITION. n. f. [from con, ad, unitio, Lat.] The conjunction of different substances into one mass.

Bodies seem to have an intrinsic principle of, or corruption from, the coadunion of particles endued with contrary qualities.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To COAGMENT. v. a. [from con and agmen, Lat.] To congregate or heap together. I have only found the participle in use.

Had the world been coagmented from that supposed fortuitous jumble, this hypothesis had been tolerable.

Glanv. Sceps. c. 20.

COAGMENTATION. n. f. [from coagment] Collection, or co-cervation into one mass; union; conjunction.

The third part rests in the well joining, cementing, and coagmentation of words, when it is smooth, gentle, and sweet.

Benj. Johnson's Discoveries.

COAGULABLE. adj. [from coagulate.] That which is capable of concretion.

Stones that are rich in vitriol, being often drenched with rain-water, the liquor will then extract a fine and transparent substance, coagulable into vitriol.

Boyle's Scept. Chym.

VOL. I.

To COAGULATE. v. a. [coagulo, Lat.] To force into concretions; as, by the affusion of some other substance, to turn milk.

Roasted in wrath and fire,

And thus o'erfiz'd with coagulate gore. Shakep. Hamlet.

Vivification ever consisteth in spirits attenuate, which the cold doth congeal and coagulate. Bacon's Nat. History, N<sup>o</sup>. 836.

Bitumen is found in lumps, or coagulated masses, in some springs.

Woodward's Natural History.

The milk in the stomach of calves, which is coagulated by the runnet, is again dissolved and rendered fluid by the gall in the duodenum.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To COAGULATE. v. n. To run into concretions, or congelations.

Spirit of wine commixed with milk, a third part spirit of wine, and two parts milk, coagulateth little, but mingleth; and the spirit swims not above.

Bacon's Phys. Rem.

About the third part of the oil olive, which was driven over into the receiver, did there coagulate into a whitish body, almost like butter.

Boyle's History of Fluidity.

COAGULATION. n. f. [from coagulate.]

1. Concretion; congelation; the act of coagulating; the state of being coagulated.

2. The body formed by coagulation.

As the substance of coagulations is not merely saline, nothing dissolves them but what penetrates and relaxes at the same time.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

COAGULATIVE. adj. [from coagulate.] That which has the power of causing concretion, or coagulation.

And to manifest yet further the coagulative power of them, we have sometimes in a minute arrested the fluidity of new milk, and turned it into a curdled substance, only by dexterously mingling with it a few drops of good oil of vitriol.

Boyle's History of Firmness.

COAGULATOR. n. f. [from coagulate.] That which causes coagulation.

Coagulators of the humours are those things which expel the most fluid parts, as in the case of incrassating, or thickening; and by those things which suck up some of the fluid parts, as absorbents.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

COAL. n. f. [col, Sax. kol, Germ. kole, Dut. kul, Danish.]

1. The common fossil fewel.

Coal is a black, sulphurous, inflammatory matter, dug out of the earth, serving for fewel. It is ranked among the minerals, and is common in Europe, though the English coal is of most repute. One species of pit-coal is called canal, or canole coal, which is found in the northern counties; and is hard, glossy and light, apt to cleave into thin flakes, and, when kindled, yields a continual blaze till it be burnt out.

Chambers.

Coals are solid, dry, opaque, inflammable substances, found in large strata, splitting horizontally more easily than in any other direction; of a glossy hue, soft and friable, not fusible, but easily inflammable, and leaving a large residuum of ashes.

Hill on Fossils.

But age, enforced, falls by her own consent;

As coals to ashes, when the spirit's spent.

Denham.

We shall meet with the same mineral lodged in coals, that elsewhere we found in marle.

Woodward's Nat. History.

2. The cinder of burnt wood, charcoal.

Whatsoever doth so alter a body, as 'it returneth not again to that it was, may be called alteratio major; as when cheese is made of curds, or coals of wood, or bricks of earth.

Bacon.

3. Fire; any thing inflamed or ignited.

You are no surer, no,

Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,

Or hailstones in the sun.

Shakep. Coriolanus.

The rage of jealousy then fir'd his soul,

And his face kindled like a burning coal.

Dryd. Fables.

You

Have blown this coal betwixt my lord and me. Sh. H. VIII.

To COAL. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To burn wood to charcoal.

Add the tinner's care and cost, in buying the wood for this service, felling, framing, and piling it to be burnt; in fetching the same when it is coaled, through such far, foul, and cumbersome ways.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

2. To delineate with a coal.

Marvailing, he coaled out rhimes upon the wall, near to the picture.

Camden's Remains.

COAL-BLACK. adj. [coal and black.] Black in the highest degree; of the colour of a coal.

As burning Ætna, from his boiling stew,

Doth belch out flames, and rocks in pieces broke,

And ragged ribs of mountains molten new,

Enwrapt in coal-black clouds and filthy smoak. Fairy Queen.

Ethiopians and negroes become coal-black from fuliginous efflorescencies, and complectional tinctures.

Brown's Vul. Err.

Coal-black his colour, but like jet it shone;

His legs and flowing tail were white alone.

Dryden.

COAL-BOX. n. f. [coal and box.] A box to carry coals to the fire.

Leave a pail of dirty water, a coal-box, a bottle, a broom, and such other unsightly things. Swift.

COAL-MINE. n. f. [coal and mine.] A mine in which coals are dug; a coal-pit.

Springs are injurious to land, that flow from coalmines.

COAL-PIT. n. f. [from coal and pit.] A pit made in the earth, generally to a great depth, for digging coals.

A leaf of the polypody kind, found in the sinking of a coal-pit. Woodward on Fossils.

COAL-STONE. n. f. [coal and stone.] A sort of cannel coal. See COAL.

Coal-stone flames easily, and burns freely; but holds and endures the fire much longer than coal. Woodward on Fossils.

COAL-WORK. n. f. [coal and work.] A coalery; a place where coals are found.

There is a vast treasure in the old English, from whence authors may draw constant supplies; as our officers make their surest remits from the coal-works and the mines. Felton.

CO'ALERY. n. f. [from coal.] A place where coals are dug.

Two fine stalactitæ were found hanging from a black stone, at a deserted vault in Benwell coalery. Woodward on Fossils.

To COALESCE. v. n. [coalesco, Latin.]

1. To unite in masses by a spontaneous approximation to each other.

When vapours are raised, they hinder not the transparency of the air, being divided into parts too small to cause any reflection in their superficies; but when they begin to coalesce, and constitute globules, those globules become of a convenient size to reflect some colours. Newton's Opt.

2. To grow together; to join.

COALES'SCENCE. n. f. [from coalesce.] The act of coalescing; concretion; union.

COALITION. n. f. [from coalesco coalitum, Latin.] Union in one mass or body; conjunction of separate parts in one whole.

The world's a mass of heterogeneous consistences, and every part thereof a coalition of distinguishable varieties. Glanv. Scept.

In the first coalition of a people, their prospect is not great: they provide laws for their present exigence and convenience.

Hale's Common Law of England.

'Tis necessary that these squandered atoms should convene and unite into great masses: without such a coalition the chaos must have reigned to all eternity. Bentley.

CO'ALY. adj. [from coal.] Containing coal.

Or coaly Tine, or ancient hallow'd Dee. Milton.

COAPTATION. n. f. [from con and apto, Lat.] The adjustment of parts to each other.

In a clock the hand is moved upon the dial, the bell is struck, and the other actions belonging to the engine are performed by virtue of the size, shape, bigness, and coaptation of the several parts. Boyle's Scep. Chym.

The same method makes both prose and verse beautiful, which consists in the judicious coaptation and ranging of the words. Broome on the Odyssey.

To COARCT. v. a. [coarcto, Latin.]

1. To straighten; to confine into a narrow compass.

2. To contract power.

If a man coarcts himself to the extremity of an act, he must blame and impute it to himself, that he has thus coarcted or frightened himself so far. Ayliffe's Parergon.

COARCTATION. n. f. [from coarct.]

1. Confinement; restraint to a narrow space.

The greatest winds, if they have no coarctation, or blow not hollow, give an interior sound. Bacon's Nat. History.

2. Contraction of any space.

Straighten the artery never so much, provided the sides of it do not meet, the vessel will continue to beat below, or beyond the coarctation. Ray on the Creation.

3. Restraint of liberty.

Election is opposed not only to coaction, but also to coarctation, or determination to one. Bramb. against Hobbs.

COARSE. adj.

1. Not refined; not separated from impurities or baser parts.

I feel

Of what coarse metal ye are molded. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

2. Not soft or fine: used of cloath, of which the threads are large.

3. Rude; uncivil; rough of manners.

4. Gross; not delicate.

'Tis not the coarser tye of human law

That binds their peace.

Thomson's Spring.

5. Inelegant; rude; unpolished.

Praise of Virgil is against myself, for presuming to copy, in my coarse English, his beautiful expressions. Dryd. Æn.

6. Unaccomplished; unfinished by art or education.

Practical rules may be useful to such as are remote from advice, and to coarse practitioners, which they are obliged to make use of. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

7. Mean; not nice; not elegant; vile.

Ill comfort, and a coarse perfume,

Disgrace the delicacy of a feast.

Roscommon.

A coarse and uselefs dunghill weed,

Fix'd to one spot, to rot just as it grows. Otway's Orphan.

From this coarse mixture of terrestrial parts,

Desire and fear by turns possess their hearts. Dryden's Æn.

CO'ARSELY. adv. [from coarse.]

1. Without fineness; without refinement.

2. Meanly; not elegantly.

John came neither eating nor drinking, but fared coarsely and poorly, according to the apparel he wore. Br. Vul. Err.

3. Rudely; not civilly.

The good cannot be too much honoured, nor the bad too coarsely used. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

4. Inelegantly.

Be pleased to accept the rudiments of Virgil's poetry, coarsely translated; but which yet retains some beauties of the author. Dryden's Virgil, Dedication.

CO'ARSENESS. n. f. [from coarse.]

1. Impurity; unrefined state.

First know the materials whereof the glass is made; then consider what the reason is of the coarseness or dearness. Bacon.

2. Roughness; want of fineness.

3. Grossness; want of delicacy.

'Tis with friends (pardon the coarseness of the illustration) as with dogs in couples; they should be of the same size. L'Estrange, Fable 25.

4. Roughness; rudeness of manners.

A base wild olive he remains;

The shrub the coarseness of the clown retains. Garth's Ovid.

5. Meanness; want of nicety.

Consider the penuriousness of the Hollanders, the coarseness of their food and raiment, and their little indulgences of pleasure. Addison on the War.

COAST. n. f. [coste, Fr. costa, Latin.]

1. The edge or margin of the land next the sea; the shore. It is not used for the banks of less waters.

He sees in English ships the Holland coast. Dryden.

2. It seems to be taken by Newton for side, like the French coste.

Some kind of virtue, lodged in some sides of the crystal, inclines and bends the rays towards the coast, of unusual refraction; otherwise the rays would not be refracted towards that coast rather than any other coast, both at their incidence and at their emergence, so as to emerge by a contrary situation of the coast. Newton's Opt.

3. The COAST is clear. A proverbial expression. The danger is over; the enemies have marched off.

Going out, and seeing that the coast was clear, Zelmane dismissed Musidorus. Sidney.

The royal spy, when now the coast was clear,

Sought not the garden, but retir'd unseen. Dryden.

To COAST. v. n. [from the noun.] To sail close by the coast; to sail within sight of land.

But steer my vessel with a steady hand,

And coast along the shore in sight of land. Dryden's Virgil.

The antients coasted only in their navigation, seldom taking the open sea. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To COAST. v. a. To sail by; to sail near to.

Nearchus, the admiral of Alexander, not knowing the compass, was fain to coast that shore. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

The greatest entertainment we found in coasting it, were the several prospects of woods, vineyards, meadows, and corn-fields which lie on the borders of it. Addison on Italy.

CO'ASTER. n. f. [from coast.] He that sails timorously near the shore.

In our small skiff we must not launch too far;

We here but coasters, not discov'ers are. Dryd. Tyrant. Love.

COAT. n. f. [cotte, Fr. cotta, Italian.]

1. The upper garment.

He was armed with a coat of mail, and the weight of the coat was five thousand shekels of brass. 1 Sam. xvi. 5.

The coat of many colours they brought to their father, and said, this have we found: know now whether it be thy son's coat or no. Gen. xxxvii. 30.

2. Petticoat; the habit of a boy in his infancy; the lower part of a woman's dress.

A friend's younger son, a child in coats, was not easily brought to his book. Locke.

3. The habit or vesture, as demonstrative of the office.

For his intermeddling with arms, he is the more excuseable, because many of his coat, in those times, are not only martial directors, but commanders. Howel's Vocal Forrest.

Men of his coat should be minding their pray'rs,

And not among ladies, to give themselves airs. Swift.

4. The hair or fur of a beast; the covering of any animal.

He clad

Their nakedness with skins of beasts; or slain,

Or, as the snake, with youthful coat repaid;

And thought not much to clothe his enemies. Milton.

Give your horse some powder of brimstone in his oats, and it will make his coat lie fine. Mortimer's Husbandry.

You have given us milk

In luscious streams, and lent us your own coat

Against the winter's cold.

Thomson's Spring.

C O B

5. Any tegument; tunick; or covering.

The eye is defended with four coats or skins. Peacham.

The optick nerves have their medullary parts terminating in the brain, their teguments terminating in the coats of the eye. Derham's Physico-Theology.

Amber is a nodule, invested with a coat, called rock-amber. Woodward on Fossils.

6. That on which the ensigns armorial are portrayed.

The herald of love's mighty king,

In whose coat armour richly are display'd
All sorts of flowers the which on earth do spring. Spenser.

Cropp'd are the flower-de-luces in your arms;

Of England's coat one half is cut away. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

At each trumpet was a banner bound,

Which, waving in the wind, display'd at large

Their master's coat of arms and knightly charge. Dryden.

To COAT. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover; to invest; to overspread: as, to coat a retort; to coat a ceiling.

To COAX. v. a. To wheedle; to flatter; to humour. A low word.

The nurse had changed her note; for she was then muzzling and coaxing the child; that's a good dear, says she. L'Estrange.

I coax! I wheedle! I'm above it. Farquhar's Re. r. Officer.

COAXER. n. f. [from the verb] A wheedler; a flatterer.

COB. A word often used in the composition of low terms; corrupted from cop, Sax. kopf, Germ. the head or top.

COB. n. f. A sort of sea-fowl; called also sea-cob. Philips.

CO'BALT. n. f. A marcasite frequent in Saxony.

Cobalt is plentifully impregnated with arsenick; contains copper and some silver. Being sublimed, the flores are of a blue colour: these German mineralists call zaffir. Woodward.

Cobalt is a dense, compact, and ponderous mineral, very bright and shining, and much resembling some of the antimonial ores. It is found in Germany, Saxony, Bohemia, and England; but ours is a poor kind. From cobalt are produced the three sorts of arsenick, white, yellow, and red; as also zaffre and smalt. Hill on Fossils.

To COBBLE. v. a. [kobler, Danish.]

1. To mend any thing coarsely: used generally of shoes.

If you be out, sir, I can mend you.—Why, sir, cobble you. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

They'll fit by th' fire, and presume to know

What's done i' th' capitol; making parties strong,

And feeble such as stand not in their liking,

Below their cobb'd shoes. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Many underlayers, when they could not live upon their trade, have raised themselves from cobbling to fluxing. L'Estr.

2. To do or make any thing clumsily, or unhandily.

Reject the nauseous praises of the times:

Give thy base poets back their cobbled rhimes. Dryden.

Believe not that the whole universe is mere bungling and blundering, nothing effected for any purpose or design, but all ill-favouredly cobbled and jumbled together. Bentley.

CO'BBLER. n. f. [from cobble]

1. A mender of old shoes.

Not many years ago it happened that a cobbler had the casting vote for the life of a criminal. Addison on Italy.

2. A clumsy workman in general.

What trade are you?—

Truly, sir, in respect of a fine workman, I am but, as you would say, a cobbler. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

3. In a kind of proverbial sense, any mean person.

Think you the great prerogative t' enjoy

Of doing ill, by virtue of that race;

As if what we esteem in cobblers base,

Would the high family of Brutus grace. Dryd. Juv.

CO'BIRONS. n. f. [cob and iron.] Irons with a knob at the upper end.

The implements of the kitchen; as spits, ranges, cobirons, and pots. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

COBISHOP. n. f. [con and bishop.] A coadjutant bishop.

Valerius, advanced in years, and a Grecian by birth, not qualified to preach in the Latin tongue, made use of Austin as a cobishop, for the benefit of the church of Hippo. Ayliffe.

CO'BNUT. n. f. [cob and nut.]

1. See HAZEL, of which it is a species.

2. A boy's game; the conquering nut.

CO'BSWAN. n. f. [cob, head, and swan.] The head or leading swan.

I'm not taken

With a cobswan, or a high-mounting bull,

As foolish Leda and Europa were. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

CO'BWEB. n. f. [kopweb, Dutch.]

1. The web or net of a spider.

The luckless Clarion,

With violent swift flight, forth carried

Into the cursed cobweb, which his foe

Had framed for his final overthrow. Spenser.

Is supper ready, the house trimmed, rushes strewed, and cobwebs swept. Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

The spider went into the house of a burgher, and fell presently to her net-work of drawing cobwebs up and down. L'Estrange's Fables.

C O C

2. Any snare, or trap; implying insidiousness and weakness.

For he a rope of sand could twist,

As tough as learned Sorbonist;

And weave fine cobwebs fit for scull

That's empty, when the moon is full. Hudibras, p. ii.

Chronology at best is but a cobweb law, and he broke through it with his weight. Dryden's Dedicat. An.

Laws are like cobwebs, which may catch small flies; but let wasps and hornets break through. Swift.

CO'COA. n. f. See CACAO.

COCCI'FEROUS. adj. [from coccus, and fero, Lat.] All plants or trees are so called that have berries. Quincy.

CO'CHINEAL. n. f. [cochinilla, Span. a woodlouse.]

An insect gathered upon the opuntia, and dried; from which a beautiful red colour is extracted. Hill.

CO'CHLEARY. adj. [from cochlea, Lat. a screw.] Screwform; in the form of a screw.

That at St. Dennis, near Paris, hath wreathy spires, and cochleary turnings about it, which agreeth with the description of the unicorn's horn in Ælian. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CO'CHLEATED. adj. [from cochlea, Lat.] Of a screwed or turbinated form.

Two pieces of stone, struck forth of the cavity of the umbilici of shells, of the same sort with the foregoing: they are of a cochleated figure. Woodward on Fossils.

COCK. n. f. [cocc, Saxon; coq, French.]

1. The male to the hen; a domestick fowl, remarkable for his gallantry, pride, and courage.

Cocks have great combs and spurs; hens, little or none. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 85.

True cocks o' th' game,

That never ask for what, or whom, they fight;

But turn 'em out, and shew 'em but a foe,

Cry liberty, and that's a cause of quarrel. Dryd. Span. Fryar.

The careful hen

Calls all her chirping family around,

Fed and defended by the fearless cock. Thomson's Spring.

2. The male of any small birds.

He was confirmed in this by observing, that calves and philosophers, tygers and statesmen, cock sparrows and coquets, exactly resemble one another in the formation of the pineal gland. Arbuth. and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

3. The weathercock, that shews the direction of the wind by turning.

You cataracts and hurricanoes spout,

'Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the cocks!

Shakespeare's King Lear.

4. A spout to let out water at will, by turning the stop.

When every room

Hath blaz'd with lights, and bray'd with minstrelsy,

I have retir'd me to a wasteful cock,

And set mine eyes at flow. Shakespeare's Timon.

It were good there were a little cock made in the belly of the upper glass. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 16.

Thus the small jett, which hasty hands unlock,

Spirts in the gard'ner's eyes who turns the cock. Pope's Dunc.

5. The notch of an arrow.

6. The part of the lock of a gun that strikes with the flint. [From cocca, Ital. the notch of an arrow. Skinner. Perhaps from the action, like that of a cock pecking.]

With hasty rage he snatch'd

His gunshot, that in holsters watch'd,

And bending cock, he levell'd full

Against th' outside of Talgol's skull. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.

A seven-shot gun carries powder and bullets for seven charges and discharges. Under the breech of the barrel is one box for the powder; a little before the lock another for the bullets; behind the cock a charger, which carries the powder from the box to a funnel at the further end of the lock. Grew.

7. A conquerour; a leader; a governing man.

Sir Andrew is grown the cock of the club since he left us. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 130.

My schoolmaster call'd me a dunce and a fool;

But at cuffs I was always the cock of the school. Swift.

8. Cockcrowing; a note of the time in a morning.

We were carousing 'till the second cock. Shakesp. Macbeth.

He begins at curfew, and goes 'till the first cock. Shakesp.

9. A cockboat; a small boat.

They take view of all sized cocks, barges, and fisherboats hovering on the coast. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

The fishermen that walk upon the beach,

Appear like mice; and yond tall anchoring bark,

Diminish'd to her cock; her cock, a buoy,

Almost too small for sight. Shakesp. King Lear.

10. A small heap of hay. [Properly cop.]

As soon as the dew is off the ground spread the hay again, and turn it, that it may wither on the other side: then handle it, and, if you find it dry, make it up into cocks. Mortimer.

11. The form of a hat. [From the comb of the cock.]

You may see many a smart rhetorician turning his hat in in his hands, moulding it into several different cocks.

Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 408.

12. The style or gnomon of a dial. Chambers.

13. The needle of a balance.

14. Cock on the Hoop. Triumphant; exulting.

Now I am a frisker, all men on me look;

What should I do but set cock on the hoop? Camden's Remains.

You'll make a mutiny among my guests!

You will set cock a hoop! Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

For Hudibras, who thought h' had won

The field, as certain as a gun,

And having routed the whole troop,

With victory was cock a hoop. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 3.

To COCK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To set erect; to hold bolt upright, as a cock holds his head.

This is that muscle which performs the motion so often mentioned by the Latin poets, when they talk of a man's cocking his nose, or playing the rhinoceros. Addison's Spect.

Our Lightfoot barks, and cocks his ears;

O'er yonder stile see Lubberkin appears. Gay's Pastorals.

Dick would cock his nose in scorn,

But Tom was kind and loving. Swift.

2. To set up the hat with an air of petulance and pertness.

Dick, who thus long had passive fat,

Here strok'd his chin and cock'd his hat. Prior.

An alert young fellow cock'd his hat upon a friend of his who entered. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 403.

3. To mould the form of the hat.

4. To fix the cock of a gun ready for a discharge.

Some of them holding up their pistols cocked, near the door of the house, which they kept open. Dryd. Dedicat. Æn.

5. To raise hay in small heaps.

Sike mirth in May is meetest for to make,

Or summer shade, under the cocked hay. Spenser's Pastorals.

To COCK. v. n.

1. To strut; to hold up the head, and look big, or menacing, or pert.

Sir Fopling is a fool so nicely writ,

The ladies would mistake him for a wit;

And when he sings, talks loud, and cocks, would cry,

I vow, methinks, he's pretty company. Dryden.

Every one cocks and struts upon it, and pretends to overlook us. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 108.

2. To train or use fighting cocks.

Cries out 'gainst cocking, since he cannot bet. B. Johnson.

COCK, in composition, signifies small or little.

COCKADE. n. f. [from cock.] A ribband worn in the hat.

A COCKATRICE. n. f. [from cock and atzen, Sax, a serpent.]

A serpent supposed to rise from a cock's egg.

They will kill one another by the look, like cockatrices.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

This was the end of this little cockatrice of a king, that was able to destroy those that did not espy him first. Bacon.

This cockatrice is soonest crushed in the shell; but, if it grows, it turns to a serpent and a dragon. Taylor.

My wife! 'tis she, the very cockatrice! Congr. Old Batchelor.

COCKBOAT. n. f. [cock and boat] A small boat belonging to a ship.

That invincible armada, which having not so much as fired a cottage of ours at land, nor taking a cockboat of ours at sea, wandered through the wilderness of the northern seas.

Bacon on the War with Spain.

Did they, indeed, think it less dishonour to God to be like a brute, or a plant, or a cockboat, than to be like a man?

Stillin'fleet's Defence of Disc. on Rom. Idolatry.

COCKBROATH. n. f. Broath made by boiling a cock.

Diet upon spoon-meats; as veal or cockbroaths, prepared with French barley. Harvey on Consumptions.

COCKCROWING. n. f. [cock and crow] The time at which cocks crow; the morning.

Ye know not when the master of the house cometh; at even, or at midnight, or at the cockcrowing, or in the morning. Mar. xiii. 35.

To COCKER. v. a. [coquelin, French.] To cade; to fondle; to indulge.

Most children's constitutions are spoiled by cockering and tenderness. Locke on Education, sect. 4.

He that will give his son sugar-plums to make him learn, does but authorize his love of pleasure, and cock up that propensity which he ought to subdue. Locke on Education, f. 52.

Bred a fondling and an heiress;

Cocker'd by the servants round,

Was too good to touch the ground. Swift.

COCKER. n. f. [from cock.] One who follows the sport of cockfighting.

COCKEREL. n. f. [from cock.] A young cock.

Which of them first begins to crow?—

The old cock?—The cockerel. Shakespeare's Tempest.

What wilt thou be, young cockerel, when thy spurs

Are grown to sharpness? Dryden's Cleomenes.

COCKET. n. f. [Of uncertain derivation.]

A seal belonging to the king's customhouse: likewise a scroll of parchment, sealed and delivered by the officers of the customhouse to merchants, as a warrant that their merchandize is entered. Cowel.

The greatest profit did arise by the cocket of hides; for wool and woollens were ever of little value in this kingdom. Davies.

COCKFIGHT. n. f. [cock and fight.] A battle or match of cocks.

In cockfights, to make one cock more hardy, and the other more cowardly. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 990.

At the seasons of football and cockfighting, these little republicks reassume their national hatred to each other. Addison.

COCKHORSE. [cock and horse.] On horseback; triumphant; exulting.

Alma, they strenuously maintain,

Sits cockhorse on her throne the brain. Prior.

COCKLE. n. f. [coquille, French.] A small testaceous fish.

It is a cockle, or a walnut-shell. Shak. Tam. of Shrew.

We may, I think, from the make of an oyster, or cockle, reasonably conclude, that it has not so many, nor so quick senses, as a man. Locke.

Three common cockle shells, out of gravel pits. Woodward.

COCKLE-STAIRS. n. f. Winding or spiral stairs. Chambers.

COCKLE. n. f. [coccel, Saxon.] A weed that grows in corn.

The same with corn-rose; a species of POPPY.

In soothing them we nourish, 'gainst our senate,

The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition. Shakespeare.

Good seed degenerates, and oft' obeys

The soil's disease, and into cockle strays. Donne.

To COCKLE. v. a. [from cockle.] To contract into wrinkles like the shell of a cockle.

Show's soon drench the camblet's cockled grain. Gay.

COCKLED. adj. [from cockle.] Shelled; or perhaps cochleate, turbinated.

Love's feeling is more soft and sensible,

Than are the tender horns of cockled snails. Shakespeare.

COCKLOFT. n. f. [cock and loft.] The room over the garret, in which fowls are supposed to roost.

If the lowest floors already burn,

Cocklofts and garrets soon will take their turn. Dryd. Juv.

My garrets, or rather my cocklofts indeed, are very indifferently furnished; but they are rooms to lay lumber in. Swift.

COCKMASTER. n. f. [cock and master.] One that breeds game cocks.

A cockmaster bought a partridge, and turned it among the fighting cocks. L'Estrange.

COCKMATCH. n. f. [cock and match.] Cockfight for a prize.

At the same time that the heads of parties preserve towards one another an outward shew of good breeding, their tools will not so much as mingle together at a cockmatch.

Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 126.

Though quail-fighting is what is most taken notice of, they had doubtless cockmatches also. Arbuth. and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

COCKNEY. n. f. [A word of which the original is much controverted. The French use an expression, Païs de cocaigue, for a country of dainties.

Paris est pour un riche un Païs de cocaigue. Boileau.

Of this word they are not able to settle the original. It appears, whatever was its first ground, to be very ancient, being mentioned in an old Normanno-Saxon poem:

Far in see by west Spayng,

Is a lond yhoze cocayng.

On which Dr. Hickes has this remark:

Nunc coquin, coquine. Quæ olim apud Gallas otio, gulæ & ventri deditos, ignavum, ignavam, desidiosum, desidiosam, segnem significabant. Hinc urbanos utpote à rusticis laboribus ad vitam sedentariam, & quasi desidiosam avocatos pagani nostri olim cocaignes, quod nunc scribitur cockneys, vocabant. Et poëta hic noster in monachos & moniales, ut segne genus hominum, qui desidiæ dediti, ventri indulgebant, & coquinæ amatores erant, malevolentissime invchitur, monasteria & monasticam vitam in descriptione terræ cockaineæ, parabolice perstringens.]

1. A native of London, by way of contempt.

So the cockney did to the eels, when she put them i' th' pasty alive. Shakesp. King Lear.

For who is such a cockney in his heart,

Proud of the plenty of the southern part,

To scorn that union, by which we may

Boast 'twas his countryman that writ this play. Dorset.

The cockney, travelling into the country, is surprized at many common practices of rural affairs. Watts.

2. Any effeminate, ignorant, low, mean, despicable citizen.

I am afraid this great lubber, the world, will prove a cockney. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

COCKPIT. n. f. [cock and pit.]

1. The area where cocks fight.

Can this cockpit hold

The vasty field of France?

Shakesp. Henry V.

And now have I gained the cockpit of the western world, and academy of arms, for many years. Howell's Vocal Forest.

2. A place on the lower deck of a man of war, where are subdivisions for the purser, the surgeon, and his mates. Harris.

COCKSCOMB.

COCKWEED. n. f. [from cock and weed.] The name of a plant, called also DIPTANDER, or Pepperwort, which see.

COCOA. n. f. [cacao'al, Span. and therefore more properly written cacao.]

A species of palm-tree, cultivated in most of the inhabited parts of the East and West Indies; but thought a native of the Maldives. It is one of the most useful trees to the inhabitants of America. The bark of the nut is made into cordage, and the shell into drinking bowls. The kernel of the nut affords them a wholesome food, and the milk contained in the shell a cooling liquor. The leaves of the trees are used for thatching their houses, and are also wrought into baskets, and most other things that are made of others in Europe. Miller.

The cacao or chocolate nut is a fruit of an oblong figure, much resembling a large olive in size and shape. It is composed of a thin but hard and woody coat or skin, of a dark blackish colour; and of a dry kernel, filling up its whole cavity, fleshy, dry, firm, and fattish to the touch, of a dusky colour, an agreeable smell, and a pleasant and peculiar taste. It was unknown to us 'till the discovery of America, where the natives not only drank the liquor made from the nuts, in the manner we do chocolate, but also used them as money. The tree is not very tall, but grows regularly, and is of a beautiful form, especially when loaded with its fruit. Its stem is of the thickness of a man's leg, and but a few feet in height; its bark rough, and full of tubercles; and its leaves six or eight inches long, half as much in breadth, and pointed at the ends. The flowers stand on the branches, and even on the trunk of the tree, in clusters, each having its own pedicle, an inch and sometimes less in length: they are small, of a yellowish colour, and are succeeded by the fruit, which is large and oblong, resembling a cucumber, five, six, or eight inches in length, and three or four in thickness; and, when fully ripe, it is of a purple colour. Within the cavity of this fruit are lodged the cocoa nuts, usually about thirty in number. This tree flowers twice or three times in the year, and ripens as many series of fruits. Hill's History of the Mat. Medica.

Amid' those orchards of the sun,

Give me to drain the cocoa's milky bowl,

And from the palm to draw its freshening wine. Thomson.

COCTILE. adj. [coctilis, Lat.] Made by baking, as a brick.

COCTION. n. f. [coctio, Lat.] The act of boiling.

The disease is sometimes attended with expectoration from the lungs, and that is taken off by a coction and resolution of the feverish matter, or terminates in suppurations or a gangrene. Arbuthnot on Diet.

COD. } n. f. A sea fish.

CODFISH. }

COD. n. f. [codde, Saxon.] Any case or husk in which seeds are lodged.

Thy corn thou there may'st safely sow,

Where in full cods last year rich pease did grow. May's Virg.

They let pease lie in small heaps as they are reaped, 'till they find the hawm and cod dry. Motimer's Husbandry.

TO COD. v. n. [from the noun.] To inclose in a cod.

All codded grain being a destroyer of weeds, an improver of land, and a preparer of it for other crops. Mort. Husband.

CODDERS. n. f. [from cod.] Gatherers of pease. Diët.

CODE. n. f. [codex, Latin]

1. A book.

2. A book of the civil law.

Wou'd strait become a golden pippin. Swift.

COE'FFICACY. n. f. [con and efficacia, Lat.] The power of several things acting together to produce an effect.

We cannot in general infer the efficacy of those stars, or coefficient particular in medications. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

COEFFICIENCY. n. f. [con and efficio, Latin] Cooperation; the state of acting together to some single end.

The managing and carrying on of this work, by the spirits instrumental coefficient, requires, that they be kept together, without distinction or dissipation. Glanville's Sceps. Scient.

COEFFICIENT. n. f. [con and efficiens, Latin.]

1. That which unites its action with the action of another.

2. In algebra.

Such numbers, or given quantities, that are put before letters, or unknown quantities, into which letters they are supposed to be multiplied, and so do make a rectangle, or product with the letters; as 4 a, b x, c x x; where 4 is the coefficient of 4 a; b of b x, and c of c x x. Chambers.

3. In fluxions.

The coefficient of any generating term (in fluxions) is the quantity arising by the division of that term, by the generated quantity. Chambers.

CO'ELIACK Passion. A diarrhæa, or flux, that arises from the indigestion or putrefaction of food in the stomach and bowels, whereby the aliment comes away little altered from what it was when eaten, or changed like corrupted stinking flesh. Quincy.

COE'MPTION. n. f. [coemptio, Lat.] The act of buying up the whole quantity of any thing.

Monopolies and coemption of wares for resale, where they are not restrained, are great means to enrich. Bacon's Essays.

COE'QUAL. adj. [from con and equalis, Lat.] Equal; being in the same state with another.

Henry the fifth did sometime prophecy,

If once he came to be a cardinal,

He'll make his cap coequal with the crown. Shak. Hen. VI.

COEQUA'LITY. n. f. [from coequal] The state of being equal.

TO COE'RCE. v. a. [coerceo, Latin.] To restrain; to keep in order by force.

Punishments are manifold, that they may coerce this profligate fort. Ayliffe's Parergon.

COE'RCIBLE. adj. [from coerce.]

1. That may be restrained.

2. That ought to be restrained.

COE'RCION. n. f. [from coerce] Penal restraint; check.

The coercion or execution of the sentence in ecclesiastical courts, is only by excommunication of the person contumacious. Hale's History of the Common Law.

Government has coercion and animadversion upon such as neglect their duty; without which coercive power, all government is toothless and precarious. South's Sermons.

COE'RCIVE. adj. [from coerce]

1. That which has the power of laying restraint.

All things on the surface spread, are bound

By their coercive vigour to the ground! Blackmore.

2. That which has the authority of restraining by punishment.

For ministers to seek that themselves might have coercive power over the church, would have been hardly construed. Hooker, Preface.

The virtues of a magistrate or general, or a king, are prudence, counsel, active fortitude, coercive power, awful command, and the exercise of magnanimity, as well as justice. Dryden's Juv. Dedication.

COESSE'NTIAL. adj. [con and essentia, Latin.] Participating of the same essence.

The Lord our God is but one God, in which indivisible unity we adore the father, as being altogether of himself; we glorify that consubstantial word which is the son; we bless and magnify that coessential spirit eternally proceeding from both, which is the holy ghost. Hooker, b. v. f. 51.

COESSENTIALITY.

COESSENTIALITY. n. f. [from coessential.] Participation of the same essence.

COETANEOUS. adj. [con and ætas, Latin]

1. Of the same age with another. Sometimes with to.

Eve was old as Adam, and Cain their son coetaneous unto both. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 3.

Every fault hath some penal effects, coetaneous to the act. Government of the Tongue, f. 6.

2. Sometimes with.

Through the body every member sustains another; and all are coetaneous, because none can subsist alone. Bentley's Sermon.

COETERNAL. adj. [con and æternus, Lat.] Equally eternal with another.

Or of the eternal coeternal beam! Milton's Paradise Lost.

COETERNALLY. adv. [from coeternal.] In a state of equal eternity with another.

Arius had already dishonoured his coeternally begotten son. Hooker, b. v. f. 52.

COETERNITY. n. f. [from coeternal.] Having existence from eternity equal with another eternal being.

The eternity of the son's generation, and his coeternity and consubstantiality with the father, when he came down from heaven, and was incarnate. Hammond's Fund.

COEVAL. adj. [coævus, Latin.]

1. Of the same age.

Even his teeth and white, like a young flock, Coeval, and new shorn, from the clear brook Recent. Prior.

2. Of the same age with another, followed by with.

This religion cannot pretend to be coeval with mankind. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The monthly revolutions of the moon, or the diurnal of the earth upon its own axis, by the very hypothesis are coequal with the former. Bentley's Sermons.

Silence! coeval with eternity;

Thou wert, e're nature first began to be:

'Twas one vast nothing all, and all slept fast in thee. Pope.

3. Sometimes by to.

Although we had no monuments of religion ancients than idolatry, we have no reason to conclude, that idolatrous religion was coeval to mankind. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

COEVAL. n. f. [from the adjective.] A contemporary.

As it were not enough to have outdone all your coevals in wit, you will excel them in good nature. Pope.

COEVOUS. adj. [coævus, Lat.] Of the same age.

Then it should not have been the first, as supposing some other thing coevous to it. South's Sermons.

TO COEXIST. v. n. [con and existo, Latin.]

1. To exist at the same time.

The three stars that coexist in heavenly constellations, are a multitude of stars. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Of substances no one has any clear idea, farther than of certain simple ideas coexisting together. Locke.

2. Followed by with.

It is sufficient that we have the idea of the length of any regular periodical appearances, which we can in our minds apply to duration, with which the motion or appearance never coexisted. Locke.

COEXISTENCE. n. f. [from coexist.]

1. Having existence at the same time with another.

The measuring of any duration, by some motion, depends not on the real coexistence of that thing to that motion, or any other periods of revolution. Locke.

2. More commonly followed by with.

We can demonstrate the being of God's eternal ideas, and their coexistence with him. Grew's Cosmol. b. ii. c. 4. f. 24.

COEXISTENT. adj. [from coexist.]

1. Having existence at the same time with another, with to.

To the measuring the duration of any thing by time, it is not requisite that that thing should be coexistent to the motion we measure by, or any other periodical revolution. Locke.

2. Sometimes with.

This proves no antecedent necessity, but coexistent with the act. Bramb. Answer to Hobbs.

Time is taken for so much of infinite duration as is co-existent with the motions of the great bodies of the universe. Locke's Works.

All that one point is either future or past, and no parts are coexistent or contemporary with it. Bentley's Sermons.

TO COEXTEND. v. a. [con and extendo, Lat.] To extend to the same space or duration with another.

Every motion is, in some sort, coextended with the body moved. Grew's Cosmol. b. ii. c. 1. f. 2.

COEXTENSION. n. f. [from coextend.] The act or state of extending to the same space or duration with another.

And though it be a spirit, yet I find it is no inconvenience to have some analogy, at least of coextension, with my body. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

COFFEE. n. f. [It is originally Arabick, pronounced cabeu by the Turks, and cahuab by the Arabs.] The tree is a species of Arabick JESSAMINE, which see.

It is found to succeed as well in the Caribbee islands as in their native place of growth: but whether the coffee produced in the West Indies will prove as good as that from Mocha in Arabia Felix, time will discover. The berry brought from the Levant is most esteemed; and the berry, when ripe, is found as hard as horn. Miller.

COFFEE also denotes a drink prepared from the berries, very familiar in Europe for these eighty years, and among the Turks for one hundred and fifty. Some refer the invention of coffee to the Persians; from whom it was learned, in the fifteenth century, by a musti of Aden, a city near the mouth of the Red Sea, where it soon came in vogue, and passed from thence to Mecca, and from Arabia Felix to Cairo. From Egypt the use of coffee advanced to Syria and Constantinople. Thevenot, the traveller, was the first who brought it into France; and a Greek servant, called Pasqua, brought into England by Mr. Daniel Edwards, a Turkey merchant, in 1652, to make his coffee, first set up the profession of coffeeeman, and introduced the drink among us; though some say Dr. Harvey had used it before. Chambers.

They have in Turkey a drink called coffee, made of a berry of the same name, as black as soot, and of a strong scent, but not aromatical; which they take, beaten into powder, in water, as hot as they can drink it. This drink comforteth the brain and heart, and helpeth digestion. Bacon.

To part her time 'twixt reading and bohea,

Or o'er cold coffee trifle with the spoon. Pope.

COFFEEHOUSE. n. f. [coffee and house.] A house of entertainment where coffee is sold, and the guests are supplied with news papers.

At ten, from coffeehouse or play,

Returning, finishes the day. Prior.

It is a point they do not concern themselves about, farther than perhaps as a subject in a coffeehouse. Swift.

COFFEE MAN. n. f. [coffee and man.] One that keeps a coffee-house.

Consider your enemies the Lacedæmonians; did ever you hear that they preferred a coffee man to Agesilaus? Addison.

COFFEEPOT. n. f. [coffee and pot.] The covered pot in which coffee is boiled.

COFFER. n. f. [coffe, Saxon.]

1. A chest generally for keeping money.

Two iron coffers hung on either side,

With precious metal full as they could hold. Fairy Queen.

The lining of his coffers shall make coats

To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars. Shakesp. Rich. II.

If you destroy your governour that is wealthy, you must chuse another, who will fill his coffers out of what is left. L'Estr.

2. Treasure.

He would discharge it without any burthen to the queen's coffers, for honour sake. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

3. [In architecture.] A square depression in each interval between the modillions of the Corinthian cornice, usually filled with some enrichment. Chambers.

4. [In fortification.] A hollow lodgment across a dry moat, from six to seven foot deep, and from sixteen to eighteen broad; the upper part being made of pieces of timber, raised two foot above the level of the moat; which little elevation has hurdles laden with earth for its covering, and serves as a parapet with embrasures. Chambers.

TO COFFER. v. a. [from the noun.] To treasure up in chests.

Treasure, as a war might draw forth, so a peace succeeding might coffer up. Bacon's Henry VII.

COFFERER of the King's Household. n. f. A principal officer of his majesty's court, next under the comptroller, that, in the comptinghouse and elsewhere, hath a special oversight of other officers of the household, for their good demeanour in their offices. Cowel.

COFFIN. n. f. [coffin, French.]

1. The box or chest in which dead bodies are put into the ground. It is used both of wood and other matter.

He went as if he had been the coffin that carried himself to his sepulchre. Sidney, b. ii.

Not a flower sweet

On my black coffin let there be strown. Sh. Twelfth Night.

One fate they have,

The ship their coffin, and the sea their grave. Waller.

The joiner is fitting screws to your coffin. Swift.

2. A mould of paste for a pye.

3. A paper case, in form of a cone, used by grocers.

4. In farriery.

COFFIN of a horse, is the whole hoof of the foot above the coronet, including the coffin bone. The coffin bone is a small spongy bone, inclosed in the midst of the hoof, and possessing the whole form of the foot. Farrier's Dict.

TO COFFIN. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose in a coffin.

Would'st thou have laugh'd, had I come coffin'd home,

That weep'st to see me triumph? Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Let me lie

In prison, and here be coffin'd, when I die. Donne.

COFFINMAKER. n. f. [coffin and maker.] One whose trade is to make coffins.

Where will be your sextons, coffinmakers and plumbers? Tat.

To CO'GITATE. v. n. [cogito, Lat.] To think. Diſt.

COGITA'TION. n. ſ. [cogitatio, Latin.]

1. Thought; the act of thinking.
Having their cogitations darkened, and being ſtrangers from the life of God, from the ignorance which is in them. Hooker.

A picture puts me in mind of a friend: the intention of the mind in ſeeing, is carried to the object repreſented, which is no more than ſimple cogitation, or apprehenſion of the perſon. Stillingfleet's Defence of Diſc. on Rom. Idol.

This Deſcartes proves, that brutes have no cogitation, becauſe they could never be brought to ſignify their thoughts by any artificial ſigns. Ray on the Creation.

These powers of cogitation, and volition and ſenſation, are neither inherent in matter as ſuch, nor acquirable to matter by any motion and modification of it. Bentley.

2. Purpose; reflection previous to action.

The king, perceiving that his deſires were intemperate, and his cogitations vaſt and irregular, began not to brook him well. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. Meditation.

On ſome great charge employ'd
He ſeem'd, or fixt in cogitation deep. Milt. Paradise Loſt.

Co'GITATIVE. adj. [from cogito, Latin.]

1. Having the power of thought and reflection.

If theſe powers of cogitation and ſenſation are neither inherent in matter, nor acquirable to matter, they proceed from ſome cogitative ſubſtance, which we call ſpirit and ſoul. Bentley.

2. Given to thought and deep meditation.

The earl had the cloſer and more reſerved countenance, being by nature more cogitative. Wotton.

COGNA'TION. n. ſ. [cognatio, Latin.]

1. Kindred; deſcent from the ſame original.

Two vices I ſhall mention, as being of near cognition to ingratitude, pride and hard-heartedneſs, or want of compaſſion. South's Sermons.

Let the criticks tell me what certain ſenſe they could put upon either of theſe four words, by their mere cognition with each other. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. Relation; participation of the ſame nature.

He induceth us to aſcribe effects unto cauſes of no cognition. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. ii.

COH

COGNITION. n. ſ. [cognitio, Latin.] Knowledge; complete conviction.

I will not be myſelf nor have cognition
Of what I feel: I am all patience. Sb. Troil. and Creſſida.
God, as he created all things, ſo is he beyond and in them all, not only in power, as under his ſubjection, or in his preſence, as in his cognition; but in their very eſſence, as in the ſoul of their casualties. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 2.

Co'GNITIVE. adj. [from cognitus, Latin.] Having the power of knowing.

Unless the underſtanding employ and exerciſe its cognitive or apprehenſive power about theſe terms, there can be no actual apprehenſion of them. South's Sermons.

Co'GNIZABLE. adj. [cognoſcible, French.]

1. That falls under judicial notice.
2. Proper to be tried, judged, or examined.
Some are merely of eccleſiaſtical cognizance, others of a mixed nature; ſuch as are cognizable both in the eccleſiaſtical and ſecular courts. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Co'GNIZANCE. n. ſ. [connoiſſance, French.]

1. Judicial notice; trial; judicial authority.
It is worth the while, however, to conſider how we may diſcountenance and prevent thoſe evils which the law can take no cognizance of. L'Eſtrange.

Happineſs or miſery, in converſe with others, depends upon things which human laws can take no cognizance of. South.

The moral crime is completed, and there are only circumſtances wanting to work it up for the cognizance of the law. Addiſon's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 6.

2. A badge, by which any one is known.

And at the king's going away the earl's ſervants ſtood, in a ſeemly manner, in their livery coats, with cognizances, ranged on both ſides, and made the king a bow. Bacon's Henry VII.

Theſe were the proper cognizances and coat-arms of the tribes. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 10.

COGNO'MINAL. adj. [cognomen, Lat.] Having the ſame name.

Nor do thoſe animals more reſemble the creatures on earth, than they on earth the conſtellations which paſs under animal names in heaven; nor the dogfiſh at ſea much more make out the dog of the land, than his cognominal or nameſake in the heavens. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 24.

COGNOMINA'TION. n. ſ. [cognomen, Latin]

1. A ſurname; the name of a family.
2. A name added from any accident or quality.

To COHE'RE. v. n. [cohaereo, Latin.]

1. To ſtick together; to hold faſt one to another, as parts of the ſame body.

Two pieces of marble, having their ſurface exactly plain, polite, and applied to each other in ſuch a manner as to intercept the air, do cobere firmly together as one. Woodward.

We find that the force, whereby bodies cobere, is very much greater when they come to immediate contact, than when they are at ever ſo ſmall a finite diſtance. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

None

- None want a place for all their center found,
Hung to the goddess, and coher'd around;
Not closer, orb in orb conglob'd, are seen
The buzzing bees about their dusky queen. Pope's Dunciad.
2. To be well connected; to follow regularly in the order of discourse.
3. To suit; to fit; to be fitted to.
Had time coher'd with place, or place with wishing. Shakesp.
4. To agree.

COHERENCE. } n. f. [coherentia, Latin]
COHERENCY. }

1. That state of bodies in which their parts are joined together, from what cause soever it proceeds, so that they resist divulsion and separation; nor can be separated by the same force by which they might be simply moved, or being only laid upon one another, might be parted again. Quincy.
The weight or pressure of the air will not explain, nor can be a cause of the coherence of the particles of air themselves. Locke.

Matter is either fluid or solid; words that may comprehend the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Connection; dependency; the relation of parts or things one to another.

It shall be no trouble to find each controversy's resting place, and the coherence it hath with things, either on which it dependeth, or which depend on it. Hooker, Preface.

Why between sermons and faith should there be ordinarily that coherence, which causes have with their usual effects? Hooker.

3. The texture of a discourse, by which one part follows another regularly and naturally.
4. Consistency in reasoning, or relating, so that one part of the discourse does not destroy or contradict the rest.

Coherence of discourse, and a direct tendency of all the parts of it to the argument in hand, are most eminently to be found in him. Locke's Preface to St. Paul's Epistles.

COHERENT. adj. [coherens, Latin.]

1. Sticking together, so as to resist separation.
By coagulating and diluting, that is, making their parts more or less coherent. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Where all must full, or not coherent be;

And all that rises, rise in due degree. Pope's Essay on Man.

2. Suitable to something else; regularly adapted.

Instruct my daughter,

That time and place, with this deceit so lawful,

May prove coherent. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

3. Consistent; not contradictory to itself.

A coherent thinker, and a strict reasoner, is not to be made at once by a set of rules. Watts's Logick.

COHESION. n. f. [from cohere.]

1. The act of sticking together.

Hard particles, heaped together, touch in a few points, and must be separable by less force than breaks a solid particle, whose parts touch in all the space between them, without any pores or interstices to weaken their cohesion. Newton's Opt.
Solids and fluids differ in the degree of cohesion, which, being increased, turns a fluid into a solid. Arbuth. on Aliments.

2. The state of union or inseparability.

What cause of their cohesion can you find?

What props support, what chains the fabrick bind. Blackm.

3. Connection; dependence.

In their tender years, ideas that have no natural cohesion, come to be united in their heads. Locke.

COHESIVE. adj. [from cohere.] That has the power of sticking to another, and of resisting separation.

COHESIVENESS. n. f. [from cohesive.] The quality of being cohesive; the quality of resisting separation.

TO COHIBIT. v. a. [cohibeo, Lat.] To restrain; to hinder. Dict.

TO COHOBATE. v. a. To pour the distilled liquor upon the remaining matter, and distill it again.

The juices of an animal body are, as it were, cohobated, being excreted and admitted again into the blood with the fresh aliment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

COHOBATION. n. f. [from cohobate.] A returning any distilled liquor again upon what it was drawn from, or upon fresh ingredients of the same kind, to have it the more impregnated with their virtues. Quincy.

Cohobation is the pouring the liquor distilled from any thing back upon the remaining matter, and distilling it again. Locke.

This oil, dulcified by cohobation with an aromatized spirit, is of use to restore the digestive faculty. Grew's Musæum.

COHORT. n. f. [cohors, Latin.]

1. A troop of soldiers in the Roman armies, containing about five hundred foot.

The Romans levied as many cohorts, companies, and ensigns from hence as from any of their provinces. Camden.

2. In poetical language, a body of warriors.

Th' arch-angelic pow'r prepar'd

For swift descent; with him the cohort bright

Of watchful cherubim. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 127.

Here Churchill, not so prompt

To vaunt as fight, his hardy cohorts join'd

With Eugene. Philips's Blenheim.

COHORTATION. n. f. [cohortatio, Latin.] Encouragement by words; incitement. Dict.

COIF. n. f. [coiffe, French, from cofea, for cucufa, low Latin.] The head-dress; a lady's cap; the serjeant's cap.

The judges of the four circuits in Wales, although they are not of the first magnitude, nor need be of the degree of the coif, yet are they considerable. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

No less a man than a brother of the coif began his suit, before he had been a twelvemonth at the Temple. Addis. Spect.

COIFFED. adj. [from coif.] Wearing a coif.

COIFFURE. n. f. [coiffure, French.] Head-dress.

I am highly pleased with the coiffure now in fashion, and think it shews the good sense of the valuable part of the sex.

COIGNE. n. f. [An Irish term, as it seems.]

Fitz Thomas of Desmond began that extortion of coigne and livery, and pay; that is, he and his army took horse-meat and man's-meat, and money, at pleasure. Davies on Irel.

COIGNE. n. f. [French.]

1. A corner.

2. A wooden wedge used by printers.

TO COIL. v. a. [cueillir, French.] To gather into a narrow compass; as to coil a rope, to wind it in a ring.

The lurking particles of air so expanding themselves, must necessarily plump out the sides of the bladder, and so keep them turgid, until the pressure of the air, that at first coiled them, be re-admitted to do the same thing again. Boyle.

COIL. n. f. [kolleren, Germ.]

1. Tumult; turmoil; bustle; stir; hurry; confusion.

Who was so firm, so constant, that this coil

Would not infect his reason. Shakesp. Tempest.

You, mistress, all this coil is 'long of you. Shakespeare.

In that sleep of death what dreams may come,

When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,

Must give us pause. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. A rope wound into a ring.

COIN. n. f. [coigne, French.] A corner; any thing standing out angularly; a square brick cut diagonally; called often quoin, or quine.

No jutting frieze,

Buttrice, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird

Hath made his pendant bed. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

See you yond' coin o' th' capitol, yond' corner stone? Shakesp.

COIN. n. f. [by some imagined to come from cuneus, a wedge, because metal is cut in wedges to be coined.]

1. Money stamped with a legal impression.

He gave Dametas a good sum of gold in ready coin, which Menalcas had bequeathed. Sidney, b. i.

You have made

Your holy hat be stamp'd on the king's coin. Shak. H. VIII.

I cannot tell how the poets will succeed in the explication of coins, to which they are generally very great strangers. Addis.

She now contracts her vast design,

And all her triumphs shrink into a coin. Pope.

2. Payment of any kind.

The loss of present advantage to flesh and blood, is repaid in a nobler coin. Hammond's Fundamentals.

TO COIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mint or stamp metals for money.

They cannot touch me for coining: I am the king himself. Shakespeare's King Lear.

They never put in practice a thing so necessary as coined money is. Peacham of Antiquities.

Tenants cannot coin rent just at quarter-day, but must gather it by degrees. Locke.

Can we be sure that this medal was really coined by an artificer, or is but a product of the soil from whence it was taken. Bentley's Sermons.

2. To make or forge any thing, in an ill sense.

My lungs

Coin words 'till their decay, against those measles,

Which we disdain should tetter us. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Never coin a formal lye on't,

To make the knight o'ercome the giant. Hudibras, p. i.

Those motives induced Virgil to coin his fable. Dryden.

Some tale, some new pretence, he daily coin'd,

To sooth his sister, and delude her mind. Dryd. Virg. Æn.

A term is coined to make the conveyance easy. Atterbury.

COINAGE. n. f. [from coin.]

1. The act or practice of coining money.

The care of the coinage was committed to the inferior magistrates; and I don't find that they had a public trial as we solemnly practise in this country. Arbuthnot.

2. Coin; money; stamped and legitimated metal.

This is conceived to be a coinage of some Jews, in derision of Christians, who first began that portrait. Brown.

3. The charges of coining money.

4. Forgery; invention.

This is the very coinage of your brain;

This

This bodiless creation ecstasy
Is very cunning in. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

TO COINCIDE. v. n. [coincido, Latin.]

1. To fall upon the same point; to meet in the same point.
If the equator and ecliptick had coincided, it would have rendered the annual revolution of the earth quite useless. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
2. To concur; to be consistent with.
The rules of right judgment, and of good ratiocination, often coincide with each other. Watts's Logick.

COINCIDENCE. n. f. [from coincide.]

1. The state of several bodies, or lines, falling upon the same point.
An universal equilibrium, arising from the coincidence of infinite centers, can never be naturally acquired. Bentley's Sermon.
2. Concurrence; consistency; tendency of many things to the same end.
The very concurrence and coincidence of so many evidences that contribute to the proof, carries with it a great weight. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
3. It is followed by with.
The coincidence of the planes of this rotation with one another, and with the plane of the ecliptick, is very near the truth. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

COINCIDENT. adj. [from coincide.]

1. Falling upon the same point.
These circles I viewed through a prism; and as I went from them, they came nearer and nearer together, and at length became coincident. Newt. Opt.
2. Concurrent; consistent; equivalent; tantamount.
Christianity teaches nothing but what is perfectly suitable to and coincident with the ruling principles of a virtuous and well inclined man. South's Sermons.
These words of our apostle are exactly coincident with that controverted passage in his discourse to the Athenians. Bentley.

COINDICATION. n. f. [from con and indico, Latin.] Many symptoms, betokening the same cause.

COINER. n. f. [from coin.]

1. A maker of money; a minter; a stamp of coin.
My father was I know not where
When I was stamp'd: some coiner with his tools
Made me a counterfeit. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
It is easy to find designs that never entered into the thoughts of the sculptor or the coiner. Addison on ancient Medals.
There are only two patents referred to, both less advantageous to the coiner than this of Wood. Swift.
2. A counterfeiter of the king's stamp; a maker of base money.
3. An inventor.
Dionysius, a Greek coiner of etymologies, is commended by Athenæus. Camden's Remains.

TO COJOIN. v. n. [conjungo, Lat.] To join with another in the same office.
Thou may'st cojoin with something, and thou dost,
And that beyond commission. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

COISTRIL. n. f. A coward cock; a runaway.
He's a coward and a coistril, that will not drink to my niece. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

COIT. n. f. [kote, a die, Dutch.] A thing thrown at a certain mark. See QUOIT.
The time they wear out at coits, kayles, or the like idle exercises. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

COITION. n. f. [coitio, Latin.]

1. Copulation; the act of generation.
I cannot but admire that philosophers should imagine frogs to fall from the clouds, considering how openly they act their coition, produce spawn, tadpoles and frogs. Ray on Creation.
He is not made productive of his kind, but by coition with a female. Grew's Cosmol. b. i. f. 25.
2. The act by which two bodies come together.
By Gilbertus this motion is termed coition, not made by any faculty attractive of one, but a syndrome and concurrence of each. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 3.

COKE. n. f. [Perhaps from coquo, Skinner.] Fewel made by burning pit-coal under earth, and quenching the cinders; as charcoal is made with wood. It is frequently used in drying malt.

COLANDER. n. f. [colo, to strain, Lat.] A sieve either of hair, twigs or metal, through which a mixture to be separated is poured, and which retains the thicker parts.
Take a thick woven osier colander,
Through which the pressed wines are strained clear. May.
All the viscera of the body are but as so many colanders to separate several juices from the blood. Ray on the Creation.
The brains from nose and mouth, and either ear,
Came issuing forth, as through a colander
The curdled milk. Dryden.

COLATION. n. f. [from colo, Lat.] The art of filtering or straining.

COLATURE. n. f. [from colo, Latin.]

1. The art of straining; filtration.
2. The matter strained.

COLBERTINE. n. f. A kind of lace worn by women.
Go, hang out an old frifoneer gorget, with a yard of yellow colbertine again. Congreve's Way of the World.

COLCOTHAR. n. f. A term in chymistry.
Colcothar is the dry substance which remains after distillation, but commonly meant of the caput mortuum of vitriol. Quincy.
Colcothar, or vitriol burnt, though unto a redness, containing the fixed salt, will make good ink. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

COLD. adj. [cold, Saxon; kalt, German.]

1. Not hot; not warm; gelid; without warmth; without heat.
The diet in the state of manhood ought to be solid; and their chief drink water cold, because in such a state it has its own natural spirit. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
2. Chill; shivering; having sense of cold.
O noble English, that could entertain,
With half their force, the full power of France;
And let another half stand laughing by,
All out of work, and cold for action. Shakespeare's Henry V.
3. Having cold qualities; not volatile; not acrid.
Cold plants have a quicker perception of the heat of the sun than the hot herbs; as a cold hand will sooner find a little warmth than an hot. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 577.
4. Unaffected; frigid; without passion; without zeal; without concern; unactive; unconcerned.
There sprung up one kind of men, with whose zeal and forwardness the rest being compared, were thought to be marvellous cold and dull. Hooker, Preface, f. 8.
Infinite shall be made cold in religion, by your example, that never were hurt by reading books. Ascham's Schoolmaster.
Temp'rately proceed to what you would
Thus violently redress.—Sir, these cold ways,
That seem like prudent helps, are very poisonous. Shakespeare.
New dated letters these,
Their cold intent, tenour and substance thus;
Here doth he with his person, and his power,
The which he could not levy. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
We should not, when the blood was cold, have threatened
Our prisoners with the sword. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
To see a world in flames, and an host of angels in the clouds, one must be much of a stoick to be a cold and unconcerned spectator. Burnet's Preface to the Theory of the Earth.
No drum or trumpet needs
T' inspire the coward, or to warm the cold,
His voice, his sole appearance, makes them bold. Dryden.
O, thou hast touch'd me with thy sacred theme,
And my cold heart is kindled at thy flame. Rowe.
A man must be of a very cold or degenerate temper, whose heart doth not burn within him in the midst of praise and adoration. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 49.
5. Unaffected; unable to move the passions.
The rabble are pleased at the first entry of a disguise; but the jest grows cold even with them too, when it comes on in a second scene. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
6. Reserved; coy; not affectionate; not cordial; not friendly.
Let his knights have colder looks Among you. Shakespeare's King Lear.
The commissioners grew more reserved and colder towards each other. Clarendon, b. viii.
7. Chaste.
You may
Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty,
And yet seem cold, the time you may so hoodwink:
We've willing dames enough. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
8. Not welcome; not received with kindness or warmth of affection.
My master's suit will be but cold,
Since she respects my mistress' love. Sh. Two Gent. of Verona.
9. Not hasty; not violent.
10. Not affecting the scent strongly.
She made it good
At the hedge corner, in the coldest fault. Shakespeare.
11. Not having the scent strongly affected.
Smell this business with a sense as cold
As is a dead man's nose. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

COLD. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. The cause of the sensation of cold; the privation of heat; the frigorific power.
Fair lined slippers for the cold. Shakespeare.
Heat and cold are nature's two hands, whereby she chiefly worketh: and heat we have in readiness, in respect of the fire; but for cold we must stay 'till it cometh, or seek it in deep caves, or high mountains; and when all is done, we cannot obtain it in any great degree. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 69.
2. The sensation of cold; coldness; chiliness.
When she saw her lord prepar'd to part,
A deadly cold ran shiv'ring to her heart. Dryden's Fables.
3. A disease caused by cold; the obstruction of perspiration.
What disease hast thou?—
A whorson cold, sir; a cough. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. 2.

Let no ungentle cold destroy
All taste we have of heav'nly joy. Roscommon.

Those rains, so covering the earth, might providentially contribute to the disruption of it, by stopping all the pores, and all evaporation, which would make the vapours within struggle violently, as we get a fever by a cold. Burnet.

CO'LDLY. adv. [from cold.]

1. Without heat.
2. Without concern; indifferently; negligently; without warmth of temper or expression.

What England says, say briefly, gentle lord;
We coldly pause for thee. Shakespeare's King John.

Swift seem'd to wonder what he meant,
Nor would believe my lord had sent;
So never offer'd once to stir,
But coldly said, your servant, sir. Swift.

CO'LDNESS. n. f. [from cold.]

1. Want of heat; power of causing the sensation of cold.
He relates the excessive coldness of the water they met with in summer in that icy region, where they were forced to winter. Boyle's Experiments.

Such was the discord, which did first disperse
Form, order, beauty through the universe;
While driness moisture, coldness heat resists,
All that we have, and that we are subsists. Denham.

2. Unconcern; frigidity of temper; want of zeal; negligence; disregard.

Divisions of religion are not only the farthest spread, because in religion all men presume themselves interested; but they are also, for the most part, hotlier prosecuted: for as much as coldness, which, in other contentions, may be thought to proceed from moderation, is not in these so favourably contrued. Hooker, Dedicat.

If upon reading the admired passages in such authors, he finds a coldness and indifference in his thoughts, he ought to conclude, that he himself wants the faculty of discovering them. Addison's Spectator, No. 409.

It betrayed itself at first in a sort of indifference and carelessness in all her actions, and coldness to her best friends.
Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

3. Coyness; want of kindness; want of passion.
Unhappy youth! how will thy coldness raise Tempests and storms in his afflicted bosom! Addis. Cato.
Let ev'ry tongue its various censures chuse,
Absolve with coldness, or with spite accuse. Prior.

4. Chastity; exemption from vehement desire.
The silver stream her virgin coldness keeps,
For ever murmurs, and for ever weeps. Pope's Windsor For.

COLE. n. f. [capl, Saxon.] A general name for all sorts of CABBAGE, which see.

CO'LESEED. n. f. [from cole and seed.]

Where land is rank, it is not good to sow wheat after a fallow; but coleseed or barley, or both, and then wheat.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

CO'LEWORT. n. f. [caplwyn, Sax.] See CABBAGE, of which it is a species.

The decoction of coleworts is also commanded to bathe them. Wiseman of an Erysipelas.

Next took the coleworts, which her husband got
From his own ground (a small well-water'd spot);
She strip'd the stalks of all their leaves; the best
She cull'd, and then with handy care she dress'd. Dryden.
How turnips hide their swelling heads below,
And how the closing coleworts upwards grow. Gay.

CO'LUCK. n. f. [colicus, Latin.]

It strictly is a disorder of the colon; but loosely, any disorder of the stomach or bowels that is attended with pain.
There are four sorts: 1. A bilious colick, which proceeds from an abundance of acrimony or choler irritating the bowels, so as to occasion continual gripes, and generally with a looseness; and this is best managed with lenitives and emollients. 2. A flatulent colick, which is pain in the bowels from flatus's and wind, which distend them into unequal and unnatural capacities; and this is managed with carminatives and moderate openers. 3. An hysterical colick, which arises from disorders of the womb, and is communicated by consent of parts to the bowels; and is to be treated with the ordinary hystericks.

4. A nervous colick, which is from convulsive spasms and contortions of the guts themselves, from some disorders of the spirits, or nervous fluid, in their component fibres; whereby their capacities are in many places streightened, and sometimes so as to occasion obstinate obstructions: this is best remedied by brisk catharticks, joined with opiates and emollient dilu-ters. There is also a species of this distemper which is commonly called the stone colick, by consent of parts, from the irritation of the stone or gravel in the bladder or kidneys; and this is most commonly to be treated by nephriticks and oily diureticks, and is greatly assisted with the carminative turpentine clysters. Quincy.

Colicks of infants proceed from acidity, and the air in the aliment expanding itself, while the aliment ferments. Arbuth.

CO'LUCK. adj. Affecting the bowels. I

Intestine stone, and ulcer, colick pangs. Milton.

To COLLA'PSE. v. n. [collabor, collapsus, Latin.] To fall together; to close so as that one side touches the other.

In consumptions and atrophy the liquids are exhausted, and the sides of the canals collapse; therefore the attrition is increased, and consequently the heat. Arbuthnot on Diet.

COLLA'PSION. n. f. [from collapse.]

1. The state of vessels closed.
2. The act of closing or collapsing.

COLLAR. n. f. [collare, Latin.]

1. A ring of metal put round the neck.

That's nothing, says the dog, but the fretting of my collar:
nay, says the wolf, if there be a collar in the case, I know better things than to sell my liberty. L'Estrange, Fab. 68.

Ten brace and more of greyhounds,
With golden muzzles all their necks surround. Dryden's Fab.

2. The part of the harness that is fastened about the horse's neck.

Her waggon-spokes made of long spinners legs,
The traces of the smallest spider's web,
The collars of the moonshine's watry beams. Shakespeare.

3. The part of the drefs that surrounds the neck.

4. To slip the COLLAR. To get free; to escape; to disentangle himself from any engagement or difficulty.

When as the ape him heard so much to talk
Of labour, that did from his liking baulk,
He would have slipped the collar handsomely. Hubberd's Tale.

5. A COLLAR of Brawn, is the quantity bound up in one parcel.

COLLAR-BONE. n. f. [from collar and bone.] The clavicle; the bones on each side of the neck.

A page riding behind the coach, fell down, bruised his face, and broke his right collarbone. Wiseman's Surgery.

To CO'LLAR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To seize by the collar; to take by the throat.
2. To COLLAR beef, or other meat; to roll it up, and bind it hard and close with a string or collar.

To COLLA'TE. v. a. [confero collatum, Latin.]

1. To compare one thing of the same kind with another.
Knowledge will be ever a wandering and indigested thing, if it be but a commixture of a few notions that are at hand and occur, and not excited from a sufficient number of instances, and those well collated. Bacon's Natural History, No. 839.

They could not relinquish their Judaism, and embrace Christianity, without considering, weighing, and collating both religions. South.

2. To collate books; to examine if nothing be wanting.

3. With to. To place in an ecclesiastical benefice.
He thrust out the invader, and collated Amstdorf to the benefice: Luther performed the consecration. Atterbury.

If a patron shall neglect to present unto a benefice, that has been void above six months, the bishop may collate thereunto.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

COLLA'TERAL. adj. [con and latus, Latin.]

1. Side to side.

In his bright radiance and collateral light
Must I be comforted, not in his sphere. Shakespeare.
Thus saying, from his radiant seat he rose,
Of high collateral glory. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 86.

2. Running parallel.

3. Diffused on either side.

But man by number is to manifest
His single imperfection; and beget
Like of his like, his image multiply'd;
In unity defective, which requires
Collateral love, and dearest amity. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. In genealogy, those that stand in equal relation to some common ancestor.

The estate and inheritance of a person dying intestate, is,
by right of devolution, according to the civil law, given to such as are allied to him ex latere, commonly stiled collaterals, if there be no ascendants or descendants surviving at the time of his death. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. Not direct; not immediate.

They shall hear and judge 'twixt you and me,
If by direct or by collateral hand
They find us touch'd, we will our kingdom give
To you in satisfaction. Shakespeare.

6. Concurrent.

All the force of the motive lies entirely within itself: it receives no collateral strength from external considerations.
Atterbury's Sermons.

COLLA'TERALLY. adv. [from collateral.]

1. Side by side.

These pullies may be multiplied according to sundry different situations, not only when they are subordinate, but also when they are placed collaterally. Wilkins.

2. Indirectly.

By asserting the scripture to be the canon of our faith, I have created two enemies: the papists more directly, because they have kept the scripture from us; and the fanaticks more collaterally,

collaterally, because they have assumed what amounts to an infallibility in the private spirit. Dryden.

3. In collateral relation.

COLLA'TION. n. f. [collatio, Latin.]

1. The act of conferring or bestowing; gift.

Neither are we to give thanks alone for the first collation of these benefits, but also for their preservation. Ray on the Great.

2. Comparison of one copy, or one thing of the same kind, with another.

In the disquisition of truth, a ready fancy is of great use; provided that collation doth its office. Grew's Cosmol. b. 21.

I return you your Milton, which, upon collation, I find to be revised and augmented in several places. Pope.

3. In Law.

Collation is the bestowing of a benefice; by the bishop that hath it in his own gift or patronage; and differs from institution in this, that institution into a benefice is performed by the bishop at the presentation of another who is patron, or hath the patron's right for the time. Cowel.

Bishops should be placed by collation of the king under his letters patent, without any precedent election or confirmation ensuing. Hayward.

4. A repast.

COLLATI'TIOUS. adj. [collatitius, Lat.] Done by the contribution of many. Dict.

COLLA'TOR. n. f. [from collate.]

1. One that compares copies, or manuscripts.

To read the titles they give an editor, or collator of a manuscript, you would take him for the glory of letters. Addison.

2. One who presents to an ecclesiastical benefice.

A mandatory cannot interrupt an ordinary collator, 'till a month is expired from the day of presentation. Ayliffe's Parerg.

TO COLLA'UD. v. a. [collaudo, Lat.] To join in praising. Dict.

COLLEAGUE. n. f. [collega, Lat.] A partner in office or employment. Anciently accented on the last syllable.

Easy it might be seen that I intend

Mercy colleague with justice, sending thee. Milton's P. Lost.

The regents, upon demise of the crown, would keep the peace without colleagues. Swift.

TO COLLE'AGUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To unite with.

Colleague'd with this dream of his advantage,

He hath not fail'd to pester us with message,

Importing the surrender of those lands. Shakesp. Hamlet.

TO COLLE'CT. v. a. [colligo collectum, Latin.]

1. To gather together; to bring into one place.

'Tis memory alone that enriches the mind, by preserving what our labour and industry daily collect. Watts.

2. To draw many units, or numbers, into one sum.

Let a man collect into one sum as great a number as he pleases, this multitude, how great soever, lessens not one jot the power of adding to it. Locke.

3. To gain from observation.

The reverent care I bear unto my lord,

Made me collect these dangers in the duke. Shak. Hen. VI.

4. To infer as a consequence; to gather from premises.

How great the force of such an erroneous persuasion is, we may collect from our Saviour's premonition to his disciples. Decay of Piety.

They conclude they can have no idea of infinite space, because they can have no idea of infinite matter; which consequence, I conceive, is very ill collected. Locke.

5. To COLLECT himself. To recover from surprize; to gain command over his thoughts; to assemble his sentiments.

Be collected;

No more amazement.

Shakespeare's Tempest.

Affrighted much,

I did in time collect myself, and thought

This was so, and no slumber. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Prosperity unexpected often maketh men careless and remiss; whereas they who receive a wound, become more vigilant and collected. Hayward.

CO'LLLECT. n. f. [colleeta, low Lat.] A short comprehensive prayer, used at the sacrament; any short prayer.

Then let your devotion be humbly to say over proper collects. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

COLLE'CTIBLE. adj. [from collect.] That which may be gathered from the premises by just consequence.

Whether thereby be meant Euphrates, is not collectible from the following words. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 8.

COLLE'CTION. n. f. [from collect.]

1. The act of gathering together.

2. An assemblage; the things gathered.

No perjur'd knight desires to quit thy arms,

Fairest collection of thy sex's charms. Prior.

The gallery is hung with a numerous collection of pictures. Addison on Italy.

3. The act of deducing consequences; ratiocination; discourse. This sense is now scarce in use.

If once we descend unto probable collections, we are then in the territory where free and arbitrary determinations, the territory where human laws take place. Hooker, b. i. f. 8.

4. A corollary; a consecutary deduced from premises; deduction; consequence.

It should be a weak collection, if whereas we say, that when Christ had overcome the sharpness of death, he then opened the kingdom of Heaven to all believers; a thing in such sort affirmed with circumstance, were taken as insinuating an opposite denial before that circumstance be accomplished. Hooker.

This label

Is so from sense in hardness, that I can Make no collection of it. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

When she, from sundry arts, one skill doth draw;

Gath'ring from divers fights, one act of war;

From many cases like, one rule of law:

These her collections, not the senses are. Davies.

COLLECTI'TIOUS. adj. [collectitius, Lat.] Gathered up.

COLLE'CTIVE. adj. [from collect, collectif, French.]

1. Gathered into one mass; aggregated; accumulative.

A body collective; because it containeth a huge multitude.

Hooker, b. iii. sect. 81.

The three forms of government differ only by the civil administration being in the hands of one or two, called kings; in a senate called the nobles, or in the people collective or representative, who may be called the commons. Swift.

The difference between a compound and a collective idea is, that a compound idea unites things of a different kind; but a collective idea, things of the same. Watts's Logick.

2. Employed in deducing consequences; argumentative.

Antiquity left unto us many falsities, controulable not only by critical and collective reason, but contrary observations.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 6.

3. [In grammar.] A collective noun is a word which expresses a multitude, though itself be singular; as a company; an army.

COLLE'CTIVELY. adv. [from collective.] In a general mass; in a body; not singly; not numbered by individuals; in the aggregate; accumulatively; taken together; in a state of combination or union.

Although we cannot be free from all sin collectively, in such sort that no part thereof shall be found inherent in us, yet distributively all great actual offences, as they offer themselves one by one, both may and ought to be by all means avoided.

Hooker, b. v. sect. 48.

Singly and apart many of them are subject to exception, yet collectively they make up a good moral evidence. Hale.

The other part of the water was condensed at the surface of the earth, and sent forth collectively into standing springs and rivers. Woodward's Natural History.

COLLE'CTOR. n. f. [collector, Latin.]

1. A gatherer; he that collects scattered things together.

The grandfather might be the first collector of them into a body. Hale's Common Law of England.

1. The act of striking two bodies together.

Or by collision of two bodies grind,

The air attrite to fire. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 1072.

The devil sometimes borrowed fire from the altar to consume the votaries; and by the mutual collision of well-meant zeal, set even orthodox Christians in a flame. Dec. of Picty.

The flint and the steel you may move apart as long as you please; but it is the hitting and collision of them that must make them strike fire. Bentley's Sermons.

2. The state of being struck together; a clash.

Then from the clashes between popes and kings,

Debate, like sparks from flint's collision, springs. Denham.

TO COLLOCATE. v. a. [colloco, Latin.] To place; to station.

If you desire to superinduce any virtue upon a person, take the creature in which that virtue is most eminent: of that creature take the parts wherein that virtue chiefly is collocate. Bacon's Natural History.

COLLOCA'TION. n. f. [collocatio, Latin.]

1. The act of placing; disposition.

2. The state of being placed.

CO'LLY. n. f. [from coal.] The smut of coal.

Suppose thou saw her dressed in some old hirsute attire, out of fashion, coarse raiment, besmeared with soot, colly, perfumed with opopanax. Burton on Melancholy.

TO CO'LLY. v. a. To grime with coal; to smut with coal.

Brief as the lightning in the collied night,

That, in a speen, unfolds both heav'n and earth;

And, ere a man hath pow'r to say behold,

The jaws of darkness do devour it up. Shakespeare.

COLLY'RUM. n. f. [Latin.] An ointment for the eyes.

CO'LMAR. n. f. [Fr.] A sort of PEAR, which see.

CO'LOGN Earth. n. f. Is a deep brown, very light bastard ochre, which, though generally esteemed an earth, is no pure native fossil; but contains more vegetable than mineral matter, and owes its origin to the remains of wood long buried in the earth. It is dug in France and Germany, particularly about Cologne, nor is England without it. Hill on Fossils.

CO'LOM. n. f. [κωλον.]

1. A point [:] used to mark a pause greater than that of a comma, and less than that of a period. Its use is not very exactly fixed, nor is it very necessary, being confounded by most with the semicolon. It was used before punctuation was refined, to mark almost any sense less than a period. To apply it properly, we should place it, perhaps, only where the sense is continued without dependence of grammar or construction; as, I love him, I despise him: I have long ceased to trust, but shall never forbear to succour him.

2. The greatest and widest of all the intestines, about eight or nine hands breadth long. It begins where the ilium ends, in the cavity of the os ilium on the right side; from thence ascending by the kidney, on the same side, it passes under the concave side of the liver, to which it is sometimes tied, as likewise to the gall-bladder, which tinges it yellow in that place: then it runs under the bottom of the stomach to the spleen in the left side, to which it is also knit: from thence it turns down to the left kidney; and thence passing, in form of an S, it terminates at the upper part of the os sacrum, in the rectum. Quincy.

Now, by your cruelty hard bound,

I strain my guts, my colon wound. Swift.

The contents of the colon are of a fower, fetid, acid smell in rabbits. Floyer on the Humours.

COLONEL n. f. [Of uncertain etymology. Skinner imagines it originally colonia'tis, the leader of a colony. Minsheu deduces it from colonna, a pillar; as patriæ columen; exercitus columen. Each is plausible.] The chief commander of a regiment; a field officer of the highest rank, next to the general officers. It is now generally sounded with only two distinct syllables, col'nel.

The chiefest help must be the care of the colonel, that hath the government of all his garrison. Spenser on Ireland.

Captain or colonel, or knight in arms,

Whose chance on these defenceless doors may seize,

If deed of honour did thee ever please,

Guard them, and him within protect from harms. Milton.

COLONELSHIP n. f. [from colonel.] The office or character of colonel.

While he continued a subaltern, he complained against the pride of colonels towards their officers; yet, in a few minutes after he had received his commission for a regiment, he confessed that colonelship was coming fast upon him. Swift.

TO COLONISE v. a. [from colony.] To plant with inhabitants; to settle with new planters; to plant with colonies.

There was never an hand drawn, that did double the rest of the habitable world, before this; for so a man may truly term it, if he shall put to account as well that that is, as that which may be hereafter, by the farther occupation and colonizing of those countries: and yet it cannot be affirmed, if one speak ingenuously, that it was the propagation of the Christian faith that was the adamant of that discovery, entry, and plantation; but gold and silver, and temporal profit and glory; so that what was first in God's providence, was but second in man's appetite and intention. Bacon's Holy War.

Druina hath advantage by acquiescence of islands, which she colonizeth and fortifieth daily. Howel's Vocal Forest.

COLONNA'DE n. f. [from colonna, Itak a column.]

1. A peristyle of a circular figure, or a series of columns, disposed in a circle, and insulated within side. Builder's Dict.

Here circling colonnades the ground inclose,

And here the marble statues breathe in rows. Addis. on Italy.

2. Any series or range of pillars.

For you my colonnades extend their wings. Pope.

COLONY n. f. [colonia, Latin.]

1. A body of people drawn from the mother-country to inhabit some distant place.

To these new inhabitants and colonies he gave the same law under which they were born and bred. Spenser on Ireland.

Rooting out these two rebellious sects, he placed English colonies in their rooms. Davies on Ireland.

Osiris, or the Bacchus of the ancients, is reported to have civilized the Indians, planting colonies and building cities. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. The country planted; a plantation.

The rising city, which from far you see,

Is Carthage; and a Trojan colony. Dryd. Virg. Æn.

COLOPHONY n. f. [from Colophon, a city whence it came.] Rosin.

Of Venetian turpentine, slowly evaporating about a fourth or fifth part, the remaining substance suffered to cool, would afford me a coherent body, or a fine colophony. Boyle.

Turpentine and oils leave a colophony, upon the separation of their thinner oil. Floyer on the Humours.

COLOQUINTEDA n. f. [colocynthis, Lat. κολόκυνθις.] The fruit of a plant of the same name, brought from the Levant, about the bigness of a large orange, and often called bitter apple. Its colour is a sort of golden brown: its inside is full of kernels, which are to be taken out before it be used. Both the seed and pulp are intolerably bitter. It is a violent purgative, of considerable use in medicine. Chambers.

COLORATE adj. [coloratus, Latin.] Coloured; died; marked or stained with some colour.

Had the tunics and humours of the eye been colorate, many rays proceeding from visible objects would have been stopt. Ray on the Creation.

COLORA'TION n. f. [coloro, Latin.]

1. The art or practice of colouring.

2. The state of being coloured.

Amongst curiosities I shall place coloration, though it be somewhat better; for beauty in flowers is their preeminence. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 50.

COLORIFICK adi. [colorificus, Latin.] That which has the power of producing dyes, tints, colours, or hues.

In this composition of white, the several rays do not suffer any change in their colorifick qualities by acting upon one another; but are only mixed, and by a mixture of their colours produce white. Newton's Opt.

VOL. I.

COLO'SSE } n. f. [colossus, Latin.] A statue of enormous magnitude.

COLO'SSUS } n. f. [colossus, Latin.] A statue of enormous magnitude.

Not to mention the walls and palace of Babylon, the pyramids of Egypt, or colosse of Rhodes. Temple.

There huge colossus rose, with trophies crown'd,

And runick characters were grav'd around. Pope.

COLOSSE'AN adj. [colossus, Lat.] In form of a colossus; of the height and bigness of such a statue; giantlike.

COLOUR n. f. [color, Latin.]

1. The appearance of bodies to the eye only; hue; die. It is a vulgar idea of the colours of solid bodies, when we perceive them to be a red, or blue, or green tincture of the surface; but a philosophical idea, when we consider the various colours to be different sensations, excited in us by the refracted rays of light, reflected on our eyes in a different manner, according to the different size, or shape, or situation of the particles of which the surfaces of those bodies are composed. Watts's Logick.

Her hair shall be of what colour it please God. Shakesp.

For though our eyes can nought but colours see,

Yet colours give them not their pow'r of sight. Davies.

The lights of colours are more refrangible one than another in this order; red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, deep violet. Newton's Opt. Exp. 7.

2. The freshness; or appearance of blood in the face.

My cheeks no longer did their colour boast. Dryden.

A sudden horror seiz'd his giddy head,

And his ears trickled, and his colour fled. Dryden.

3. The tint of the painter.

When each bold figure just begins to live;

The treach'rous colours the fair art betray,

And all the bright creation fades away. Pope's Eff. Crit.

4. The representation of any thing superficially examined.

Whose wisdom is only of this world, to put false colours upon things, to call good evil, and evil good, against the conviction of their own consciences. Swift.

5. Concealment; palliation; excuse; superficial cover.

It is no matter if I do halt; I have the wars for my colour, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable. Sh. Hen. IV.

Their sin admitted no colour or excuse. King Charles.

6. Appearance; pretence; false shew.

Under the colour of commending him,

I have access my own love to prefer. Shakespeare.

Merchants came to Rhodes with a great ship laden with corn, under the colour of the sale whereof they noted all that was done in the city. Knolles's History of the Turks.

7. Kind; species; character.

Boys and women are, for the most part, cattle of this colour. Shakespeare's As you like it.

8. In the plural, a standard; an ensign of war: they say the colours of the foot, and standard of horse.

He at Venice gave

His body to that pleasant country's earth,

And his pure soul unto his captain Christ;

Under whose colours he had fought so long. Shak. Rich. II.

Against all checks, rebukes, and manners,

I must advance the colours of my love,

And not retire. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

The banks on both sides were filled with companies, passing all along the river under their colours, with trumpets sounding. Knolles's History of the Turks.

An author compares a ragged coin to a tattered colours. Addis.

TO COLOUR v. a. [coloro, Latin.]

1. To mark with some hue, or die.

The rays, to speak properly, are not coloured: in them there is nothing else than a certain power and disposition to stir up a sensation of this or that colour. Newton's Opt.

2. To palliate; to excuse; to dress in specious colours, or fair appearances.

I told him, that I would not favour or colour in any sort his former folly. Raleigh's Essays.

He colours the falsehood of Æneas by an express command from Jupiter to forsake the queen. Dryden's Dedic. Æn.

3. To make plausible.

We have scarce heard of an insurrection that was not coloured with grievances of the highest kind, or countenanced by one or more branches of the legislature. Addis. Freeholder.

4. TO COLOUR a stranger's goods, is when a freeman allows a foreigner to enter goods at the customhouse in his name; so that the foreigner pays but single duty, when he ought to pay double. Phillips.

TO COLOUR v. n. To blush. A low word, only used in conversation.

COLOURABLE adj. [from colour.] Specious; plausible. It is now little used.

They have now a colourable pretence to withstand innovations, having accepted of other laws and rules already. Spenser.

They were glad to lay hold on so colourable a matter, and to traduce him as an author of suspicious innovation. Hooker.

Had I sacrificed ecclesiastical government and revenues to their covetousness and ambition, they would have found no colourable necessity of an army. K. Charles.

We hope the mercy of God will consider us unto some mineration of our offences; yet had not the sincerity of our parents so colourable expectations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

COLOURABLY. adv. [from colourable.] Speciously; plausibly.

The process, howsoever colourably awarded, hath not hit the very mark whereat it was directed. Bacon.

COLOURED. participial adj. [from colour.] Streaked; diversified with variety of hues.

The coloured are coarser juiced, and therefore not so well, and equally concocted. Bacon's Nat. History.

COLOURING. n. f. [from colour.] The part of the painter's art that teaches to lay on his colours with propriety and beauty.

From lines drawn true, our eye may trace

A foot, a knee, a hand, a face;

Yet if the colouring be not there,

At best 'twill only not displease.

Prior.

COLOURIST. n. f. [from colour.] A painter who excels in giving the proper colours to his designs.

Titian, Paul Veronese, Van Dyck, and the rest of the good colourists, have come nearest to nature. Dryd. Dufresnoy.

COLOURLESS. adj. [from colour.] Without colour; not distinguished by any hue; transparent.

Transparent substances, as glass, water and air, when made very thin by being blown into bubbles, or otherways formed into plates, exhibit various colours, according to their various thinness; although, at a greater thickness, they appear very clear and colourless. Newton's Opt.

Pellucid colourless glass or water, by being beaten into a powder or froth, do acquire a very intense whiteness. Bentley.

COLT. n. f. [colt, Saxon.]

1. A young horse: used commonly for the male offspring of a horse, as foal for the female.

The colt hath about four years of growth, and so the fawn, and so the calf. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 759.

Like colts or unmanaged horses, we start at dead bones and lifeless blocks. Taylor's Holy Living.

No sports, but what belong to war, they know;

To break the stubborn colt, to bend the bow. Dryd. Æn.

2. A young foolish fellow.

Ay, that's a colt, indeed; for he doth nothing but talk of his horse. Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.

TO COLT. v. n. [from the noun.] To frisk; to be licentious; to run at large without rule; to riot; to frolick.

As soon as they were out of fight by themselves, they shook off their bridles, and began to colt anew more licentiously than before. Spenser's State of Ireland.

TO COLT. v. a. To befool.

What a plague mean ye, to colt me thus? Sh. Hen. IV.

COLTS-FOOT. n. f. [from colt and foot.]

It hath a radiated flower, whose disk consists of many florets, but the crown composed of many half florets: the embryoes are included in a multifid flowercup, which turns to downy seeds fixed in a bed. The species are, 1. Common colts-foot. 2. Round leaved smooth colts-foot of the Alps. The first common in watery places in England; the second grows wild upon the Alps: the flowers of this are purple, and those of the common fort yellow. Miller.

COLTS-TOOTH. n. f. [from colt and tooth.]

1. An imperfect or superfluous tooth in young horses.

2. A love of youthful pleasure; a disposition to the practices of youth.

Well said, lord Sands;

Your colts-tooth is not cast yet?—

—No, my lord; nor shall not, while I have a stump. Shak.

There it is not strange, that the mind should give itself up to the common opinion, or render itself to the first comer. Locke.

COMET. n. f. [cometa, Latin, a hairy star.]

A heavenly body in the planetary region appearing suddenly, and again disappearing; and, during the time of its appearance, moving through its proper orbit, like a planet. The orbits of comets are ellipses, having one of their foci in the center of the sun; and being very long and eccentric, they become invisible, when in that part most remote from the sun. Comets, popularly called blazing stars, are distinguished from other stars by a long train or tail of light, always opposite to the sun: hence arises a popular division of comets into three kinds, bearded, tailed, and haired comets; though the division rather relates to the different circumstances of the same comet, than to the phenomena of the several. Thus when the comet is eastward of the sun, and moves from it, the comet is said to be bearded, barbatus, because the light marches before it. When the light is westward of the sun, the comet is said to be tailed, because the train follows it. When the comet and the sun are diametrically opposite, the earth being between them, the train is hid behind the body of the comet, excepting a little that appears around it, in form of a border of hair, hence called crinitus.

According to Sir Isaac Newton, the tail of a comet is a very thin slender vapour, emitted by the head or nucleus of the comet, ignited by their near neighbourhood to the sun, and this vapour is furnished by the atmosphere of the comet. The tails are of various lengths; and being produced in the perihelions of the comets, will go off along with their heads into remote regions, and there gradually vanish, till the comets return towards the sun. The vapours of comets being thus dilated, rarefied, and diffused through all the celestial regions, may probably, by little and little, by means of their own gravity, be attracted down to the planets, and become intermingled with their atmospheres. For the conservation of the water, and moisture of the planets, comets seem absolutely requisite; from whose condensed vapours and exhalations all that moisture which is spent in vegetations and putrefactions, and turned into dry earth, may be resupplied and recruited; for all vegetables grow and increase wholly from fluids; and, as to their greatest part, turn by putrefaction into earth again, an earthy slime being perpetually precipitated to the bottom of putrefying liquors. Hence the quantity of dry earth must continually increase, and the moisture of the globe decrease, and at last be quite evaporated, if it have not a continual supply from some part or other of the universe. And I suspect, adds Sir Isaac, that the spirit which makes the finest, subtlest, and best part of our air, and which is absolutely requisite for the life and being of all things, comes principally from the comets. On this principle there seems to be some foundation for the popular opinion of presages from comets; since the tail of a comet, thus intermingled with our atmosphere, may produce changes very sensible in animal and vegetable bodies.

The same great author has computed that the sun's heat, in the comet of 1680, was, to his heat with us at Midsummer, as twenty-eight thousand to one; and that the heat of the body of the comet, was near two thousand times as great as that of red-hot iron. He also calculates, that a globe of red-hot iron, of the dimensions of our earth, would scarce be cool in fifty thousand years. If then the comet be supposed to cool a hundred times as fast as red-hot iron, yet, since its heat was a thousand times greater, supposing it of the bigness of the earth, it would not be cool in a million of years. Hitherto no comet has threatened the earth with a nearer approach than that of 1680; for, by calculation, Dr. Halley found, on November 11, that comet was not above one semi-diameter of the earth to the northward of the way of the earth; at which time, had the earth been in that part of its orbit, the comet would have had a parallax equal to that of the moon. What might have been the consequence of so near an appulse? a contact or shock of the celestial bodies? a deluge, Mr. Whiston says. Astronomers have been divided about the return of comets, and time and observation must determine the question. However, Dr. Halley has foretold the return of one in 1758, which formerly appeared in 1456. Trevoux. Chambers.

And wherefore gaze this goodly company,

As if they saw some wondrous monument,

Some comet, or an unusual prodigy. Shak. Tam. of the Shrew.

Such his fell glances as the fatal light

Of staring comets. Crasshaw.

I considered a comet, or, in the language of the vulgar, a blazing star, as a sky-rocket discharged by an hand that is almighty. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 103.

Fierce meteors shoot their arbitrary light,

And comets march with lawless horrors bright. Prior.

Co'METARY. } adj. [from comet.] Relating to a comet:

Those who are persuaded that they shall continue for ever, cannot chuse but aspire after a happiness commensurate to their duration. Tillotson.

VOL. I.

Nothing commensurate to the desires of human nature; on which it could fix as its ultimate end, without being carried on with any farther desire. Rogers's Sermons.

Matter and gravity are always commensurate. Bentley.

COMME'NSURATELY. adv. [from commensurate.] With the capacity of measuring, or being measured by some other thing.

We are constrained to make the day serve to measure the year as well as we can, though not commensurately to each year; but by collecting the fraction of days in several years; till they amount to an even day. Hilder on Time.

COMMENSURA'TION. n. f. [from commensurate.] Proportion; reduction of some things to some common measure.

A body over great, or over small, will not be thrown so far as a body of a middle size; so that, it seemeth, there must be a commensuration or proportion between the body moved and the force, to make it move well. Bacon's Natural History.

All fitness lies in a particular commensuration, or proportion of one thing to another. South.

To COMMENT. v. n. [commentor, Lat.] To annotate; to write notes upon an author; to expound; to explain; with upon before the thing explained.

Enter his chamber, view his lifeless corps, And comment then upon his sudden death. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Such are thy secrets, which my life makes good, And comments on thee; for in ev'ry thing

Thy words do find me out, and parallels bring, And in another make me understand. Herbert.

Criticks having first taken a liking to one of these poets, proceed to comment on him, and illustrate him. Dryd. Juvenal, Ded.

They have contented themselves only to comment upon those texts, and make the best copies they could after those originals. Temple.

Indeed I hate that any man should be idle, while I must translate and comment. Pope.

COMMENT. n. f. [from the verb.] Annotations on an author; notes; explanation; exposition; remarks.

In such a time as this, it is not meet That every nice offence should bear its comment. Shakesp.

Forgive the comment that my passion made Upon thy feature; for my rage was blind. Shakesp. K. John.

All that is behind will be by way of comment on that part of the church of England's charity. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Adam came into the world a philosopher, which sufficiently appeared by his writing the nature of things upon their names: he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties. South's Sermons.

All the volumes of philosophy, With all their comments, never could invent

So politick an instrument. Prior.

Proper gestures, and vehement exertions of the voice, are a kind of comment to what he utters. Addison's Spect. N<sup>o</sup>. 407.

Still with itself compar'd, his text peruse;

And let your comment be the Mantuan muse. Pope.

COMMENTARY. n. f. [commentarius, Latin.]

1. An exposition; annotation; remark.

In religion, scripture is the best rule; and the church's universal practice, the best commentary. King Charles.

2. Memoir; narrative in familiar manner.

Vere, in a private commentary which he wrote of that service, testified that eight hundred were slain. Bacon.

They shew still the ruins of Cæsar's wall, that reached eighteen miles in length, as he has declared it in the first book of his commentaries. Addison on Italy.

COMMENTA'TOR. n. f. [from comment] Expofitor; annotator.

COMMINU'TION. n. f. [from comminute.] The act of grinding into small parts; pulverisation.

Causes of fixation are the even spreading of the spirits and tangible parts, the closeness of the tangible parts, and the jejuneness or extreme comminution of spirits; of which the two first may be joined with a nature liquefiable. Bacon.

The jaw in men and animals furnished with grinders, hath an oblique or transverse motion, necessary for comminution of the meat. Ray on the Creation.

This smiting of the steel with the flint doth only make a comminution, and a very rapid whirling and melting of some particles; but that idea of flame is wholly in us. Bentley.

COMMISERABLE. adj. [from commiserate.] Worthy of compassion; pitiable; such as must excite sympathy or sorrow.

It is the sinfulness thing in the world to destitute a plantation once in forwardness: for, besides the dishonour, it is the guiltiness of blood of many commiserable persons. Bacon's Ess.

This was the end of this noble and commiserable person,
Edward eldest son to the duke of Clarence. Bacon's Hen. VII.

vour to remove it. Locke.

COMMISERA'TION. n. f. [from commiserate.] Pity; compassion; tenderness, or concern for another's pains.

These poor seduced creatures, whom I can neither speak nor think of but with much commiseration and pity. Hooker.

Live, and hereafter say

A mad man's mercy bade thee run away.

——I do defy thy commiseration,

And apprehend thee for a felon here. Shak. Rom. and Juliet.
God knows with how much commiseration, and solicitous caution, I carried on that business, that I might neither encourage the rebels, nor discourage the Protestants. K. Charles.

She ended weeping; and her lovely plight

Immoveable, 'till peace obtain'd from fault

Acknowledg'd and deplor'd, in Adam wrought

Commiseration. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 940.

From you their estate may expect effectual comfort, since there are none from whom it may not deserve commiseration.

Sprat's Sermons.

No where fewer beggars appear to charm up commiseration, yet no where is there greater charity. Graunt's Bills of Mort.

I prevailed with myself to go and see him, partly out of commiseration, and partly out of curiosity. Swift.

COMMISSARY. n. f. [commissarius, low Latin.]

1. An officer made occasionally for a certain purpose; a delegate; a deputy.

2. It is a title of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, appertaining to such as exercises spiritual jurisdiction (at least so far as his commission permits) in places of the diocese so far distant from the chief city, as the chancellor cannot call the subjects. Cowel.

The commissaries of bishops have authority only in some certain place of the diocese, and in some certain causes of the jurisdiction limited to them by the bishop's commission. Ayliffe.

3. An officer who draws up lists of the numbers of an army, and regulates the procuration and conveyance of provision or ammunition.

But is it thus you English bards compose?

With Runick lays thus tag insipid prose?

And when you should your heroes deeds rehearse,

Give us a commissary's list in verse?

Prior.

Co'MMISSARISHIP. n. f. [from commissary.] The office of a commissary.

A commissariship is not grantable for life, so as to bind the succeeding bishop, though it should be confirmed by the dean and chapter. Ayliffe's Parergon.

COMMISSION. n. f. [commissio, low Latin.]

1. The act of entrusting any thing.

2. A trust; a warrant by which any trust is held, or authority exercised.

Commission is the warrant, or letters patent, that all men exercising jurisdiction, either ordinary or extraordinary, have for their power. Cowel.

Omission to do what is necessary,

Seals a commission to a blank of danger. Sh. Troil. and Cress.

The subjects grief

Comes through commissions, which compel from each

The sixth part of his substance, to be levied

Without delay. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

He led our powers;

Bore the commission of my place and person;

The which immediacy may well stand up,

And call itself your brother. Shakefp. King Lear.

He would have them fully acquainted with the nature and extent of their office, and so he joins commission with instruction: by one he conveys power, by the other knowledge. South.

3. A warrant by which a military officer is constituted.
Solyman, filled with the vain hope of the conquest of Persia, gave out his commissions into all parts of his empire, for the raising of a mighty army. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

I was made a colonel; though I gained my commission by the horse's virtues, having leapt over a six-bar gate. Addis. Freesh.

He for his son a gay commission buys,

Who drinks, whores, fights, and in a duel dies. Pope.

4. Charge; mandate; office; employment.

It was both a strange commission, and a strange obedience to a commission, for men, in the midst of their own blood, and being so furiously assailed, to hold their hands contrary to the laws of nature and necessity. Bacon's War with Spain.

Such commission from above

I have receiv'd, to answer thy desire

Of knowledge within bounds: beyond, abstain

To ask.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

At his command the storms invade;

The winds by his commission blow;

'Till with a nod he bids them cease.

Dryden.

He bore his great commission in his look;

But sweetly temper'd awe, and soften'd all he spoke. Dryd.

5. Act of committing a crime; perpetration. Sins of commis- sion are distinguished in theology from sins of omission.

Every commission of sin introduces into the soul a certain degree of hardness. South's Sermons.

He indulges himself in the habit of known sin, whether commission of something which God hath forbidden, or the omission of something commanded. Rogers's Sermons.

6. A number of people joined in a trust or office.

7. The state of that which is intrusted to a number of joint officers; as the broad seal was put into commission.

8. [In commerce] The order by which a factor trades for another person.

To COMMIS'SION. v. a. [from commission.] To empower; to appoint.

The peace polluted thus, a chosen band
He first commissions to the Latian land,
In threat'ning embassy. Dryden's Æn. b. vii. l. 648.
To COMMISSIONATE. v. a. [from commissio.] To commission; to empower.

As he was thus sent by his father, so also were the apostles solemnly commissioned by him to preach to the Gentile world, who, with indefatigable industry and resolute sufferings, pursued the charge; and sure this is competent evidence, that the design was of the greatest and most weighty importance.

Decay of Picty.
COMMISSIONER. n. f. [from commissio.] One included in a warrant of authority.

A commissioner is one who hath commission, as letters patents, or other lawful warrant, to execute any publick office Cowel.

One article they stood upon, which I with your commissioners have agreed upon. Sidney.

These commissioners came into England, with whom covenants were concluded. Hayward.

The archbishop was made one of the commissioners of the treasury. Clarendon.

Suppose itinerary commissioners to inspect, throughout the kingdom, into the conduct of men in office, with respect to morals and religion as well as abilities. Swift.

Like are their merits, like rewards they share,

That shines a consul, this commissioner. Pope's Dunciad.

COMMISSURE. n. f. [commissura, Latin.] Joint; a place where one part is joined to another.

All these inducements cannot countervail the inconvenience of disjointing the commissures with so many strokes of the chisel. Watton's Architecture.

This animal is covered with a strong shell, jointed like armour by four transverse commissures in the middle of the body, connected by tough membranes. Ray on the Creation.

To COMMIT. v. a. [committo, Latin.]

1. To intrust; to give in trust; to put into the hands of another.

It is not for your health thus to commit

Your weak condition to the raw, cold morning. Shakefp.

They who are desirous to commit to memory, might have ease. 2 Mac. ii. 25.

2. To put in any place to be kept safe.

Is my muse controul'd

By servile awe? Born free, and not be bold!

At least I'll dig a hole within the ground,

And to the trusty earth commit the found. Dryd. Pers. Sat.

3. To send to prison; to imprison.

Here comes the nobleman that committed the prince, for striking him about Bardolph. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

They two were committed, at least restrained of their liberty. Clarendon.

So though my ankle she has quitted,

My heart continues still committed;

And, like a bail'd and main priz'd lover,

Although at large, I am bound over. Hudibras, p. ii.

4. To perpetrate; to do a fault; to be guilty of a crime.

Keep thy word justly; swear not; commit not with man's sworn spouse. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Letters out of Ulster gave him notice of the inhumane murders committed there upon a multitude of the Protestants Claren.

A creeping young fellow committed matrimony with a brisk gamesome lass. L'Estrange.

'Tis policy

For son and father to take different sides;

Then lands and tenements commit no treason. Dryden.

COMMITMENT. n. f. [from commit.] Act of sending to prison; imprisonment.

It did not appear by any new examinations or commitments, that any other person of quality was discovered or appeached.

Bacon's Henry VII.

They were glad to compound for his bare commitment to the Tower, whence he was within few days enlarged. Clarendon.

I have been considering, ever since my commitment, what it might be proper to deliver upon this occasion. Swift.

2. An order for sending to prison.

COMMITTEE. n. f. [from commit.]

Those to whom the consideration or ordering of any matter is referred, either by some court to whom it belongs, or by consent of parties. As in parliament, after a bill is read, it is either agreed to and passed, or not agreed to; or neither of these, but referred to the consideration of some appointed by the house, to examine it farther, who thereupon are called a committee.

Manchester had orders to march thither, having a committee of the parliament with him, as there was another committee of the Scottish parliament always in that army; there being also now a committee of both kingdoms residing at London, for the carrying on the war. Clarendon.

All corners were filled with covenanters, confusion, com- mittee men, and soldiers, serving each other to their ends of revenge, or power, or profit; and these committee men and soldiers were possess'd with this covenant. Watton.

COMMITTER. n. f. [from commit.] Perpetrator; he that commits.

Such an one makes a man not only a partaker of other men's sins, but a deriver of the whole guilt to himself; yet so as to leave the committer as full of guilt as before. South.

COMMITTIBLE. adj. [from commit.] Liable to be committed.

Besides the mistakes committible in the solary compute of years, the difference of chronology disturbs his computes.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 12.

To COMMIX. v. a. [commisceo, Lat.] To mingle; to blend;
to mix; to unite with things in one mass.

A dram of gold, dissolved in aqua regia, with a dram of copper in aqua fortis commixed, gave a great colour. Bacon.

I have written against the spontaneous generation of frogs in the clouds; or, on the earth, out of dust and rain-water commixed. Ray on the Creation.

It is manifest by this experiment, that the commixed impressions of all the colours do stir up and beget a sensation of white; that is, that whiteness is compounded of all the colours. Newton's Opt.

COMMIXION. n. f. [from commix.] Mixture; incorporation of different ingredients.

Were thy commixion Greek and Trojan, so

That thou could'st say, this hand is Grecian all,

And this is Trojan. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

COMMIXTION. n. f. [from commix.] Mixture; incorporation;
union of various substances in one mass.

Some species there be of middle and participating natures, that is, of birds and beasts, as bats, and some few others, so confirmed and set together, that we cannot define the beginning or end of either; there being a commixtion of both in the whole, rather than adaption or cement of the one unto the other. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.

COMMIXTURE. n. f. [from commix.]

1. The act of mingling; the state of being mingled; incorporation; union in one mass.

In the commixture of any thing that is more oily or sweet, such bodies are least apt to putrefy, the air working little upon them. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 350.

2. The mass formed by mingling different things; composition;
compound.

Fair ladies, mask'd, are roses in the bud;

Or angels veil'd in clouds: are roses blown,

My love and fear glew'd many friends to thee;

And now I fall, thy tough commixtures melt,

Impairing Henry, strength'ning misproud York. Shakefp.

There is scarcely any rising but by a commixture of good and evil arts. Bacon, Essay 15.

All the circumstances and respect of religion and state intermixed together in their commixture, will better become a royal history, or a council-table, than a single life. Wotton.

COMMODE. n. f. [French.] The head-dress of women.

Let them reflect how they would be affected, should they meet with a man on horseback, in his breeches and jack-boots, dressed up in a commode and a nightrail. SpeSat. N<sup>o</sup>. 435.

She has contrived to shew her principles by the setting of her commode; so that it will be impossible for any woman that is disaffected to be in the fashion. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 8.

She, like some pensive statesman, walks demure,

And smiles, and hugs, to make destruction sure;

Or under high commodes, with looks erect,

Barefac'd devours, in gaudy colours deck'd. Granville.

COMMODOIOUS. adj. [commodus, Latin.]

1. Convenient; suitable; accommodate to any purpose; fit; proper; free from hindrance or uneasiness.

Such a place cannot be commodious to live in; for being so near the moon, it had been too near the sun. Raleigh's Hist.

To that recess, commodious for surprize,

When purp'le light shall next suffuse the skies,

With me repair. Pope's Odyss. b. iv. l. 550.

2. Useful; suited to wants or necessities.

If they think we ought to prove the ceremonies commodious, they do greatly deceive themselves. Hooker, b. iv. sect. 4.

Bacchus was grown a proper young man, had found out the making of wine, and many things else commodious for mankind. Raleigh's History of the World, b. i. c. 6. f. 5.

The gods have done their part,

By sending this commodious plague. Dryden's Oedipus.

Maro's muse,

Thrice sacred muse, commodious precepts gives,

Instructive to the swains. Phillips.

COMMODIOUSLY. adv. [from commodious.]

1. Conveniently.

At the large foot of an old hollow tree,

In a deep cave seated commodiously,

There dwelt a good substantial country mouse. Cowley.

2. Without distress.

We need not fear

To pass commodiously this life, sustain'd

- By him with many comforts, 'till we end
In dust; our final rest, and native home. Milt. Par. Lost.
3. Suitably to a certain purpose
Wisdom may have framed one and the same thing to serve commodiously for divers ends. Hooker, b. v. sect. 42.
Galen, upon the consideration of the body, challenges any one to find how the least fibre might be more commodiously placed for use or comeliness. South's Sermons.
- COMMODIOUSNESS. n. f. [from commodious.] Convenience; advantage.
The place requireth many circumstances; as the situation near the sea, for the commodiousness of an intercourse with England. Bacon.
Of cities, the greatness and riches increase according to the commodiousness of their situation in fertile countries, or upon rivers and havens. Temple.
- COMMODITY. n. f. [commoditas, Latin.]
1. Interest; advantage; profit.
They knew, that howsoever men may seek their own com- modity, yet if this were done with injury unto others, it was not to be suffered. Hooker, b. v. sect. 10.
Commodity, the bias of the world,
The world, which of itself is poised well,
'Till this advantage, this vile drawing bias,
This sway of motion, this commodity,
Makes it take head from all indifferency,
From all direction, purpose, course, intent. Shakesp. K. John.
After much debatement of the commodities or discommodities like to ensue, they concluded. Hayward.
2. Convenience of time or place.
There came into her head certain verses, which, if she had had present commodity, she would have adjoined as a retraction to the other. Sidney, b. ii.
She demanded leave, not to lose this long fought for com- modity of time, to ease her heart. Sidney.
Travellers turn out of the highway, drawn either by the commodity of a foot-path, or the delicacy or the freshness of the fields. Pen. Johnson's Discov.
3. Wares; merchandise; goods for traffick.
All my fortunes are at sea;
Nor have I money, nor commodity
To raise a present sum. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
It had been difficult to make such a mole where they had not so natural a commodity as the earth of Puzzuola, which immediately hardens in the water. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
Commodities are moveables, valuable by money, the common measure. Locke.
Of money in the commerce and traffick of mankind, the principal use is that of saving the commutation of more bulky commodities. Arbuthnot on Coins.
- COMMODORE. n. f. [probably corrupted from the Spanish
comendador.] The captain who commands a squadron of ships.
- COMMON. n. f. [communis, Latin.]
1. Belonging equally to more than one.
Though life and sense be common to man and brutes, and their operations in many things alike; yet by this form he lives the life of a man, and not of a brute, and hath the sense of a man, and not of a brute. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
He who hath received damage, has, besides the right of punishment common to him with other men, a particular right to seek reparation. Locke.
2. Having no possessor or owner.
Where no kindred are to be found, we see the possession of a private man revert to the community, and so become again perfectly common, no body having a right to inherit them; nor can any one have a property in them, otherwise than in other things common by nature. Locke.
3. Vulgar; mean; not distinguished by any excellence; often seen; easy to be had; of little value; not rare; not scarce.
Or as the man whom princes do advance,
Upon their gracious mercy-seat to sit,
Doth common things, of course and circumstance,
To the reports of common men commit. Davies.
4. Publick; general; serving the use of all.
He was advised by a parliament-man not to be strict in reading all the common prayer, but make some variation. Walt.
I need not mention the old common shore of Rome, which ran from all parts of the town, with the current and violence of an ordinary river. Addison on Italy.
5. Of no rank; mean; without birth or descent.
Look, as I blow this feather from my face,
And as the air blows it to me again,
Such is the lightness of you common men. Shak. Henry VI.
Flying bullets now,
To execute his rage, appear too slow;
They miss, or sweep but common souls away,
For such a loss Opdam his life must pay. Waller.
6. Frequent; usual; ordinary.
There is an evil which I have seen common among men.
Eccles. vi. 1.
The Papists were the most common place, and the butt against whom all the arrows were directed. Clarendon.

- Neither is it strange that there should be mysteries in divinity, as well as in the commonest operations in nature. Swift.
7. Prostitute.
'Tis a strange thing, the impudence of some women! was the word of a dame, who herself was common. L'Estrange.
Hipparchus was going to marry a common woman, but consulted Philander upon the occasion. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 475.
8. [In grammar.] Such verbs as signify both action and passion are called common; as aspurnor, I despise, or am despised; and also such nouns as are both masculine and feminine, as parens.
- COMMON. n. f. [from the adjective.] An open ground equally used by many persons.
Then take we down his load, and turn him off,
Like to the empty ass, to shake his ears,
And graze in commons. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.
Is not the separate property of a thing the great cause of its endearment? Does any one respect a common as much as he does his garden? South.
- COMMON. adv. [from the adjective.] Commonly; ordinarily.
I am more than common tall. Shakesp. As you like it.
- In COMMON.
1. Equally to be participated by a certain number.
By making an explicate consent of every commoner necessary to any one's appropriating to himself any part of what is given in common, children or servants could not cut the meat which their father or master had provided for them in common, without assigning to every one his peculiar part. Locke.
2. Equally with another; indiscriminately.
In a work of this nature it is impossible to avoid puerilities, it having that in common with dictionaries, and books of antiquities. Arbuthnot on Coins.
- To COMMON. v. n. [from the noun.] To have a joint right with others in some common ground.
- COMMON LAW contains those customs and usages which have,
by long prescription, obtained in this nation the force of laws.
It is distinguished from the statute law, which owes its authority to acts of parliament.
- COMMON PLEAS. The king's court now held in Westminster-hall; but anciently moveable. Gwin observes, that 'till Henry III. granted the magna charta there were but two courts, the exchequer, and the king's bench, so called because it followed the king; but upon the grant of that charter, the court of common pleas was erected, and settled at Westminster. All civil causes, both real and personal, are, or were formerly, tried in this court, according to the strict laws of the realm;
and Fortescue represents it as the only court for real causes.
The chief judge is called the lord chief justice of the common pleas, and he is assisted by three or four associates, created by letters patent from the king. Cowel.
- COMMONABLE. adj. [from common.] What is held in common.
Much good land might be gained from forests and chafes, and from other commonable places, so as there be care taken that the poor commoners have no injury. Bacon's Ad. to Villers.
- COMMONAGE. n. f. [from common.] The right of feeding on a common; the joint right of using any thing in common with others.
- COMMONALTY. n. f. [communauté, French.]
1. The common people; the people of the lower rank.
Bid him strive
To gain the love o' th' commonalty; the duke Shall govern England. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
There is in every state, as we know, two portions of subjects; the nobles and the commonalty. Bacon, Essay 16.
The emmet joined in her popular tribes
Of commonalty. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii. l. 489.
All gentlemen are almost obliged to it; and I know no reason we should give that advantage to the commonalty of England, to be foremost in brave actions. Dryd. Pref. to An. Mir.
2. The bulk of mankind.
I myself too will use the secret acknowledgment of the commonalty bearing record of the God of Gods. Hooker, b. iii.
- COMMONER. n. f. [from common.]
1. One of the common people; a man of low rank; of mean condition.
Doubt not
The commoners, for whom we stand, but they,
Upon their ancient malice, will forget. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
His great men durst not pay their court to him, 'till he had satiated his thirst of blood by the death of some of his loyal commoners. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 10.
2. A man not noble.
This commoner has worth and parts,
Is prais'd for arms, or lov'd for arts:
His head aches for a coronet;
And who is blest'd, that is not great? Prior.
3. A member of the house of commons.
4. One who has a joint right in common ground.
Much land might be gained from commonable places, so as there be care taken that the poor commoners have no injury.
Bacon's Advice to Villers.

5. A student of the second rank at the university of Oxford; one that eats at the common table.
6. A prostitute.

Behold this ring,
Whose high respect, and rich validity,
Did lack a parallel: yet, for all that,
He gave it to a commoner o' th' camp. Shakespeare
COMMONITION. n. f. [commonitio, Latin.] Advice; warning; instruction.

COMMONLY. adv. [from common.] Frequently; usually; ordinarily.

This hand of your's requires
Much castigation, exercise devout;

I turned to my commonplace-book, and found his case under the word coquette. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 107.

COMMONS. n. f.

1. The vulgar; the lower people; those who inherit no honours.
Little office

The hateful commons will perform for us;
Except, like curs, to tear us all in pieces. Shakesp. Richard II.
Hath he not pass'd the nobles and the commons? Shakesp.
These three to kings and chiefs their scenes display,
The rest before the ignoble commons play. Dryden's Fables.
The gods of greater nations dwell around,
And, on the right and left, the palace bound;
The commons where they can: the nobler fort,
With winding doors wide open, front the court. Dryden.

2. The lower house of parliament, by which the people are represented, and of which the members are chosen by the people.

My good lord,
How now for mitigation of this bill
Urg'd by the commons? Doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no? Shakespeare's Henry VI.
In the house of commons many gentlemen, unsatisfied of his guilt, durst not condemn him. King Charles.

3. Food; fare; diet: so called from colleges, where it is eaten in common.

He painted himself of a dove-colour, and took his commons with the pigeons. L'Estrange.

Mean while she quench'd her fury at the flood,
And with a lenten fallad cool'd her blood:
Their commons, though but coarse, were nothing scant;
Nor did their minds an equal banquet want. Dryden.

The doctor now obeys the summons,
Likes both his company and commons;
Displays his talent; sits 'till ten;
Next day invited, comes again. Swift.

COMMONWEAL. } n. f. [from common and weal, or wealth.]

1. A polity; an established form of civil life.

Two foundations bear up publick societies; the one inclination, whereby all men desire sociable life; the other an order agreed upon, touching the manner of their union in living together: the latter is that which we call the law of a commonweal. Hooker.

It was impossible to make a commonweal in Ireland, without settling of all the estates and possessions throughout the kingdom. Davies on Ireland.

A continual parliament would but keep the commonweal in tune, by preserving laws in their vigour. King Charles.

There is no body in the commonwealth of learning who does not profess himself a lover of truth. Locke.

2. The publick; the general body of the people.

Such a prince,
So kind a father of the commonweal. Shakesp. Henry IV.
Their sons are well tutored by you: you are a good member of the commonwealth. Shakespeare's Love's Labour Lost.

3. A government in which the supreme power is lodged in the people; a republick.

Did he, or do yet any of them, imagine
The gods would sleep to such a Stygian practice,

Against that commonwealth which they have founded. Johnson.
Commonwealths were nothing more, in their original, but free cities; though sometimes, by force of orders and discipline, they have extended themselves into mighty dominions. Temple.

This text is far from proving Adam sole proprietor, it is a confirmation of the original community of all things. Locke.

3. Frequency; commonness.

He was but, as the cuckow is in June,

Heard, not regarded; seen, but with such eyes,

As, sick and blunted with community,

Afford no extraordinary gaze. Shakespeare.

COMMUTABILITY. n. f. [from commutable.] The quality of being capable of exchange.

COMMUTABLE. adj. [from commute.] That may be exchanged for something else; that may be bought off, or ransomed.

COMMUTATION. n. f. [from commute.]

1. Change; alteration.

An innocent nature could hate nothing that was innocent: in a word, so great is the commutation, that the soul then hated only that which now only it loves, i. e. sin. South's Sermons.

2. Exchange; the act of giving one thing for another.

The whole universe is supported by giving and returning, by commerce and commutation. South's Sermons.

According to the present temper of mankind, it is absolutely necessary that there be some method and means of commutation, as that of money. Ray on the Creation.

The use of money in the commerce and traffick of mankind, is that of saving the commutation of more bulky commodities. Arbuthnot on Coins.

3. Ransom; the act of exchanging a corporal for a pecuniary punishment.

The law of God had allowed an evasion, that is, by way of commutation or redemption. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.

COMMUTATIVE. adj. [from commute.] Relative to exchange; as commutative justice, that honesty which is exercised in traffick, and which is contrary to fraud in bargains.

TO COMMUTE. v. a. [commuto, Latin.]

1. To exchange; to put one thing in the place of another; to give or receive one thing for another.

This will commute our tasks, exchange these pleasant and gainful ones, which God assigns, for those uneasy and fruitless ones we impose on ourselves. Decay of Piety.

2. To buy off, or ransom one obligation by another.

Some commute swearing for whoring; as if forbearance of the one were a dispensation for the other. L'Estrange.

TO COMMUTE. v. n. To atone; to bargain for exemption.

Those institutions which God designed for means to further men in holiness, they look upon as a privilege to serve instead of it, and to commute for it. South's Sermons.

COMMUTUAL. adj. [con and mutual.] Mutual; reciprocal: used only in poetry.

Love our hearts, and hymen did our hands,

Unite commutual in most sacred bands. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

There, with commutual zeal, we both had strove

In acts of dear benevolence and love;

Brothers in peace, not rivals in command. Pope's Odyssey.

COMPACT. n. f. [paſſum, Latin.] A contract; an accord; an agreement; a mutual and settled appointment between two or more, to do or to forbear something.

I hope the king made peace with all of us;

And the compact is firm and true in me. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

In the beginnings of speech there was an implicit compact, founded upon common consent, that such words, voices, or gestures, should be signs whereby they would express their thoughts. South.

TO COMPACT. v. a. [compingō compactum, Latin.]

1. To join together with firmness; to unite closely; to consolidate.

Inform her full of my particular fears;
And thereto add such reasons of your own,
As may compact it more. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Nor are the nerves of his compacted strength
Stretch'd, and dissolv'd into unfinew'd length. Denham.

By what degrees this earth's compacted sphere
Was harden'd, woods, and rocks, and towns to bear. Roscom.

This disease is more dangerous as the solids are more strict and compacted, and consequently more so as people are advanced in age. Arbuthnot on Diet.

Now the bright sun compacts the precious stone,
Imparting radiant lustre, like his own. Blackmore's Creation.

2. To make out of something.

If he, compact of jars, grow musical,
We shall have shortly discord in the spheres. Shakespeare.

3. To league with.

Thou pernicious woman,
Compact with her that's gone, think'st thou thy oaths,
Though they would swear down each particular fact,
Were testimonies. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

4. To join together; to bring into a system.

We see the world so compacted, that each thing preserveth other things, and also itself. Hooker, b. i. f. 9.

COMPACT. adj. [compactus, Latin.]

1. Firm; solid; close; dense; of firm texture.

Is not the density greater in free and open spaces, void of air and other grosser bodies, than within the pores of water, glass, crystal, gems, and other compact bodies. Newton's Opt.

Without attraction the dislevered particles of the chaos could never convene into such great compact masses as the planets. Bentley.

2. Brief; as a compact discourse.

COMPACTEDNESS. n. f. [from compacted.] Firmness; density;
Sticking or compactedness, being natural to density, requires some excess of gravity in proportion to the density, or some other outward violence, to break it. Digby on Bodies.

Those atoms are supposed infrangible, extremely compacted and hard; which compactedness and hardness is a demonstration, that nothing could be produced by them. Cheyne.

COMPACTLY. adv. [from compact.]

You would sound me from my lowest note to the top of my compass. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony,

This universal frame began:

From harmony to harmony,

Through all the compass of the notes it ran,

The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.

8. [This is rarely used in the singular.] The instrument with which circles are drawn.

If they be two, they are two so,

As stiff twin compasses are two:

Thy soul, the fixt foot, makes no show

To move; but doth, if th' other do. Donne.

In his hand

He took the golden compasses, prepar'd

In God's eternal store, to circumscribe

This universe, and all created things. Milton's Parad. Lost.

To fix one foot of their compass wherever they think fit, and extend the other to such terrible lengths, without describing any circumference at all, is to leave us and themselves in a very uncertain state. Swift on Dissenters in Athens and Rome.

9. The instrument composed of a needle and card, whereby mariners steer.

The breath of religion fills the sails, profit is the compass by which factious men steer their course. King Charles.

Rude as their ships was navigation then;

No useful compass or meridian known:

Coasting, they kept the land within their ken,

And knew no North but when the pole-star shone. Dryden.

With equal force the tempest blows by turns,

From ev'ry corner of the seamen's compass. Row's 7. Shore.

He that first discovered the use of the compass, did more for the supplying and increase of useful commodities than those who built workhouses. Locke.

COMPASS-SAW, n. f.

The compass-saw should not have its teeth set, as other saws have; but the edge of it should be made so broad, and the back so thin, that it may easily follow the broad edge, without having its teeth set. Its office is to cut a round, or any other compass kerf; and therefore the edge must be made broad, and the back thin, that the back may have a wide kerf to turn in. Moxon's Mechan. Exer.

COMPASSION, n. f. [compassion, Fr. from con and pator, Lat.] Pity; commiseration; sorrow for the sufferings of others; painful sympathy.

And good complexion rectify the will? Davies.

Niceness, though it renders them insignificant to great purposes, yet it polishes their complexion, and makes their spirits seem more vigorous. Collier on Pride.

If I write on a black man, I run over all the eminent persons of that complexion. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 262.

3. The temperature of the body according to the various proportions of the four medical humours.

'Tis ill, though different your complexions are,

The family of heav'n for men should war. Dryden's Fables.

For from all tempers he could service draw,

The worth of each, with its alloy, he knew;

And, as the confident of nature, saw

How the complexions did divide and brew. Dryden.

The methods of providence men of this complexion must be unfit for the contemplation of. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Let melancholy rule supreme,

Choler preside, or blood or phlegm,

It makes no difference in the case,

Nor is complexion honour's place. Swift.

COMPLEXIONAL. adj. [from complexion.] Depending on the complexion or temperament of the body.

Men and other animals receive different tinctures from complexional efflorescencies, and descend still lower as they partake of the fuliginous and denigrating humours. Brown.

COMPRESSIBILITY. n. f. [from compressible.] The quality of being compressible; the quality of admitting to be brought by force into a narrower compass; as air may be compressed, but water can by no violence be reduced to less space than it naturally occupies.

COMPRESSIBLE. adj. [from compress.] Capable of being forced into a narrower compass; yielding to pressure, so as that one part is brought nearer to another.

Their being spiral particles, accounts for the elasticity of air; their being spherical particles, which gives free passage to any heterogeneous matter, accounts for air's being compressible. Cheyre's Phil. Prin.

COMPRESSIBleness. n. f. [from compressible.] Capability of being pressed close. Dict.

COMPRESSSION. n. f. [compressio, Latin.] The act of bringing the parts of any body more near to each other by violence; the quality of admitting such an effort of force as may compel the body compressed into a narrower space.

Whensoever a solid body is pressed, there is an inward tumult in the parts thereof, seeking to deliver themselves from the compression; and this is the cause of all violent motion. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 9.

The

The powder in shot, being dilated into such a flame as endureth not compression, moveth likewise in round, the flame being in the nature of a liquid body, sometimes recoiling.

Bacon's Natural History.

Tears are the effects of the compression of the moisture of the brain, upon dilatation of the spirits. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

He that shall find out an hypothesis, by which water may be so rare, and yet not be capable of compression by force, may doubtless, by the same hypothesis, make gold and water, and all other bodies, as much rarer as he pleases; so that light may find a ready passage through transparent substances. Newt.

COMPRESSURE. n. f. [from compress.] The act or force of the body pressing against another.

We tried whether heat would, notwithstanding so forcible a compressure, dilate it. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

TO COMPRI'NT. v. n. [comprimere, Latin.]

The word properly signifies to print together; but it is commonly taken, in law, for the deceitful printing of another's copy or book, to the prejudice of the rightful proprietor.

Phillips's World of Words.

TO COMPRI'SE. v. a. [comprendre compris, French] To contain; to comprehend; to include.

The necessity of shortness causeth men to cut off impertinent discourses, and to comprise much matter in few words.

Hooker, b. v. sect. 32.

Do they not, under doctrine, comprehend the same that we intend by matters of faith? Do not they, under discipline, comprise the regimen of the church? Hooker, b. iii. f. 3.

'Tis the polluted love that multiplies;

But friendship does two souls in one comprise. Roscommon.

But to recover from us by strong hand,

And terms compulsatory, those 'foresaid lands

So by his father lost.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

COMPU'LSION. n. f. [compulsio, Latin.]

1. The act of compelling to something; force; violence of the agents.

If reasons were as plenty as blackberries, I would give no man a reason on compulsion. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

Thoughts, whither have ye led me! with that sweet

Compulsion thus transported. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Such sweet compulsion doth in musick lye,

To lull the daughters of necessity. Milton.

2. The state of being compelled; violence suffered.

Compulsion is in an agent capable of volition, when the beginning or continuation of any action is contrary to the preference of his mind. Locke.

When the fierce foe hung on our broken rear,

With what compulsion and laborious flight

We sunk thus low? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 80.

This faculty is free from compulsion, and so spontaneous, and free from determination by the particular object. Hale.

Possibly there were others who assisted Harold, partly out of fear and compulsion. Hale on Common Law.

COMPU'LSIVE. adj. [from compulso, Fr. compulsus, Latin.]
Having the power to compel; forcible.

The Danube, vast and deep,

Supreme of rivers, to the frightful brink,

Urg'd by compulsive arms, soon as they reach'd,

New terror chill'd their veins. Phillips.

The clergy would be glad to recover their dues by a more short and compulsive method. Swift.

CONCEIVER. n. f. [from conceive.] One that understands or apprehends.

Though hereof prudent symbols and pious allegories be made by wiser conceivers, yet common heads will fly unto superstitious applications.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. 7. c. 1.

CONCENT. n. f. [concentus, Latin.]

1. Concert of voices; harmony; concord of sound.

It is to be considered, that whatsoever virtue is in numbers, for conducing to concent of notes, is rather to be ascribed to the ante-number than to the entire number.

Bacon.

2. Consistency.

'Tis in concent to his own principles, which allow no merit, no intrinsic worth to accompany one state more than another.

Atterbury.

To CONCENTRATE. v. a. [concentrer, Fr. from con and centrum, Lat.] To drive into a narrow compass; to drive towards the center.

Spirit of vinegar, concentrated and reduced to its greatest strength, will coagulate the serum.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CONCENTRATION. n. f. [from concentrate.] Collection into a narrow space round the center; compression into a narrow compass.

All circular bodies, that receive a concentration of the light, must be shadowed in a circular manner.

Peacham on Drawing.

To CONCENTRE. v. n. [concentrer, Fr. from con and centrum, Latin.] To tend to one common centre; to have the same centre with something else.

The bricks having first been formed in a circular mould, and then cut, before their burning, into four quarters or more, the sides afterwards join so closely, and the points concentre so exactly, that the pillars appear one intire piece.

Wotton.

All these are like so many lines drawn from several objects, that some way relate to him, and concentre in him.

Hale.

To CONCENTRE. v. a. To emit towards one centre.

The having a part left to animate, will rather serve to concentre the spirits, and make them more active in the rest.

Decay of Piety.

In thee concentring all their precious beams

Of sacred influence!

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. 9. l. 106.

CONCENTRICAL. } adj. [concentricus, Lat.] Having one com-

CONCENTRICK. } mon centre.

If, as in water stirr'd, more circles be

Produc'd by one, love such additions take;

Those, like so many spheres, but one heav'n make;

For they are all concentrick unto thee.

Donne.

Any substance, pitched steady upon two points, as on an axis, and moving about on that axis, also describes a circle concentrick to the axis.

Moxon's Mech. Exerc.

If the crystalline humour had been concentrical to the sclerodes, the eye would not have admitted a whole hemisphere at one view.

Ray on the Creation.

If a stone be thrown into stagnating water, the waves excited thereby continue some time to arise in the place where the stone fell into the water, and are propagated from thence into concentrick circles upon the surface of the water to great distances.

Newton's Opt.

The manner of its concretion is by concentrical rings, like those of an onion about the first kernel.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

Circular revolutions in concentrick orbs about the sun, or other central body, could in no wise be attained without the power of the Divine Arm.

Bentley's Sermons.

CONCEPTACLE. n. f. [conceptaculum, Lat.] That in which any thing is contained; a vessel.

There

There is at this day resident, in that huge conceptacle, water enough to effect such a deluge. Woodward's Nat. Hist. Pref.

CONCEPTIBLE. adj. [from concepicio conceptum, Latin.] That may be conceived; intelligible; capable to be understood.

Some of his attributes, and the manifestations thereof, are not only highly delectable to the intellectual faculty, but are most suitable and easily conceptible by us, because apparent in his works. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CONCEPTION. n. f. [conceptio, Latin.]

1. The act of conceiving, or quickening with pregnancy.

I will greatly multiply thy sorrow, and thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children. Gen. iii. 16.

Thy sorrow I will greatly multiply
By thy conception; children thou shalt bring
In sorrow forth. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 194.

2. The state of being conceived.

Joy had the like conception in our eyes,
And at that instant, like a babe, sprung up. Shakespeare.

Our own productions flatter us: it is impossible not to be fond of them at the moment of their conception. Dryd. Dufresh.

3. Notion; idea; image in the mind.

As conceptions are the images or resemblances of things to the mind within itself, in the like manner are words or names the marks, tokens, or resemblances of those conceptions to the minds of them whom we converse with. South's Sermons.

Consult the acutest poets and speakers, and they will confess that their quickest, most admired conceptions were such as darted into their minds, like sudden flashes of lightning, they knew not how, nor whence; and not by any certain consequence, or dependence of one thought upon another, as it is in matters of ratiocination. South's Sermons.

To have right conceptions about them, we must bring our understandings to the inflexible natures and unalterable relations of things, and not endeavour to bring things to any preconceived notions of our own. Locke.

4. Sentiments; purpose.

Thou but remember'st me of my own conception. I have perceived a most faint neglect of late; which I have rather blamed as my own jealous curiosity, than as a very pretence and purpose of unkindness. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Please your highness, note

His dangerous conception in this point:
Not friended by his wish to your high person,
His will is most malignant, and it stretches
Beyond you to your friends. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

5. Apprehension; knowledge.

And as if beasts conceiv'd what reason were,
And that conception should distinctly show
They should the name of reasonable bear;
For, without reason, none could reason know. Davies.

6. Conceit; sentiment; pointed thought.

He is too flatulent sometimes, and sometimes too dry; many times unequal, and almost always forced; and, besides, is full of conceptions, points of epigram, and witticisms; all which are not only below the dignity of heroic verse, but contrary to its nature. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

CONCEPTIOUS. adj. [conceptum, Latin.] Apt to conceive; fruitful; pregnant.

Common mother,

Ensear thy fertile and conceptious womb;
Let it no more bring out to ingrateful man. Shakesf. Timon.

CONCEPTIVE. adj. [conceptum, Latin.] Capable to conceive.

In hot climates, and where the uterine parts exceed in heat, by the coldness of this simple they may be reduced into a conceptive constitution. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 7.

TO CONCERN. v. a. [concerner, Fr. concerno, low Latin.]

1. To relate to; to belong to.

Exclude the use of natural reasoning about the sense of holy scripture, concerning the articles of our faith; and then, that the scripture doth concern the articles of our faith, who can assure us? Hooker, b. iii. f. 8.

Count Claudio may hear; for what I would speak of concerns him. Shakespeare's Much ado about Nothing.

Gracious things

Thou hast reveal'd; those chiefly which concern
Just Abraham, and his seed. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

This place concerns not at all the dominion of one brother over the other. Locke.

2. To affect with some passion; to touch nearly; to be of importance to.

I would not

The cause were known to them it most concerns. Shakespeare.

Our wars with France have affected us in our most tender interests, and concerned us more than those with any other nation. Addison on the State of the War.

It much concerns them not to suffer the king to establish his authority on this side. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

The more the authority of any station in society is extended, the more it concerns publick happiness that it be committed to men fearing God. Rogers's Sermons.

3. To interest; to engage by interest.

I knew a young negroe who was sick of the small-pox: I found by enquiry, at a person's concerned for him, that the little tumours left whitish specks behind them. Boyle on Colours.

Above the rest two goddesses appear,

Concern'd for each: here Venus, Juno there. Dryden's Ann.

Providence, where it loves a nation, concerns itself to own and assert the interest of religion, by blasting the spoilers of religious persons and places. South's Sermons.

Whatever past actions it cannot reconcile, or appropriate to that present self by consciousness, it can be no more concerned in than if they had never been done. Locke.

They think themselves out of the reach of providence, and no longer concerned to solicit his favour. Rogers, Sermon n. ii.

4. To disturb; to make uneasy.

In one compressing engine I shut a sparrow, without forcing any air in; and in an hour the bird began to pant, and be concerned, and in less than an hour and a half to be sick. Derham.

CONCERN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Business; affair; considered as relating to some one.

Let early care thy main concerns secure,

Things of less moment may delays endure. Denham.

This manner of exposing the private concerns of families, and sacrificing the secrets of the dead to the curiosity of the living, is one of those licentious practices, which might well deserve the animadversion of our government. Addis. Freeholder.

A heathen emperor said, if the gods were offended, it was their own concern, and they were able to vindicate themselves. Swift.

Religion is no trifling concern, to be performed in any careless and superficial manner. Rogers, Sermon xiii.

2. Interest; engagement.

No plots th' alarm to his retirements give;

'Tis all mankind's concern that he should live. Dryden.

When we speak of the conflagration of the world, these have no concern in the question. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. Importance; moment.

Mysterious secrets of a high concern,
And weighty truths, solid convincing sense,
Explain'd by unaffected eloquence. Roscommon.

The mind is stunned and dazzled amidst that variety of objects: she cannot apply herself to those things which are of the utmost concern to her. Addison's Spectator, No. 465.

4. Passion; affection; regard.

Ah, what concerns did both your souls divide!

Your honour gave us what your love deny'd. Dryden.

O Marcia, let me hope thy kind concerns,

And gentle wishes, follow me to battle! Addison's Cato.

Why all this concern for the poor? We want them not, as the country is now managed: where the plough has no work, one family can do the business of fifty. Swift.

CONCERNING. prep. [from concern: this word, originally a participle, has before a noun the force of a preposition.] Relating to; with relation to.

There is not any thing more subject to error than the true judgment concerning the power and forces of an estate. Bacon.

The ancients had no higher recourse than to nature, as may appear by a discourse concerning this point in Strabo. Brown.

None can demonstrate that there is such an island as Jamaica, yet, upon testimony, I am free from all doubt concerning it. Tillotson, Preface.

CONCERNMENT. n. f. [from concern.]

1. The thing in which we are concerned or interested; affair; business; interest.

To mix with thy concernments I desist

Henceforth, nor too much disapprove my own. Milt. Agon.

This shews how useful you have been,

To bring the king's concernments in. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 2.

Yet when we're sick, the doctor's fetcht in haste,

Leaving our great concernment to the last. Denham.

When my concernment takes up no more room or compass than myself, then, so long as I know where to breathe and to exist, I know also where to be happy. South.

He that is wise in the affairs and concernments of other men, but careless and negligent of his own, that man may be said to be busy, but he is not wise. Tillotson.

Our spiritual interests, and the great concernments of a future state, would doubtless recur often. Atterbury.

Propositions which extend only to the present life, are small, compared with those that have influence upon our everlasting concernments. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. Relation; influence.

Sir, 'tis of near concernment, and imports

No less than the king's life and honour. Denham's Sophy.

He justly fears a peace with me would prove

Of ill concernment to his haughty love. Dryd. Ind. Emperor.

3. Intercourse; business.

The great concernment of men is with men, one amongst another. Locke.

4. Importance; moment.

I look upon experimental truths as matters of great concernment to mankind. Boyle.

5. Interposition; regard; meddling.

He married a daughter to the earl, without any other approbation probation of her father, or concernment in it, than suffering him and her to come into his presence. Clarendon.

6. Passion; emotion of mind.

While they are so eager to destroy the fame of others, their ambition is manifest in their concernment. Dryden.

If it carry with it the notion of something extraordinary, if apprehension and concernment accompany it, the idea is likely to sink the deeper. Locke.

That, made in lust, conclude in perjuries. Dryden's Fables.

CONCLU'DENCY. n. f. [from concludent.] Consequence; regular proof; logical deduction of reason.

Judgment concerning things to be known, or the neglect and concludency of them, ends in decision. Hale.

CONCLU'DENT. adj. [from conclude.] Decisive; ending in just and undeniable consequences.

Though these kind of arguments may seem more obscure, yet, upon a due consideration of them, they are highly consequential and concludent to my purpose. Hale's Orig. of Mank.

CONCLU'SIBLE. adj. [from conclude.] Determinable; certain by regular proof.

'Tis as certainly conclusible from God's prescience, that they will voluntarily do this, as that they will do it all. Hammond.

CONCLU'SION. n. f. [from conclude.]

1. Determination; final decision.

Ways of peaceable conclusion there are but these two certain; the one a sentence of judicial decision, given by authority thereto appointed within ourselves; the other, the like kind of sentence given by a more universal authority. Hooker.

2. The collection from propositions premised; the consequence.

The conclusion of experience, from the time past to the time present, will not be sound and perfect. Bacon's War with Spain.

And marrying divers principles and grounds,

Out of their match a true conclusion brings. Davies.

Then doth the wit

Build fond conclusions on those idle grounds;

Then doth it fly the good, and ill pursue. Davies.

I only deal by rules of art,

Such

* Such as are lawful, and judge by

Conclusions of astrology. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. iii.

It is of the nature of principles, to yield a conclusion different from themselves. Tillotson, Preface.

He granted him both the major and the minor; but denied him the conclusion. Addison's Freeholder, No. 32.

3. The close; the last result of argumentative deduction.

Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter, fear God and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man. Eccles. xii. 13.

I have been reasoning, and in conclusion have thought it best to return to what fortune hath made my home. Swift.

4. The event of experiments.

Her physician tells me,

She has pursu'd conclusions infinite

Of easy ways to die. Shakespeare's Anthony and Cleopatra.

We practise likewise all conclusions of grafting and inoculating, as well of wild trees as fruit trees. Bacon's New Atlant.

5. The end; the upshot; the last part.

6. In Shakespeare it seems to signify silence; confinement of the thoughts.

Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes

And still conclusion, shall acquire no honour,

Demuring upon me. Shakespeare's Anthony and Cleopatra.

CONCLU'SIVE. adj. [from conclude.]

1. Decisive; giving the last determination to the opinion.

The agreeing votes of both houses were not by any law or reason conclusive to my judgment. King Charles.

The last dictate of the understanding is not always absolute in itself, nor conclusive to the will, yet it produces no antecedent nor external necessity. Bramh. Answer to Hobbs.

They have secret reasons for what they seem to do, which, whatever they are, they must be equally conclusive for us as they were for them. Rogers, Serm. iv.

2. Regularly consequential.

Those that are not men of art, not knowing the true forms of syllogism, cannot know whether they are made in right and conclusive modes and figures. Locke.

CONCLU'SIVELY. adv. [from conclusive.] Decisively; with final determination.

This I speak only to desire Pollio and Eupolis not to speak peremptorily, or conclusively, touching the point of possibility, 'till they have heard me deduce the means of the execution. Bacon's Holy War.

CONCLU'SIVENESS. n. f. [from conclusive.] Power of determining the opinion; regular consequence.

Consideration of things to be known, of their several weights, conclusiveness, or evidence. Hale's Orig. of Mankind.

TO CONCOA'GULATE. v. a. [from con and coagulate.] To curdle or congeal one thing with another.

The saline parts of those, upon their solution by the rain, may work upon those other substances, formerly concoagulated with them. Boyle's Experiments.

They do but coagulate themselves, without concoagulating with them any water. Boyle's History of Firmness.

This hard rolling is between concoction and a simple maturation. Bacon's Natural History, No. 324.

The constantest notion of concoction is, that it should signify the degrees of alteration of one body into another, from crudity to perfect concoction, which is the ultimity of that action or process. Bacon's Natural History, No. 324.

He, though he knew not which soul spake,

Because both meant, both spake the same,

Might thence a new concoction take,

And part far purer than he came. Donne.

CONCO'LOUR. adj. [concolor, Latin.] Of one colour without variety.

In concolour animals, and such as are confined unto the same colour, we measure not their beauty thereby; for if a cow or blackbird grow white, we account it more pretty. Brown.

VOL. I.

CONCO'MITANCE. } n. f. [from concomitor, Latin.] Subsistence

CONCO'MITANCY. } together with another thing.

The secondary action subsisteth not alone, but in concomitancy with the other; so the nostrils are useful for respiration and smelling, but the principal use is smelling. Brown.

To argue from a concomitancy to a causality, is not infallibly conclusive. Glanville's Scep. c. 23.

CONCO'MITANT. adj. [concomitans, Latin.] Conjoined with; concurrent with; coming and going with, as collateral, not causative, or consequential.

It is the spirit that furthereth the extension or dilatation of bodies, and it is ever concomitant with porosity and dryness. Bacon's Natural History, No. 841.

It has pleased our wise Creator to annex to several objects, as also to several of our thoughts, a concomitant pleasure; and that in several objects, to several degrees. Locke.

CONCO'MITANT. n. f. Companion; person or thing collaterally connected.

These effects are from the local motion of the air, a concomitant of the sound, and not from the sound. Bac. Nat. Hist.

He made him the chief concomitant of his heir apparent and only son, in a journey of much adventure. Wotton.

In consumptions the preternatural concomitants, an universal heat of the body, a torminous diarrhæa, and hot distillations, have all a corrosive quality. Harvey on Consumptions.

The other co-comitant of ingratitude is hard-heartedness, or want of compassion. South's Sermons.

Horror stalks around,

Wild staring, and his sad concomitant,

Despair, of aspect look. Philips.

Reproach is a concomitant to greatness, as satires and invectives were an essential part of a Roman triumph. Addison.

And for tobacco, who could bear it?

Filthy concomitant of claret! Prior.

Where antecedents, concomitants and consequents, causes and effects, signs and things signified, subjects and adjuncts, are necessarily connected with each other, we may infer. Watts's Logick.

Uproar the universal peace. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

What concord hath Christ with Belial? 2 Cor. vi. 15.

Kind concord, heavenly born! whose blissful reign

Holds this vast globe in one surrounding chain;

Soul of the world! Tickell.

2. A compact.

It appeareth by the concord made between Henry and Roderick the Irish king. Davies on Ireland.

3. Harmony; consent of sounds.

The man who hath not musick in himself,

Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,

Is fit for treasons. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

4. Principal grammatical relation of one word to another.

Have those who have writ about declensions, *concord*s, and syntaxes lost their labour? Locke.

CONCO'RDANCE. n. f. [concordantia, Latin.]

1. Agreement.

2. A book which shews in how many texts of scripture any word occurs.

I shall take it for an opportunity to tell you, how you are to rule the city out of a concordance. South's Serm. Dedicat.

Some of you turn over a concordance, and there, having the principal word, introduce as much of the verse as will serve your turn. Swift.

An old concordance bound long since. Swift.

3. A concord in grammar; one of the three chief relations in speech. It is not now in use in this sense.

After the three concordances learned, let the master read unto him the epistles of Cicero. Askam's Scholmaster.

CONCO'RDANT. adj. [concordans, Lat.] Agreeable; agreeing; correspondent; harmonious.

Were every one employed in points concordant to their natures, professions, and arts, commonwealths would rise up of themselves. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 4.

CONCO'RDATE. n. f. [concordat, Fr. concordatum, Lat.] A compact; a convention.

How comes he to number the want of synods in the Gallican church among the grievances of that concordate, and as a mark of their slavery, since he reckons all convocations of the clergy in England to be useless and dangerous? Swift.

CONCO'RPORAL. adj. [from concorpo, Latin, to incorporate.] Of the same body. Diët.

TO CONCO'RPORATE. v. a. [from con and corpus.] To unite in one mass or substance.

When we concorporate the sign with the signification, we conjoin the word with the spirit. Taylor's Worthly Communicant.

CONCORPORA'TION. n. f. [from concorporate.] Union in one mass; intimate mixture. Diët.

CO'NCOURSE. n. f. [concurfus, Latin.]

1. The confluence of many persons or things to one place.

Do all the nightly guards,

The city's watches, with the people's fears,

The concourse of all good men, strike thee nothing? B. Johns.

The coalition of the good frame of the universe was not the product of chance, or fortuitous concourse of particles of matter. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Vain is his force, and vainer is his skill,

With such a concourse comes the flood of ill. Dryden's Fables.

2. The persons assembled.

The prince with wonder hears, from ev'ry part,

The noise and busy concourse of the mart. Dryd. Virg. Æn.

3. The point of junction or intersection of two bodies.

So soon as the upper glass is laid upon the lower, so as to touch it at one end, and to touch the drop at the other end, making, with the lower glass, an angle of about ten or fifteen minutes; the drop will begin to move towards the concourse of the glasses, and will continue to move with an accelerated motion, 'till it arrives at that concourse of the glasses. Newton.

CONCREMA'TION. n. f. [from concremo, Lat. to burn together.]

The act of burning many things together. Diët.

CO'NCREMENT. n. f. [from concreresco, Latin.] The mass formed by concretion; a collection of matter growing together.

There is the cohesion of the matter into a more loose consistency, like clay, and thereby it is prepared to the concrement of a pebble or flint. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CONCRE'SCENCE. n. f. [from concreresco, Lat.] The act or quality of growing by the union of separate particles.

Seeing it is neither a substance perfect, nor inchoate, how any other substance should thence take concreescence hath not been taught. Raleigh's History of the World.

TO CONCRE'TE. v. n. [concreresco, Latin.] To coalesce into one mass; to grow by the union and cohesion of parts.

The mineral or metallick matter, thus concreting with the crystalline, is equally diffused throughout the body of it. Woodw.

When any saline liquor is evaporated to a cuticle, and let cool, the salt concretes in regular figures; which argues that the particles of the salt, before they concreted, floated in the liquor at equal distances, in rank and file. Newton.

The blood of some who died of the plague, could not be made to concrete, by reason of the putrefaction already begun. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

TO CONCRE'TE. v. a. To form by concretion; to form by the coalition of scattered particles.

That there are in our inferiour world divers bodies, that are concreted out of others, is beyond all dispute: we see it in the meteors. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CO'NCRETE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Formed by concretion; formed by coalition of separate particles into one mass.

The first concrete state, or consistent surface of the chaos, must be of the same figure as the last liquid state. Burnet.

2. In logic. Not abstract; applied to a subject.

A kind of mutual commutation there is, whereby those concrete names, God and man, when we speak of Christ, do take interchangeably one another's room; so that, for truth of speech, it skilleth not whether we say that the son of God hath created the world, and the son of man by his death hath saved it; or else that the son of man did create, and the son of God died to save the world. Hooker, b. v. sect. 53.

Concrete terms, while they express the quality, do also either express or imply, or refer to some subject to which it belongs; as white, round, long, broad, wise, mortal, living, dead: but these are not always noun adjectives in a grammatical sense; for a fool, a philosopher, and many other concretes, are substantives, as well as knavery, folly and philosophy, which are the abstract terms that belong to them. Watts's Logic.

CO'NCRETE. n. f. A mass formed by concretion; or union of various parts adhering to each other.

If gold itself be admitted, as it must be, for a porous concrete, the proportion of void to body, in the texture of common air, will be so much the greater. Bentley's Sermons.

CONCRE'TELY. adv. [from concrete.] In a manner including the subject with the predicate; not abstractly.

Sin considered not abstractedly for the mere act of obliquity, but concretely, with such a special dependance of it upon the will as serves to render the agent guilty. Norris.

CONCRE'TENESS. n. f. [from concrete.] Coagulation; collection of fluids into a solid mass. Diët.

CONCRE'TION. n. f. [from concrete.]

1. The act of concreting; coalition.

Some plants upon the top of the sea, are supposed to grow of some concretion of slime from the water, where the sea stirreth little. Bacon's Natural History, No. 568.

Heat, in general, doth not resolve and attenuate the juices of a human body; for too great heat will produce concretions. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CO'NCRETIVE. adj. [from concrete.] Having the power to produce concretions; coagulative.

When wood and other bodies petrify, we do not ascribe their induration to cold, but unto salinous spirit, or concretive juices. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 3.

CONCRE'TURE. n. f. [from concrete.] A mass formed by coagulation.

CONCU'BINAGE. n. f. [concubinage, Fr. concubinatus, Latin.] The act of living with a woman not married.

Adultery was punished with death by the ancient heathens: concubinage was permitted. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

CONCUBINE. n. f. [concubina, Lat.] A woman kept in fornication; a whore; a strumpet.

I know, I am too mean to be your queen;

And yet too good to be your concubine. Shakesp. Henry VI.

When his great friend was suitor to him to pardon an offender, he denied him: afterwards, when a concubine of his made the same suit, he granted it to her; and said, Such suits were to be granted to whores. Bacon.

He caused him to paint one of his concubines, called Campaspe, who had the greatest share in his affection. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The wife, though a bright goddess, thus gives place

To mortal concubines of fresh embrace. Granville.

TO CONCU'LCATE. v. a. [conculco, Latin.] To tread or trample under foot. Diët.

CONCULCA'TION. n. f. [conculcatio, Latin.] Trampling with the feet. Diët.

CONCU'PISCENCE. n. f. [concupiscentia, Latin.] Irregular desire; libidinous wish; lust; lechery.

We know even secret concupiscentia to be sin, and are made fearful to offend, though it be but in a wandering cogitation. Hooker, b. i.

In our faces evident the signs

Of foul concupiscentia; whence evil store,

Ev'n shame, the last of evils. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Nor can they say, that the difference of climate inclines one nation to concupiscentia and sensual pleasures, another to blood-thirstiness: it would discover great ignorance not to know, that a people has been over run with recently invented vice. Bentley's Sermons.

CONCU'PISCENT. adj. [concupiscens, Latin.] Libidinous; lecherous.

He would not, but by gift of my chaste body

To his concupiscent intemperate lust,

Release my brother! Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

CONCU'PISCENTIAL. adj. [from concupiscent.] Relating to concupiscentia. Diët.

CONCU'PISCIBLE. adj. [concupiscibilis, Lat.] Impressing desire; eager; desirous; inclining to the pursuit or attainment of any thing.

The schools reduce all the passions to these two heads, the concupiscible and irascible appetite. South's Sermons.

TO CONCU'R. v. n. [concurro, Latin.]

1. To meet in one point.

Though reason favour them, yet sense can hardly allow them; and, to satisfy, both these must concur. Temple.

2. To agree; to join in one action, or opinion.

Acts which shall be done by the greater part of my executors, shall be as valid and effectual as if all my executors had concurred in the same. Swift's Last Will.

3. It has with before the person with whom one agrees.

It is not evil simply to concur with the heathens, either in opinion or action; and that conformity with them is only then a disgrace, when we follow them in that they do amiss, or generally in that they do without reason. Hooker, b. iv.

4. It has to before the effect to which one concurs.

Their affections were known to concur to the most desperate counsels. Clarendon.

Extremes in nature equal good produce,

Extremes in man concur to general use. Pope, Epist. iii.

5. To be united with; to be conjoined.

To have an orthodox belief, and a true profession, concurring with a bad life, is only to deny Christ with a greater solemnity. South's Sermons.

Testimony is the argument; and, if fair probabilities of reason concur with it, this argument hath all the strength it can have. Tillotson, Sermon i.

6. To contribute to one common event with joint power.

When outward causes concur, the idle are soonest seized by this infection. Collier on the Spleen.

CONCU'RRENCE. } n. f. [from concur.]
CONCU'RRENCY. }

1. Union; association; conjunction.

We have no other measure but our own ideas, with the concurrence of other probable reasons, to persuade us. Locke.

2. Agreement;

2. Agreement; act of joining in any design, or measures.
 Their concurrence in persuasion, about some material points belonging to the same polity, is not strange. Hooker, Preface.
 The concurrence of the peers in that fury, can be imputed to the irreverence the judges were in. C'arendon.
 Tarquin the proud was expelled by an universal concurrence of nobles and people. Swift on the Dissent. in Athens and Rome.
3. Combination of many agents or circumstances.
 Struck with these great concurrences of things. Craslow.
 He views our behaviour in every concurrence of affairs, and sees us engage in all the possibilities of action. Addis. Spectat.
4. Assistance; help.
 From these sublime images we collect the greatness of the work, and the necessity of the divine concurrence to it. Rogers.
5. Joint right; common claim.
 A bishop might have officers, if there was a concurrence of jurisdiction between him and the archdeacon. Ayliffe.
- CONCURRENT. adj. [from concur.]
 1. Acting in conjunction; agreeing in the same act; contributing to the same event; concomitant in agency.
 I join with these laws the personal presence of the king's son, as a concurrent cause of this reformation. Davies on Ireland.
 For without the concurrent consent of all these three parts of the legislature, no such law is or can be made. Hale.
 All combin'd,
 Your beauty, and my impotence of mind;
 And his concurrent flame, that blew my fire;
 For still our kindred souls had one desire. Dryden's Fables.
2. Conjoined; associate; concomitant.
 There is no difference between the concurrent echo and the iterant, but the quickness or slowness of the return. Bacon.
- CONCURRENT. n. f. [from concur.] That which concurs; a contributory cause.
 To all affairs of importance there are three necessary concurrents, without which they can never be dispatched; time, industry, and faculties. Decay of Piety.
- CONCUSSION. n. f. [from concussio, Lat.] The act of shaking; agitation; tremefaction.
 It is believed that great ringing of bells in populous cities, hath dissipated pestilent air; which may be from the concussion of the air. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 127.
 There want not instances of such an universal concussion of the whole globe, as must needs imply an agitation of the whole abyss. Woodward's Natural History, p. iii.
 The strong concussion on the heaving tide,
 Roll'd back the vessel to the island's side. Pope's Odyssey.
- CONCUSSIVE. adj. [from concussus, Latin.] Having the power or quality of shaking.
- TO CONDEMN. v. a. [from condemno, Latin.]
1. To find guilty; to doom to punishment; contrary to absolve.
 My conscience hath a thousand several tongues,
 And every tongue brings in a sev'ral tale,
 And ev'ry tale condemns me for a villain. Shakesp. Rich. III.
 Is he found guilty? —
 — Yes truly, is he, and condemn'd upon't. Sh. Hen. VIII.
 Considered as a judge, it condemns where it ought to absolve, and pronounces absolution where it ought to condemn. Fiddes's Sermons.
2. It has to before the punishment.
 The son of man shall be betrayed unto the scribes, and they shall condemn him to death. Mat. xx. 18.
3. To censure; to blame; to declare criminal; contrary to approve.
 Who then shall blame
 His peffer'd senses to recoil and start,
 When all that is within him does condemn Itself for being there? Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 The poet who flourished in the scene, is condemned in the ruelle. Dryden's Æn. Preface.
 He who was so unjust as to do his brother an injury, will scarce be so just as to condemn himself for it. Locke.
 They who approve my conduct in this particular, are much more numerous than those who condemn it. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 488.
4. To fine.
 And the king of Egypt put him down at Jerusalem, and condemned the land in an hundred talents of silver. 2 Chro.

- CONDERS. n. f. [from conduire, French.]
 Such as stand upon high places near the sea-coast, at the time of herring-fishing, to make signs to the fishers which way the shole of herrings passeth, which may better appear to such as stand upon some high cliff, by a kind of blue colour that the fish causeth in the water, than to those that be in the ships. These be likewise called huers, by likelihood of the French huyer, exclamare, and bakers. Cowel.
- TO CONDESCEND. v. n. [from condescendre, Fr. from descendo, Latin.]
1. To depart from the privileges of superiority by a voluntary submission; to sink willingly to equal terms with inferiours; to sooth by familiarity.
 This method carries a very humble and condescending air, when he that instructs seems to be the enquirer. Watts.
2. To consent to do more than mere justice can require.
 Spain's mighty monarch,
 In gracious clemency does condescend,
 On these conditions, to become your friend. Dryd. Ind. Em.
 He did not primarily intend to appoint this way; but condescended to it as most accommodate to their present state. Tillotson, Sermon 5.
3. To stoop; to bend; to yield; to submit; to become subject.
 Can they think me so broken, so debas'd
 With corporal servitude, that my mind ever
 Will condescend to such absurd commands? Milton.
 Nor shall my resolution
 Difarm itself, nor condescend to parly
 With foolish hopes. Denham's Sophy.
- CONDESCENDENCE. n. f. [from condescendance, French.] Voluntary submission to a state of equality with inferiours.
- CONDESCENDINGLY. adv. [from condescending.] By way of voluntary humiliation; by way of kind concession.

Secure me but my solitary cell;

'Tis all I ask him.

Dryden's Don Sebastian.

8. The writing in which the terms of agreement are comprised; compact; bond.

Go with me to a notary, seal me there

Your single bond; and in a merry sport,

If you repay me not on such a day,

In such a place, such sum or sums as are

Express'd in the condition, let the forfeit

Be nominated.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

TO CONDITION. v. n. [from the noun] To make terms; to stipulate.

It was conditioned between Saturn and Titan, that Saturn should put to death all his male children. Raleigh's History.

Small towns, which stand stiff, 'till great shot

Enforce them, by war's law, condition not.

Donne.

'Tis one thing, I must confess, to condition for a good office, and another thing to do it gratis. L'Estrange, Fab. 137.

CONDITIONAL. adj. [from condition.]

1. By way of stipulation; not absolute; with limitations; on particular terms.

For the use we have his express commandment, for the effect his conditional promise; so that, without obedience to the one, there is of the other no assurance. Hooker, b. v. f. 57.

Many scriptures, though as to their formal terms they are absolute, yet as to their sense they are conditional. South.

This strict necessity they simple call;
